

8
THE
87

8791
28c
86555
14

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE,

CONTAINING

SKETCHES OF THE DEBATES AND PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

BLAIR AND RIVES, EDITORS.

SECOND SESSION---VOLUME IV.

CITY OF WASHINGTON:

PRINTED AT THE GLOBE OFFICE FOR THE EDITORS.

1837.

JH
G.5
2d set.

AUG 6 1909
D. OF A.

N. B. The CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE and the APPENDIX will be published from the first Monday in September next, to the end of the first Session of the 25th Congress, which, it is supposed, will be at least nine months, for $2 per copy, each. Any person who will forward the money for 5 copies of either, will be entitled to a copy. To ensure all the numbers, the money should be sent in time to reach here by the first Monday in September next.

The notes of any Bank, which did not stop specie payments before the 1st May, 1837, will be received.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

BY BLAIR & RIVES.

— WEEKLY —

PRICE $1 PER SESSION.

24TH CONG.....2D SESS.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1836.

VOLUME 4.....No. 1.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 5, 1836.

The Vice President took the Chair at 12 o'clock,

M. The following Senators were in attendance:

Ruggles,	Rives,
Hubbard,	King, of Georgia,
Page,	King, of Alabama,
Swift,	Moore,
Prentiss,	Walker,
Niles,	Benton,
Tomlinson,	Linn,
Davis,	Ewing, of Illinois,
Robbins,	Robertson,
Knight,	Hendricks,
Wright,	Tipton,
McKean,	Ewing, of Ohio,
Buchanan,	Morris,
Wall,	Clay,
Southard,	Crittenden,
Bayard,	Grundy,
Kent,	White.

Mr. BENTON presented the credentials of the honorable A. H. SEVIER and W. S. FULTON, Senators elect from the State of Arkansas. The Vice President administered the oath prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, and they took their seats.

On motion of Mr. BENTON,

Resolved, That the Senate proceed to ascertain the classes in which the Senators of the State of Arkansas shall be inserted, in conformity to the resolution of the 14th May, 1789, and as the Constitution requires.

On motion of Mr. BENTON,

Resolved, That the Secretary put into the ballot box three papers of equal size, numbered 1, 2, 3. Each of the Senators from the State of Arkansas draw out one paper. Number 1, if drawn, shall entitle the member to be placed in the class of Senators whose terms of service will expire the third day of March, 1837; number 2 in the class whose terms will expire the third day of March, 1839; and number 3 in the class whose terms will expire on the third day of March, 1841.

In pursuance of the above order, Mr. SEVIER drew from the ballot box number 1, and Mr. FULTON number 3. Therefore, Mr. SEVIER's term expires on the fourth of March, 1837, and Mr. FULTON's on the fourth of March, 1841.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY,

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY,

Ordered, That a committee be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses of Congress is assembled, and ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

Messrs. GRUNDY and SWIFT were appointed the committee on the part of the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate laid before that body a statement of its contingent expenses for the year 1836, which, on motion of Mr. KING of Alabama, was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. LINN,

Ordered, That the Secretary furnish the Senators with such newspapers as they may select, equal to the price of three daily papers.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letter of Walter Lowrie, Esq. Secretary:

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5, 1836.

SIR: I herewith resign the office of Secretary of the Senate of the United States.

Having so long possessed the confidence of the Senate, and enjoyed such continued friendly intercourse with its members, it is with feelings of deep and painful sensibility I now separate from them; and these feelings are greatly increased when I reflect on the courtesy and kindness I have received from yourself, as the presiding officer of the Senate, and on the uniform and unbroken confidence and friendship which have for so many years subsisted between us.

No length of time or change of circumstances will ever efface from my mind the recollections growing out of all these associations; and I shall always rejoice to hear of your prosperity and happiness, and of that of every member of the Senate.

(Signed) WALTER LOWRIE.

To HON. MARTIN VAN BUREN,
Vice President of the United States, and President of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. BENTON,
Ordered, That LEWIS H. MACHIN, Esq. be appointed Secretary until the Senate shall think proper to go into an election for a Secretary.

On motion of Mr. WALL,
Ordered, That the Senate proceed to elect a Committee of Accounts.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, moved that the Vice President appoint the committee; which was agreed to nem. con. Whereupon Messrs. MCKEAN, TOMLINSON, and HENDRICKS were appointed.

W. S. FRANKLIN, Esq. Clerk of the House of Representatives, informed the Senate that a quorum of that body had assembled, and were ready to proceed to business; and that it had appointed a committee to join the one appointed by the Senate to wait on the President, and inform him that Congress was ready to receive any communication he may wish to make.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD,
The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock, M.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 5, 1836.

This being the day set apart by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the SPEAKER called the House to order at 12 o'clock M.

The roll was then called over by States, when the following members answered to their names:

MAINE.

Jeremiah Bailey,	Leonard Jarvis,
George Evans,	Gorham Parks,
John Fairfield,	Francis O. J. Smith.
Joseph Hall,

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Benning M. Bean,	Franklin Pierce,
Robert Burns,	Joseph Weeks.
Samuel Cushman,

MASSACHUSETTS.

John Quincy Adams,	Abbott Lawrence,
George N. Briggs,	Levi Lincoln,
William B. Calhoun,	Stephen C. Phillips,
Caleb Cushing,	John Reed.
Samuel Hoar,

CONNECTICUT.

Elisha Haley,	Isaac Toucey,
Lancelot Phelps,	Thomas T. Whittlesey.

RHODE ISLAND.

Dutée J. Pearce.

VERMONT.

Heman Allen,	Henry F. Janes,
Horace Everett,	William Slade.
Hiland Hall,

NEW YORK.

Samuel Barton,	George W. Lay,
Abraham Bockee,	Gideon Lee,
Matthias J. Bovee,	Joshua Lee,
John W. Brown,	Stephen B. Leonard,
Churchill C. Cambreleng,	Thomas C. Love,
Graham H. Chapin,	Abijah Mann, jr.
Timothy Childs,	William Mason,
John Cramer,	John McKeon,

Ulysses F. Doubleday,	Ely Moore,
Valentine Efner,	Sherman Page,
Dudley Farlin,	Joseph Reynolds,
William K. Fuller,	David Russell,
Ransom H. Gillet,	William Seymour,
Francis Granger,	Nicholas Sickles,
Gideon Hard,	William Taylor,
Abner Hazeltine,	Joel Turrill,
Hiram P. Hunt,	Aaron Vanderpoel,
Abel Huntingdon,	Aaron Ward,
Gerritt Y. Lausing,	Daniel Wardwell.

NEW JERSEY.

Thomas Lee,	William N. Shinn.
-------------	-------------------

PENNSYLVANIA.

Joseph B. Anthony,	Joseph Henderson,
Michael W. Ash,	John Klingensmith,
Andrew Buchanan,	Henry Logan,
George Chambers,	Job Mann,
William Clark,	Thomas M. T. McKennan,
John Galbraith,	Henry A. Muhlenberg,
James Harper,	David Potts,
Samuel S. Harrison,	David D. Wagener.

DELAWARE.

John J. Milligan.

MARYLAND.

Benjamin C. Howard,	Francis Thomas,
Isaac McKim,	James Turner,
John N. Steele,	George C. Washington.

VIRGINIA.

James M. H. Beale,	Edward Lucas,
James W. Bouldin,	William McComas,
Nathaniel H. Claiborne,	Charles F. Mercer,
Walter Coles,	William S. Morgan,
Robert Craig,	John M. Patton,
James Garland,	John Taliaferro,
Joseph Johnson,	Henry A. Wise.
George Loyall,

NORTH CAROLINA.

Jesse A. Bynum,	Ebenezer Pettigrew,
Henry W. Connor,	William B. Shepard,
Edmund Deberry,	Augustine H. Shepperd,
Michael T. Hawkins,	Lewis Williams.
James J. McKay,

SOUTH CAROLINA.

William I. Grayson,	Henry L. Pinckney.
---------------------	--------------------

GEORGIA.

Seaton Grantland,	Jabez Jackson,
Charles E. Haynes,	George W. Owens.

KENTUCKY.

Chilton Allan,	James Harlan,
Lynn Boyd,	Albert G. Hawes,
John Calhoun,	Richard M. Johnson,
John Chambers,	Joseph R. Underwood,
Richard French,	John White,
William J. Graves,	Sherrod Williams.
Benjamin Hardin,

TENNESSEE.

John Bell,	Luke Lea,
Samuel Bunch,	Abram P. Maury,
William B. Carter,	Baile Peyton,
William C. Dunlap,	James K. Polk, Speaker ,
John B. Forester,	Ebenezer J. Shields,
Adam Huntsman,	James Standefer.
Cave Johnson,

OHIO.

William K. Bond,	William Patterson,
John Chaney,	Jonathan Sloane,
Thomas Corwin,	David Spangler,
Joseph H. Crane,	John Thomson,
Thomas L. Hamer,	Samuel F. Vinton,
Benjamin Jones,	Taylor Webster,
Sampson Mason,	Elisha Whittlesey.
Jeremiah McLene,

LOUISIANA.

Henry Johnson,	Eliaser W. Ripley.
----------------	--------------------

INDIANA.

Ratcliff Boon,	Amos Lane,
John Carr,	Jonathan M'Carty.
John W. Davis,

MISSISSIPPI.

John F. H. Claiborne.

ILLINOIS.

Zadok Casey, John Reynolds.

ALABAMA.

Reuben Chapman, Joab Lawler.

TERRITORIES.

Joseph M. White, Delegate from Florida.

George W. Jones, Delegate from Wisconsin.

The following gentlemen severally appeared, were qualified, and took their seats:

From Connecticut—ORRIN HOLT;

From New York—RUTGER B. MILLER, JOHN YOUNG;

From Pennsylvania—JAMES BLACK, JOHN J. PIERSON;

From New Jersey—WILLIAM CHETWOOD;

From North Carolina—JAMES GRAHAM;

From Arkansas—ARCHIBALD YELL.

A quorum being found in attendance, the House proceeded to business.

On motion of Mr. PEARCE, of Rhode Island, a committee of two was appointed, in conjunction with such committee as might be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States, and inform him that the two Houses of Congress had convened, and were ready to receive any message which he might be pleased to make.

A message was received from the Senate, informing the House that a quorum had appeared, and that they were now ready to proceed to business.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, of Ohio, moved that the Standing Committees of the House be now appointed.

Mr. BOON observed that it had been usual not to appoint the committees until Thursday, and hoped the gentleman's motion would be so modified.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, of Ohio, hoped the gentleman from Indiana would not oppose the motion. He was aware that it had been usual not to appoint the committees until near the close of the week, but he saw no reason why they should be so postponed. He believed it might be proper to delay the appointment some days at the commencement of a new Congress, so that the Speaker might become acquainted with the new members; but at present it was not necessary to do so, inasmuch as the Speaker was as well prepared to make the appointment now as he would be some days hence.

Mr. BOON said it was not his intention to throw any obstacles in the way of the gentleman's motion, but it was ascertained that there were not more than 176 members in attendance, and he hoped the appointment would not be made until the House was more full than at present. He moved to postpone the appointment of committees until Thursday next.

Mr. MERCER then moved that the committees be appointed on to-morrow, and that those members who were absent would be considered as in attendance, and be appointed on the committees.

Mr. WHITTLESEY called for the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone until Thursday which were ordered, and were—yeas 33, nays 148. Lost.

Mr. MERCER then withdrew so much of his motion as proposed to postpone the further consideration of the order until to-morrow, and renewed that part of it proposing that members of the House should not be disqualified from being appointed on standing committees on account of absence.

Mr. WARDWELL renewed the motion to postpone till to-morrow, which was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MANN, of New York, it was ordered that the daily hour of meeting, until otherwise directed, should be 12 o'clock.

On motion of Mr. WARDWELL, the usual order in reference to the supply of newspapers for the members during the present session, was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MANN of New York,
The House then adjourned.

IN SENATE,

TUESDAY, December 6, 1836.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the committee appointed yesterday, in conjunction with a similar committee from the House of Representatives, to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of each House was in attendance, and that they were prepared to receive any communication he might be pleased to make, reported that they had performed that duty, and that the President had informed them that he would send a communication in writing to each House at 12 o'clock this day.

The following message was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of ANDREW JACKSON, Jr. Esq. his private Secretary.

Fellow Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Addressing to you the last annual message I shall ever present to the Congress of the United States, it is a source of the most heartfelt satisfaction to be able to congratulate you on the high state of prosperity which our beloved country has attained; with no causes at home or abroad to lessen the confidence with which we look to the future for continuing proofs of the capacity of our free institutions to produce all the fruits of good Government, the general condition of our affairs may well excite our national pride.

I cannot avoid congratulating you and my country, particularly, on the success of the efforts made during my administration by the Executive and Legislature, in conformity with the sincere, constant and earnest desire of the people, to maintain peace, and establish cordial relations with all foreign powers. Our gratitude is due to the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, and I invite you to unite with me in offering to Him fervent supplication, that his providential care may ever be extended to those who follow us, enabling them to avoid the dangers and the horrors of war, consistently with a just and indispensable regard to the rights and honor of our country. But, although the present state of our foreign affairs, standing, without important change, as they did when you separated in July last, is flattering in the extreme, I regret to say, that many questions of an interesting character at issue with other powers, are yet unadjusted. Amongst the most prominent of these is that of our Northeastern Boundary. With an undiminished confidence in the sincere desire of his Britannic Majesty's Government to adjust that question, I am not yet in possession of the precise grounds upon which it proposes a satisfactory adjustment.

With France our diplomatic relations have been resumed, and under circumstances which attest the disposition of both Governments to preserve a mutually beneficial intercourse, and foster those amicable feelings which are so strongly required by the true interests of the two countries. With Russia, Austria, Prussia, Naples, Sweden, and Denmark, the best understanding exists, and our commercial intercourse is gradually expanding itself with them. It is encouraged in all these countries, except Naples, by their mutually advantageous and liberal treaty stipulations with us.

The claims of our citizens on Portugal are admitted to be just, but provision for the payment of them has been unfortunately delayed by frequent political changes in that kingdom.

The blessings of peace have not been secured by Spain. Our connections with that country are on the best footing, with the exception of the burdens still imposed upon our commerce with her possessions out of Europe.

The claims of American citizens for losses sustained at the bombardment of Antwerp have been presented to the Governments of Holland and Belgium, and will be pressed, in due season, to settlement.

With Brazil, and all our neighbors of this continent, we continue to maintain relations of amity and concord, extending our commerce with them as far as the resources of the people and the policy of their Governments will permit. The just and long standing claims of our citizens upon some of them, are yet sources of dissatisfaction and complaint. No danger is apprehended, however, that they will not be peaceably, although tardily, acknowledged and paid by all, unless the irritating effect of her struggle with Texas should unfortunately make our immediate neighbor, Mexico, an exception.

It is already known to you, by the correspondence between the two Governments, communicated at your last session, that our conduct in relation to that struggle is regulated by the same principles that governed us in the dispute between Spain and Mexico herself, and, I trust, that it will be found, on the most severe scrutiny, that our acts have strictly corresponded with our professions. That the inhabitants of the United States should feel strong prepossessions for the one party is not surprising. But this circumstance should, of itself, teach us great caution, lest it lead us into the great error of suffering public policy to be regulated by partiality or prejudice; and there are considerations connected with the possible result of this contest between the two parties, of so much delicacy and importance to the United States, that our character requires that we should neither anticipate events, nor attempt to control them. The known desire of the Texans to become a part of our system, although its gratification depends upon the reconciliation of various and conflicting interests, necessarily a work of time, and uncertain in itself, is calculated to expose our conduct to misconstruction in the eyes of the world. There are already those who, indifferent to principle themselves, and prone to suspect the want of it in others, charge us with ambitious designs and insidious policy. You will perceive, by the accompanying documents, that the extraordinary mission from Mexico has been terminated, on the sole grounds that the obligations of this Government to itself and to Mexico, under treaty stipulations, have compelled me to trust a discretionary authority to a high officer of our army, to advance into territory claimed as part of Texas, if necessary to protect our own or the neighboring frontier from Indian depredation. In the opinion of the Mexican functionary who has just left us, the honor of his country will be wounded by American soldiers entering, with the most amicable avowed purposes, upon ground from which the followers of his Government have been expelled, and over which there is at present no certainty of a serious effort on its part being made to re-establish its dominion. The departure of this Minister was the more singular, as he was apprised that the sufficiency of the causes assigned for the advance of our troops by the commanding General had been seriously doubted by me; and that there was every reason to suppose that the troops of the United States—their commander having had time to ascertain the truth or falsehood of the information upon which they had been marched to Nacogdoches—would be either there in perfect accordance with the principles admitted to be just in his conference with the Secretary of State, by the Mexican Minister himself, or were already withdrawn in consequence of the impressive warnings their commanding officer had received from the Department of War. It is hoped and believed that his Government will take a more dispassionate and just view of this subject, and not be disposed to construe a measure of justifiable precaution, made necessary by its known inability, in execution of the stipulations of our treaty, to act upon the frontier, into an encroachment upon its rights, or a stain upon its honor.

In the mean time, the ancient complaints of injustice, made on behalf of our citizens, are disregarded, and new causes of dissatisfaction have arisen, some of them of a character requiring prompt remonstrance, and ample and immediate redress. I trust, however, by tempering firmness with courtesy, and acting with great forbearance upon every incident that has occurred, or that may happen, to do and to obtain justice, and thus avoid the necessity of again bringing this subject to the view of Congress.

It is my duty to remind you, that no provision has been made to execute our treaty with Mexico for tracing the boundary line between the two countries. Whatever may be the prospect of Mexico being soon able to execute the treaty on its part, it is proper that we should be, in anticipation, prepared at all times to perform our obligations, without regard to the probable condition of those with whom we have contracted them.

The result of the confidential inquiries made into the condition and prospects of the newly declared Texan Government, will be communicated to you in the course of the session.

Commercial treaties, promising great advantages to our enterprising merchants and navigators, have been formed with the distant Governments of Muscat and Siam. The ratifications have been exchanged, but have not reached the Department of State; copies of the treaties will be transmitted to you, if received before, or published, if arriving after, the close of the present session of Congress.

Nothing has occurred to interrupt the good understanding that has long existed with the Barbary Powers, nor to check the good will which is gradually growing up in our intercourse with the dominions of the Government of the distinguished Chief of the Ottoman Empire.

Information has been received at the Department of State that a treaty with the Emperor of Morocco has just been negotiated, which, I hope, will be received in time to be laid before the Senate previous to the close of the session.

You will perceive, from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, that the financial means of the country continue to keep pace with its improvement in all other respects. The receipts into the Treasury during the present year, will amount to about $47,691,898; those from customs being estimated at $22,523,151; those from lands at about $24,000,000, and the residue from miscellaneous sources. The expenditures for all objects during the year, are estimated not to exceed $32,000,000, which will leave a balance in the Treasury for public purposes, on the first day of January next, of about $41,723,959. This sum, with the exception of five millions, will be transferred to the several States, in accordance with the provisions of the act regulating the deposits of the public money.

The unexpended balances of appropriation, on the 1st day of January next, are estimated at $14,636,062, exceeding by $9,636,062, the amount which will be left in the deposit banks, subject to the draft of the Treasurer of the United States, after the contemplated transfers to the several States are made. If, therefore, the future receipts should not be sufficient to meet these outstanding and future appropriations, there may be soon a necessity to use a portion of the funds deposited with the States.

The consequences apprehended, when the deposit act of the last session received a reluctant approval, have been measurably realized. Though an act merely for the deposit of the surplus moneys of the United States in the State Treasuries, for safe keeping, until they may be wanted for the service of the General Government, it has been extensively spoken of as an act to give the money to the several States, and they have been advised to use it as a gift, without regard to the means of refunding it when called for. Such a suggestion has doubtless been made without a due consideration of the obligation of the deposit act, and without a proper attention to the various principles and interests which are affected by it. It is manifest that the law itself cannot sanction such a suggestion, and that, as it now stands, the States have no more authority to receive and use these deposits without intending to return them, than any deposit bank, or any individual temporarily charged with the safe-keeping or application of the public money, would now have for converting the same to their private use, without the consent and against the will of the Government. But, independently of the violation of public faith and moral obligation which are involved in this suggestion, when examined in reference to the terms of the present deposit act, it is believed that the considerations which should govern the future legislation of Congress on this subject, will be equally conclusive against the adoption of any measure recognising the principles on which the suggestion has been made.

Considering the intimate connection of the subject with the financial interests of the country, and its great importance in whatever aspect it can be viewed, I have bestowed upon it the most anxious reflection, and feel it to be my duty to state to Congress such thoughts as have occurred to me, to aid their deliberation in treating it in the manner best calculated to conduce to the common good.

The experience of other nations admonished us to hasten the extinguishment of the public debt. But it will be in vain that we have congratulated each other upon the disappearance of this evil, if we do not guard against the equally great one of promoting the unnecessary accumulation of public revenue. No political maxim is better established than that which tells us that an improvident expenditure of money is the parent of profligacy, and that no people can hope to perpetuate their liberties who long acquiesce in a policy which taxes them for objects not necessary to the legitimate and real wants of their Government. Flattering as is the condition of our country at the present period, because of its unexampled advance in all the steps of social and political improvement, it cannot be disguised that there is a lurking danger already apparent in the neglect of this warning truth, and that the time has arrived when the representatives of the people should be employed in devising some more appropriate remedy than now exists, to avert it.

Under our present revenue system, there is every probability that there will continue to be a surplus beyond the wants of the Government; and it has become our duty to decide whether such a result be consistent with the true objects of our Government.

Should a surplus be permitted to accumulate, beyond the appropriations, it must be retained in the Treasury as it now is, or distributed among the people or the States.

To retain it in the Treasury, unemployed in any way, is impracticable. It is, besides, against the genius of our free institutions to lock up in vaults the treasure of the nation. To take from the people the right of bearing arms, and put their weapons of defence in the hands of a standing army, would be scarcely more dangerous to their liberties than to permit the Government to accumulate immense amounts of treasure beyond the supplies necessary to its legitimate wants. Such a treasure would doubtless be employed, at some time, as it has been in other countries, when opportunity tempted ambition.

To collect it merely for distribution to the States, would seem to be highly impolitic, if not as dangerous as the proposition to retain it in the Treasury. The shortest reflection must satisfy every one that to require the people to pay taxes to the Government merely that they may be paid back again, is sporting with the substantial interests of the country, and no system which produces such a result can be expected to receive the public countenance. Nothing could be gained by it, even if each individual who contributed a portion of the tax could receive back promptly the same portion. But it is apparent that no system of the kind can ever be enforced, which will not absorb a considerable portion of the money, to be distributed in salaries and commissions to the agents employed in the process, and in the various losses and depreciations which arise from other causes; and the practical effect of such an attempt must ever be to burden the people with taxes, not for purposes beneficial to them, but to swell the profits of deposit banks, and support a band of useless public officers.

A distribution to the people is impracticable and unjust in other respects. It would be taking one man's property and giving it to another. Such would be the unavoidable result of a rule of equality (and none other is spoken of, or would be likely to be adopted) inasmuch as there is no mode by which the amount of the individual contributions of our citizens to the public revenue can be ascertained. We know that they contribute unequally, and a rule therefore that would distribute to them equally, would be liable to all the objections which apply to the principle of an equal division of property. To make the General Government the instrument of carrying this odious principle into effect, would be at once to destroy the means of its usefulness, and change the character designed for it by the framers of the constitution.

But the more extended and injurious consequences likely to result from a policy which would collect a surplus revenue for the purpose of distributing it, may be forcibly illustrated by an examination of the effects already produced by the present deposit act. This act, although certainly designed to secure the safe-keeping of the public revenue, is not entirely free in its tendencies from many of the objections which apply to this principle of distribution. The Government had, without necessity, received from the people a large surplus, which, instead of being employed as heretofore, and returned to them by means of the public expenditure, was deposited with sundry banks. The banks proceeded to make loans upon this surplus, and thus converted it into banking capital; and in this manner it has tended to multiply bank charters, and has had a great agency in producing a spirit of wild speculation. The possession and use of the property out of which this surplus was created, belong to the people; but the Government has transferred its possession to incorporated banks, whose interest and effort it is to make large profits out of its use. This process need only be stated to show its injustice and bad policy.

And the same observations apply to the influence which is produced by the steps necessary to collect, as well as to distribute such a revenue. About three-fifths of all the duties on imports are paid in the city of New York, but it is obvious that the means to pay those duties are drawn from every quarter of the Union. Every citizen in every State, who purchases and consumes an article which has paid a duty at that port, contributes to the accumulating mass. The surplus collected there must, therefore, be made up of moneys or property withdrawn from other points and other States. Thus the wealth and business of every region from which those surplus funds proceed, must be to some extent injured, while that of the place where the funds are concentrated, and are employed in banking, are proportionably extended. But both in making the transfer of the funds which are first necessary to pay the duties and collect the surplus—and in making the re-transfer, which becomes necessary when the time arrives for the distribution of that surplus—there is a considerable period when the funds cannot be brought into use; and it is manifest that, besides the loss inevitable from such an operation, its tendency is to produce fluctuations in the business of the country, which are always productive of speculation, and detrimental to the interests of regular trade. Argument can scarcely be necessary to show that a measure of this character ought not to receive further legislative encouragement.

By examining the practical operation of the ratio for distribution, adopted in the deposit bill of the last session, we shall discover other features, that appear equally objectionable. Let it be assumed, for the sake of argument, that the surplus moneys to be deposited with the States have been collected, and belong to them, in the ratio of their federal representative population—an assumption founded upon the fact that any deficiencies in our future revenue from imposts and public lands, must be made up by direct taxes, collected from the States in that ratio. It is proposed to distribute the surplus, say $30,000,000, not according to the ratio in which it has been collected and belongs to the people of the States, but in that of their votes in the colleges of electors of President and Vice President. The effect of a distribution upon that ratio is shown by the annexed table, marked A.

By an examination of that table, it will be perceived that in the distribution of a surplus of $30,000,000, upon that basis, there is a great departure from the principle which regards representation as the true measure of taxation; and it will be found that the tendency of that departure will be to increase whatever inequalities have been supposed to attend the operation of our feder-ral system in respect to its bearings upon the different interests of the Union. In making the basis of representation the basis of taxation, the framers of the constitution intended to equalize the burdens which are necessary to support the Government; and the adoption of that ratio, while it accomplished this object, was also the means of adjusting other great topics arising out of the conflicting views respecting the political equality of the various members of the confederacy. Whatever therefore disturbs the liberal spirit of the compromises which established a rule of taxation so just and equitable, and which experience has proved to be so well adapted to the genius and habits of our people, should be received with the greatest caution and distrust.

A bare inspection, in the annexed table, of the differences produced by the ratio used in the deposit act, compared with the results of a distribution according to the ratio of direct taxation, must satisfy every unprejudiced mind, that the former ratio contravenes the spirit of the constitution, and produces a degree of injustice in the operation of the Federal Government which would be fatal to the hope of perpetuating it. By the ratio of direct taxation, for example, the State of Delaware, in the collection of $30,000,000 of revenue, would pay into the Treasury $188,716: and in a distribution of $30,000,000 she would receive back from the Government, according to the ratio of the deposit bill, the sum of $306,122: and similar results would follow the comparison between the small and the large States throughout the Union; thus realizing to the small States an advantage which would be doubtless as unacceptable to them as a motive for incorporating the principle in any system which would produce it, as it would be inconsistent with the rights and expectations of the large States. It was certainly the intention of that provision of the constitution which declares that "all duties, imposts and excises" shall "be uniform throughout the United States," to make the burdens of taxation fall equally upon the people in whatever State of the Union they may reside. But what would be the value of such a uniform rule if the moneys raised by it could be immediately returned by a different one which will give to the people of some States much more, and to those of others much less, than their fair proportions? Were the Federal Government to exempt, in express terms, the imports, products, and manufactures of some portions of the country from all duties, while it imposed heavy ones on others, the injustice could not be greater. It would be easy to show how, by the operation of such a principle, the large States of the Union would not only have to contribute their just share towards the support of the Federal Government, but also have to bear in some degree the taxes necessary to support the Governments of their smaller sisters; but it is deemed unnecessary to state the details where the general principle is so obvious.

A system liable to such objections can never be supposed to have been sanctioned by the framers of the constitution, when they conferred on Congress the taxing power: and I feel persuaded that a mature examination of the subject will satisfy every one that there are insurmountable difficulties in the operation of any plan which can be devised of collecting revenue for the purpose of distributing it. Congress is only authorized to levy taxes "to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States." There is no such provision as would authorize Congress to collect together the property of the country, under the name of revenue, for the purpose of dividing it equally or unequally among the States or the people. Indeed, it is not probable that such an idea ever occurred to the States when they adopted the constitution. But, however this may be, the only safe rule for us in interpreting the powers granted to the Federal Government, is to regard the absence of express authority to touch a subject so important and delicate as this is, as equivalent to a prohibition.

Even if our powers were less doubtful in this respect, as the constitution now stands, there are considerations afforded by recent experience, which would seem to make it our duty to avoid a resort to such a system.

All will admit that the simplicity and economy of the State Governments, mainly depend on the fact that money has to be supplied to support them by the same men, or their agents, who vote it away in appropriations. Hence, when there are extravagant and wasteful appropriations, there must be a corresponding increase of taxes: and the people, becoming awakened, will necessarily scrutinise the character of measures which thus increase their burdens. By the watchful eye of self-interest, the agents of the people in the State Governments are repressed, and kept within the limits of a just economy. But if the necessity of levying the taxes be taken from those who make the appropriations, and thrown upon a more distant and less responsible set of public agents, who have power to approach the people by an indirect and stealthy taxation, there is reason to fear that prodigality will soon supersede those characteristics which have thus far made us look with so much pride and confidence to the State Governments, as the main stay of our Union and liberties. The State Legislatures, instead of studying to restrict their State expenditures to the smallest possible sum, will claim credit for their profusion, and harass the General Government for increased supplies. Practically, there would soon be but one taxing power, and that vested in a body of men far removed from the people, in which the farming and mechanic interests would scarcely be represented. The States would gradually lose their purity as well as their independence; they would not dare to murmur at the proceedings of the General Government, lest they should lose their supplies; all would be merged in a practical consolidation, cemented by wide-spread corruption, which could only be eradicated by one of those bloody revolutions which occasionally overthrow the despotic systems of the old world.

In all the other aspects in which I have been able to look at the effect of such a principle of distribution upon the best interests of the country, I can see nothing to compensate for the disadvantages to which I have adverted. If we consider the protective duties, which are, in a great degree, the source of the surplus revenue, beneficial to one section of the Union, and prejudicial to another, there is no corrective for the evil in such a plan of distribution. On the contrary, there is reason to fear that all the complaints which have sprung from this cause would be aggravated. Every one must be sensible that a distribution of the surplus must beget a disposition to cherish the means which create it; and any system, therefore, into which it enters, must have a powerful tendency to increase, rather than diminish the tariff. If it were even admitted that the advantages of such a system could be made equal to all the sections of the Union, the reasons already so urgently calling for a reduction of the revenue, would, nevertheless, lose none of their force; for it will always be improbable that an intelligent and virtuous community can consent to raise a surplus for the mere purpose of dividing it, diminished as it must inevitably be by the expenses of the various machinery necessary to the process.

The safest and simplest mode of obviating all the difficulties which have been mentioned, is to collect only revenue enough to meet the wants of the Government, and let the people keep the balance of the property in their own hands, to be used for their own profit. Each State will then support its own Government, and contribute its due share towards the support of the General Government. There would be no surplus to cramp and lessen the resources of individual wealth and enterprise, and the banks would be left to their ordinary means. Whatever agitations and fluctuations might arise from our unfortunate paper system, they could never be attributed, justly or unjustly, to the action of the Federal Government. There would be some guaranty that the spirit of wild speculation, which seeks to convert the surplus revenue into banking capital, would be effectually checked, and that the scenes of demoralization, which are now so prevalent through the land, would disappear.

Without desiring to conceal that the experience and observation of the last two years, have operated a partial change in my views upon this interesting subject, it is nevertheless regretted that the suggestions made by me in my annual messages of 1829 and 1830, have been greatly misunderstood. At that time, the great struggle was begun against that latitudinarian construction of the constitution, which authorizes the unlimited appropriation of the revenues of the Union to internal improvements within the States, tending to invest in the hands, and place under the control, of the General Government, all the principal roads and canals of the country, in violation of State rights, and in derogation of State authority. At the same time, the condition of the manufacturing interest was such as to create an apprehension that the duties on imports could not, without extensive mischief, be reduced in season to prevent the accumulation of a considerable surplus after the payment of the national debt. In view of the dangers of such a surplus, and in preference to its application to internal improvements, in derogation of the rights and powers of the States, the suggestion of an amendment of the constitution to authorize its distribution was made. It was an alternative for what were deemed greater evils—a temporary resort to relieve an overburdened Treasury until the Government could, without a sudden and destructive revulsion in the business of the country, gradually return to the just principle of raising no more revenue from the people, in taxes, than is necessary for its economical support. Even that alternative was not spoken of but in connection with an amendment of the constitution. No temporary inconvenience can justify the exercise of a prohibited power, or a power not granted by that instrument; and it was from a conviction that the power to distribute even a temporary surplus of revenue is of that character, that it was suggested only in connection with an appeal to the source of all legal power in the General Government, the States which have established it. No such appeal has been taken, and in my opinion a distribution of the surplus revenue by Congress, either to the States or the people, is to be considered as among the prohibitions of the constitution. As already intimated, my views have undergone a change, so far as to be convinced that no alteration of the constitution in this respect is wise or expedient. The influence of an accumulating surplus upon the legislation of the General Government and the States, its effects upon the credit system of the country, producing dangerous extensions and ruinous contractions, fluctuations in the price of property, rash speculation, idleness, extravagance, and a deterioration of morals, have taught us the important lesson, that any transient mischief which may attend the reduction of our revenue to the wants of our Government, is to be borne in preference to an overflowing Treasury.

I beg leave to call your attention to another subject intimately associated with the preceding one—the currency of the country.

It is apparent, from the whole context of the constitution, as well as the history of the times which gave birth to it, that it was the purpose of the convention to establish a currency consisting of the precious metals. These, from their peculiar properties, which rendered them the standard of value in all other countries, were adopted in this, as well to establish its commercial standard in reference to foreign countries by a permanent rule, as to exclude the use of a mutable medium of exchange, such as of certain agricultural commodities, recognised by the statutes of some States as a tender for debts, or the still more pernicious expedient of a paper currency. The last, from the experience of the evils of the issues of paper during the revolution, had become so justly obnoxious, as not only to suggest the clause in the constitution forbidding the emission of bills of credit by the States, but also to produce that vote in the convention which negatived the proposition to grant power to Congress to charter corporations—a proposition well understood at the time, as intended to authorize the establishment of a national bank, which was to issue a currency of bank notes, on a capital to be created to some extent out of Government stocks.

Although this proposition was refused by a direct vote of the convention, the object was afterwards in effect obtained, by its ingenious advocates, through a strained construction of the constitution. The debts of the revolution were funded, at prices which formed no equivalent compared with the nominal amount of the stock, and under circumstances which exposed the motives of some of those who participated in the passage of the act to distrust.

The facts that the value of the stock was greatly enhanced by the creation of the bank, that it was well understood that such would be the case, and that some of the advocates of the measure were largely benefited by it, belong to the history of the times, and are well calculated to diminish the respect which might otherwise have been due to the action of the Congress which created the institution.

On the establishment of a national bank, it became the interest of its creators, that gold should be superseded by the paper of the bank, as a general currency. A value was soon attached to the gold coins, which made their exportation to foreign countries, as a mercantile commodity, more profitable than their retention and use at home as money. It followed, as a matter of course, if not designed by those who established the bank, that the bank became, in effect, a substitute for the mint of the United States.

Such was the origin of a national bank currency, and such the beginning of those difficulties which now appear in the excessive issues of the banks incorporated by the various States.

Although it may not be possible, by any legislative means within our power, to change at once the system which has thus been introduced, and has received the acquiescence of all portions of the country, it is certainly our duty to do all that is consistent with our constitutional obligations in preventing the mischiefs which are threatened by its undue extension. That the efforts of the fathers of our Government to guard against it by a constitutional provision were founded on an intimate knowledge of the subject, has been frequently attested by the bitter experience of the country. The same causes which led them to refuse their sanction to a power authorizing the establishment of incorporations for banking purposes, now exist in a much stronger degree to urge us to exert the utmost vigilance in calling into action the means necessary to correct the evils resulting from the unfortunate exercise of the power, and it is to be hoped that the opportunity for effecting this great good, will be improved before the country witnesses new scenes of embarrassment and distress.

Variableness must ever be the characteristic of a currency, of which the precious metals are not the chief ingredient, or which can be expanded or contracted without regard to the principles that regulate the value of those metals as a standard in the general trade of the world. With us bank issues constitute such a currency, and must ever do so until they are made dependent on those just proportions of gold and silver, as a circulating medium, which experience has proved to be necessary, not only in this, but in all other commercial countries. Where those proportions are not infused into the circulation, and do not control it, it is manifest that prices must vary according to the tide of bank issues, and the value and stability of property must stand exposed to all the uncertainty which attends the administration of institutions that are constantly liable to the temptation of an interest distinct from that of the community in which they are established.

The progress of an expansion, or rather a depreciation of the currency, by excessive bank issues, is always attended by a loss to the laboring classes. This portion of the community have neither time nor opportunity to watch the ebbs and flows of the money market. Engaged from day to day in their useful toils, they do not perceive that although their wages are nominally the same, or even somewhat higher, they are greatly reduced in fact by the rapid increase of a spurious currency, which, as it appears to make money abound, they are at first inclined to consider a blessing. It is not so with the speculator, by whom this operation is better understood, and is made to contribute to his advantage. It is not until the prices of the necessities of life become so dear that the laboring classes cannot supply their wants out of their wages, that the wages rise, and gradually reach a justly proportioned rate to that of the products of their labor. When thus by the depreciation in consequence of the quantity of paper in circulation, wages as well as prices become exorbitant, it is soon found that the whole effect of the adulteration is a tariff on our home industry for the benefit of the countries where gold and silver circulate, and maintain uniformity and moderation in prices. It is then perceived that the enhancement of the price of land and labor produces a corresponding increase in the price of products, until these products do not sustain a competition with similar ones in other countries; and thus both manufactured and agricultural productions cease to bear exportation from the country of the spurious currency, because they cannot be sold for cost. This is the process by which specie is banished by the paper of the banks. Their vaults are soon exhausted to pay for foreign commodities; the next step is a stoppage of specie payment; a total degradation of paper as a currency; unusual depression of prices; the ruin of debtors, and the accumulation of property in the hands of creditors and cautious capitalists.

It was in view of these evils, together with the dangerous power wielded by the Bank of the United States, and its repugnance to our constitution, that I was induced to exert the power conferred upon me by the American people, to prevent the continuance of that institution. But, although various dangers to our republican institutions have been obviated by the failure of that bank to extort from the Government a renewal of its charter, it is obvious that little has been accomplished, except a salutary change of public opinion, towards restoring to the country the sound currency provided for in the constitution. In the acts of several of the States prohibiting the circulation of small notes, and the auxiliary enactments of Congress at the last session forbidding their reception or payment on public account, the true policy of the country has been advanced, and a larger portion of the precious metals infused into our circulating medium. These measures will probably be followed up, in due time, by the enactment of State laws banishing from circulation bank notes of still higher denominations; and the object may be materially promoted by further acts of Congress, forbidding the employment, as fiscal agents, of such banks as continue to issue notes of low denominations, and throw impediments in the way of the circulation of gold and silver.

The effects of an extension of bank credits and over issues of bank paper, have been strikingly illustrated in the sales of the public lands. From the returns made by the various Registers and Receivers in the early part of last summer, it was perceived that the receipts arising from the sales of the public lands were increasing to an unprecedented amount. In effect, however, these receipts amounted to nothing more than credits in bank. The banks lent out their notes to speculators; they were paid to the Receivers, and immediately returned to the banks, to be lent out again and again, being mere instruments to transfer to speculators the most valuable public land, and pay the Government by a credit on the books of the banks. Those credits on the books of some of the western banks, usually called deposits, were already greatly beyond their immediate means of payment, and were rapidly increasing. Indeed each speculation furnished means for another; for no sooner had one individual or company paid in the notes, than they were immediately lent to another for a like purpose, and the banks were extending their business and their issues so largely, as to alarm considerate men, and render it doubtful whether these bank credits, if permitted to accumulate, would ultimately be of the least value to the Government. The spirit of expansion and speculation was not confined to the deposit banks, but pervaded the whole multitude of banks throughout the Union, and was giving rise to new institutions to aggravate the evil.

The safety of the public funds, and the interest of the people generally, required that these operations should be checked; and it became the duty of every branch of the General and State Governments to adopt all legitimate and proper means to produce that salutary effect. Under this view of my duty I directed the issuing of the order which will be laid before you by the Secretary of the Treasury, requiring payment for the public lands sold to be made in specie, with an exception until the 15th of the present month, in favor of actual settlers. This measure has produced many salutary consequences. It checked the career of the western banks, and gave them additional strength in anticipation of the pressure which has since pervaded our eastern as well as the European commercial cities. By preventing the extension of the credit system, it measurably cut off the means of speculation, and retarded its progress in monopolizing the most valuable of the public lands. It has tended to save the new States from a non-resident proprietorship, one of the greatest obstacles to the advancement of a new country and the prosperity of an old one. It has tended to keep open the public lands for entry by emigrants at Government prices, instead of their being compelled to purchase of speculators at double or treble prices. And it is conveying into the interior large sums in silver and gold, there to enter permanently into the currency of the country, and place it on a firmer foundation. It is confidently believed that the country will find in the motives which induced that order, and the happy consequences which will have ensued, much to commend and nothing to condemn.

It remains for Congress, if they approve the policy which dictated this order, to follow it up in its various bearings. Much good, in my judgment, would be produced by prohibiting sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers, at a reasonable reduction of price, and to limit the quantity which shall be sold to them. Although it is believed the General Government never ought to receive anything but the constitutional currency in exchange for the public lands, that point would be of less importance if the lands were sold for immediate settlement and cultivation. Indeed, there is scarcely a mischief arising out of our present land system, including the accumulating surplus of revenue, which would not be remedied at once by a restriction on land sales to actual settlers; and it promises other advantages to the country in general, and to the new States in particular, which cannot fail to receive the most profound consideration of Congress.

Experience continues to realize the expectations entertained as to the capacity of the State Banks to perform the duties of fiscal agents for the Government, at the time of the removal of the deposits. It was alleged by the advocates of the Bank of the United States that the State banks, whatever might be the regulations of the Treasury Department, could not make the transfers required by the Government, or negotiate the domestic exchanges of the country. It is now well ascertained that the real domestic exchanges performed through discounts, by the United States Bank and its twenty-five branches, were at least one-third less than those of the deposit banks for an equal period of time; and if a comparison be instituted between the amounts of service rendered by these institutions, on the broader basis which has been used by the advocates of the United States Bank in estimating what they consider the domestic exchanges transacted by it, the result will be still more favorable to the deposit banks.

The whole amount of public money transferred by the Bank of the United States in 1832, was $16,000,000. The amount transferred and actually paid by the deposit banks in the year ending the 1st of October last, was $39,319,899; the amount transferred and paid between that period and the 5th of November, was $5,399,000; and the amount of transfer warrants outstanding on that day was $14,450,000; making an aggregate of $59,168,894. These enormous sums of money first mentioned have been transferred with the greatest promptitude and regularity, an the rates at which the exchanges have been negotiated previously to the passage of the deposit act, were generally below those charged by the Bank of the United States. Independently of these services, which are far greater than those rendered by the United States Bank, and its twenty-five branches, a number of the deposit banks have, with a commendable zeal to aid in the improvement of the currency, imported from abroad, at their own expense, large sums of the precious metals, for coinage and circulation.

In the same manner have nearly all the predictions turned out in respect to the effect of the removal of the deposits—a step unquestionably necessary, to prevent the evils which it was foreseen the bank itself would endeavor to create, in a final struggle to procure a renewal of its charter. It may be thus, too, in some degree, with the further steps which may be taken to prevent the excessive issue of other bank paper; but it is to be hoped that nothing will now deter the Federal and State authorities from the firm and vigorous performance of their duties to themselves and to the people in this respect.

In reducing the revenue to the wants of the Government, your particular attention is invited to those articles which constitute the necessities of life. The duty on salt was laid as a war tax, and was no doubt continued to assist in providing for the payment of the war debt. There is no article the release of which from taxation would be felt so generally and so beneficially. To this may be added all kinds of fuel and provisions. Justice and benevolence unite in favor of releasing the poor of our cities from burdens which are not necessary to the support of our Government, and tend only to increase the wants of the destitute.

It will be seen by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the accompanying documents, that the Bank of the United States has made no payment on account of the stock held by the Government in that institution, although urged to pay any portion which might suit its convenience, and that it has given no information when payment may be expected. Nor, although repeatedly requested, has it furnished the information in relation to its condition, which Congress authorized the Secretary to collect at their last session; such measures as are within the power of the Executive, have been taken to ascertain the value of the stock, and procure the payment as early as possible.

The conduct and present condition of that bank, and the great amount of capital vested in it by the United States, require your careful attention. Its charter expired on the 31 day of March last, and it has now no power but that given in the 21st section "to use the corporate name, style, and capacity, for the purpose of suits for the final settlement and liquidation of the affairs and accounts of the corporation, and for the sale and disposition of their estate, real, personal, and mixed, but not for any other purpose, or in any other manner whatsoever, nor for a period exceeding two years after the expiration of the said term of incorporation." Before the expiration of the charter, the stockholders of the bank obtained an act of incorporation from the Legislature of Pennsylvania, excluding only the United States. Instead of proceeding to wind up their concerns, and pay over to the United States the amount due on account of the stock held by them, the president and directors of the old bank appear to have transferred the books, papers, notes, obligations, and most or all of its property to this new corporation, which entered upon business as a continuation of the old concern. Amongst other acts of questionable validity, the notes of the expired corporation are known to have been used as its own, and again put in circulation. That the old bank had no right to issue or re-issue its notes after the expiration of its charter, cannot be denied, and that it could not confer any such right on its substitute, any more than exercise it itself, is equally plain. In law and honesty, the notes of the bank in circulation, at the expiration of its charter, should have been called in by public advertisement, paid up as presented, and, together with those on hand, cancelled and destroyed. Their re-issue is sanctioned by no law, and warranted by no necessity.

If the United States be responsible in their stock for the payment of these notes, their re-issue, by the new corporation, for their own profit, is a fraud on the Government. If the United States is not responsible, then there is no legal responsibility in any quarter, and it is a fraud on the country. They are the redeemed notes of a dissolved partnership, but, contrary to the wishes of the retiring partner, and without his consent, are again re-issued and circulated.

It is the high and peculiar duty of Congress to decide whether any further legislation be necessary for the security of the large amount of public property now held and in use by the new bank, and for vindicating the rights of the Government, and compelling a speedy and honest settlement with all the creditors of the old bank, public and private, or whether the subject shall be left to the power now possessed by the Executive and Judiciary. It remains to be seen whether the persons, who, as managers of the old bank, undertook to control the Government, retained the public dividends, shut their doors upon a committee of the House of Representatives, and filled the country with panic to accomplish their own sinister objects, may now, as managers of a new bank, continue with impunity to flood the country with a spurious currency, use the seven millions of Government stock for their own profit, and refuse to the United States all information as to the present condition of their own property, and the prospect of recovering it into their own possession.

The lessons taught by the Bank of the United States cannot well be lost upon the American people. They will take care never again to place so tremendous a power in irresponsible hands, and it will be fortunate if they seriously consider the consequences which are likely to result on a smaller scale from the facility with which corporate powers are granted by their State Governments.

It is believed that the law of the last session regulating the deposit banks, operates onerously and unjustly upon them in many respects: and it is hoped that Congress, on proper representation, will adopt the modifications which are necessary to prevent this consequence.

The report of the Secretary of War ad interim, and the accompanying documents, all which are herewith laid before you, will give you a full view of the diversified and important operations of that Department during the past year.

The military movements rendered necessary by the aggressions of the hostile portions of the Seminole and Creek tribes of Indians, and by other circumstances, have required the active employment of nearly our whole regular force, including the marine corps, and of large bodies of militia and volunteers. With all these events, so far as they were known at the seat of Government before the termination of your last session, you are already acquainted: and it is therefore only needful in this place to lay before you a brief summary of what has since occurred.

The war with the Seminoles, during the summer, was, on our part, chiefly confined to the protection of our frontier settlements, from the incursions of the enemy; and as a necessary and important means for the accomplishment of that end, to the maintenance of the posts previously established. In the course of this duty, several actions took place, in which the bravery and discipline of both officers and men were conspicuously displayed, and which I have deemed it proper to notice, in respect to the former, by the granting of brevet rank for gallant services in the field. But as the force of the Indians was not so far weakened by these partial successes, as to lead them to submit, and as their savage inroads were frequently repeated, early measures were taken for placing at the disposal of Governor Call, who, as commander-in-chief of the Territorial militia, had been temporarily invested with the command, an ample force, for the purpose of resuming offensive operations, in the most efficient manner, so soon as the season should permit. Major General Jesup was also directed on the conclusion of his duties in the Creek country, to repair to Florida, and assume the command.

The result of the first movement made by the forces under the direction of Governor Call, in October last, as detailed in the accompanying papers, excited much surprise and disappointment. A full explanation has been required of the causes which led to the failure of that movement, but has not yet been received. In the mean time, as it was feared that the health of Governor Call, who was understood to have suffered much from sickness, might not be adequate to the crisis, and as Major General Jesup was known to have reached Florida, that officer was directed to assume the command, and to prosecute all needful operations with the utmost promptitude and vigor. From the force at his disposal, and the dispositions he has made and is instructed to make, and from the very efficient measures which it is since ascertained have been taken by Governor Call, there is reason to hope that they will soon be enabled to reduce the enemy to subjection. In the mean time, as you will perceive from the report of the Secretary, there is urgent necessity for further appropriations to suppress these hostilities.

Happily for the interests of humanity, the hostilities with the Creeks were brought to a close soon after your adjournment, without that effusion of blood which at one time was apprehended as inevitable. The unconditional submission of the hostile party was followed by their speedy removal to the country assigned them west of the Mississippi. The inquiry as to alleged frauds in the purchase of the reservations of these Indians, and the causes of their hostilities, requested, by the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st of July last, to be made by the President, is now going on, through the agency of commissioners appointed for that purpose. Their report may be expected during your present session.

The difficulties apprehended in the Cherokee country have been prevented, and the peace and safety of that region and its vicinity effectually secured, by the timely measures taken by the War Department, and still continued.

The discretionary authority given to General Gaines to cross the Sabine, and to occupy a position as far west as Nacogdoches, in case he should deem such a step necessary to the protection of the frontier, and to the fulfilment of the stipulations contained in our treaty with Mexico, and the movement subsequently made by that officer, have been alluded to in a former part of this message. At the date of the latest intelligence from Nacogdoches, our troops were yet at that station; but the officer who has succeeded General Gaines has recently been advised that, from the facts known at the seat of Government, there would seem to be no adequate cause for any longer maintaining that position; and he was accordingly instructed, in case the troops were not already withdrawn under the discretionary powers before possessed by him, to give the requisite orders for that purpose on the receipt of the instructions, unless he shall then have in his possession such information as shall satisfy him that the maintenance of the post is essential to the protection of our frontiers, and to the due execution of our treaty stipulations, as previously explained to him.

Whilst the necessities existing during the present year, for the service of militia and volunteers, have furnished new proofs of the patriotism of our fellow-citizens, they have also strongly illustrated the importance of an increase in the rank and file of the regular army. The views of this subject submitted by the Secretary of War, in his report, meet my entire concurrence; and are earnestly commended to the deliberate attention of Congress. In this connection it is also proper to remind you, that the defects in our present militia system are every day rendered more apparent. The duty of making further provision by law for organizing, arming and disciplining this arm of defence has been so repeatedly presented to Congress by myself and my predecessors, that I deem it sufficient on this occasion to refer to the last annual message, and to former Executive communications, in which the subject has been discussed.

It appears from the reports of the officers charged with mustering into service the volunteers called for under the act of Congress of the last session, that more presented themselves at the place of rendezvous in Tennessee than were sufficient to meet the requisition which had been made by the Secretary of War upon the Governor of that State. This was occasioned by the omission of the Governor to apportion the requisition to the different regiments of militia, so as to obtain the proper number of troops, and no more. It seems but just to the patriotic citizens who repaired to the general rendezvous, under circumstances authorizing them to believe that their services were needed, and would be accepted, that the expenses incurred by them while absent from their homes, should be paid by the Government. I accordingly recommend that a law to this effect be passed by Congress, giving them a compensation which will cover their expenses on the march to and from the place of rendezvous, and while there; in connection with which, it will also be proper to make provision for such other equitable claims, growing out of the service of the militia, as may not be embraced in the existing laws.

On the unexpected breaking out of hostilities in Florida, Alabama, and Georgia, it became necessary, in some cases, to take the property of individuals for public use. Provision should be made by law for indemnifying the owners; and I would also respectfully suggest whether some provision may not be made, consistently with the principles of our Government, for the relief of the sufferers by Indian depredations, or by the operations of our own troops.

No time was lost after the making of the requisite appropriations, in resuming the great national work of completing the unfinished fortifications on our seaboard, and of placing them in a proper state of defence. In consequence, however, of the very late day at which those bills were passed, but little progress could be made during the season which has just closed. A very large amount of the moneys granted at your last session, accordingly, remains unexpended; but as the work will be again resumed at the earliest moment in the coming spring, the balance of the existing appropriations, and in several cases, which will be laid before you with the proper estimates, further sums for the like objects, may be usefully expended during the next year.

The recommendations of an increase in the Engineer Corps, and for a reorganization of the Topographical Corps, submitted to you in my last annual message, derive additional strength from the great embarrassments experienced during the present year, in those branches of the service, and under which they are now suffering. Several of the most important surveys and constructions directed by recent laws, have been suspended in consequence of the want of adequate force in these corps. The like observations may be applied to the Ordnance corps, and the General Staff, the operations of which, as they are now organized, must either be frequently interrupted, or performed by officers taken from the line of the army, to the great prejudice of the service.

For a general view of the condition of the Military Academy, and of other branches of the military service not already noticed, as well as for fuller illustrations of those which have been mentioned, I refer you to the accompanying documents; and among the various proposals contained therein for legislative action, I would particularly notice the suggestion of the Secretary of War for the revision of the pay of the army, as entitled to your favorable regard.

The national policy, founded alike in interest and in humanity, so long and so steadily pursued by this Government, for the removal of the Indian tribes originally settled on this side of the Mississippi, to the west of that river, may be said to have been consummated by the conclusion of the late treaty with the Cherokees. The measures taken in the execution of that treaty, and in relation to our Indian affairs generally, will fully appear by referring to the accompanying papers. Without dwelling on the numerous and important topics embraced in them, I again invite your attention to the importance of providing a well-digested and comprehensive system for the protection, supervision, and improvement of the various tribes now planted in the Indian country. The suggestions submitted by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and enforced by the Secretary, on this subject, and also in regard to the establishment of additional military posts in the Indian country, are entitled to your profound consideration. Both measures are necessary for the double purpose of protecting the Indians from intestine war, and in other respects complying with our engagements to them, and of securing our western frontier against incursions, which otherwise will assuredly be made on it. The best hopes of humanity, in regard to the aboriginal race, the welfare of our rapidly extending settlements, and the honor of the United States, are all deeply involved in the relations existing between this Government and the emigrating tribes. I trust, therefore, that the various matters submitted in the accompanying documents, in respect to those relations, will receive your early and mature deliberation; and that it may issue in the adoption of legislative measures adapted to the circumstances, and duties of the present crisis.

You are referred to the report of the Secretary of the Navy for a satisfactory view of the operations of the department under his charge, during the present year. In the construction of vessels at the different navy yards, and in the employment of our ships and squadrons at sea, that branch of the service has been actively and usefully employed. While the situation of our commercial interests in the West Indies required a greater number than usual of armed vessels to be kept on that station, it is gratifying to perceive that the protection due to our commerce in other quarters of the world has not proved insufficient. Every effort has been made to facilitate the equipment of the exploring expedition authorized by the act of the last session, but all the preparation necessary to enable it to sail has not yet been completed. No means will be spared by the Government to fit out the expedition on a scale corresponding with the liberal appropriation for the purpose, and with the elevated character of the objects which are to be effected by it.

I beg leave to renew the recommendation made in my last annual message, respecting the enlistment of boys in our naval service, and to urge upon your attention the necessity of further appropriations to increase the number of ships afloat, and to enlarge generally the capacity and force of the navy. The increase of our commerce, and our position in regard to the other powers of the world, will always make it our policy and interest to cherish the great naval resources of our country.

The report of the Postmaster General presents a gratifying picture of the condition of the Post Office Department. Its revenues for the year ending the 30th of June last, were $3,398,455 19, showing an increase of revenue over that of the preceding year of $404,878 53, or more than 13 per cent. The expenditures for the same year were $2,755,623 76, exhibiting a surplus of $642,831 43. The Department has been redeemed from embarrassment and debt, has accumulated a surplus exceeding half a million of dollars, has largely extended, and is preparing still farther to extend, the mail service, and recommends a reduction of postages equal to about 20 per cent. It is practising upon the great principle, which should control every branch of our Government, of rendering to the public the greatest good possible, with the least possible taxation to the people.

The scale of postages suggested by the Postmaster General recommends itself, not only by the reduction it proposes, but by the simplicity of its arrangement, its conformity with the Federal currency, and the improvement it will introduce into the accounts of the Department and its agents.

Your particular attention is invited to the subject of mail contracts with railroad companies. The present laws, providing for the making of contracts, are based upon the presumption that competition among bidders will secure the service at a fair price. But on most of the railroad lines, there is no competition in that kind of transportation, and advertising is therefore useless. No contract can now be made with them except such as shall be negotiated before the time of offering, or afterwards, and the power of the Postmaster General to pay them high prices, is practically without limitation. It would be a relief to him, and no doubt would conduce to the public interest, to prescribe, by law, some equitable basis upon which such contracts shall rest, and restrict him by a fixed rule of allowance. Under a liberal act of that sort he would undoubtedly be able to secure the services of most of the railroad companies, and the interest of the Department would be thus advanced.

The correspondence between the people of the United States and the European nations, and particularly with the British islands, has become very extensive, and requires the interposition of Congress to give it security. No obstacle is perceived to an interchange of mails between New York and Liverpool, or other foreign ports, as proposed by the Postmaster General; on the contrary, it promises, by the security it will afford, to facilitate commercial transactions, and give rise to an enlarged intercourse among the people of different nations, which cannot but have a happy effect. Through the city of New York most of the correspondence between the Canadas and Europe is now carried on, and urgent representations have been received from the head of the Provincial post office, asking the interposition of the United States to guard it from the accidents and losses to which it is now subjected. Some legislation appears to be called for, as well by our own interest, as by comity to the adjoining British Provinces.

The expediency of providing a fire-proof building for the important books and papers of the Post Office Department, is worthy of consideration. In the present condition of our Treasury, it is neither necessary nor wise to leave essential public interests exposed to so much danger, when they can so readily be made secure. There are weighty considerations in the location of a new building for the Department, in favor of placing it near the other Executive buildings.

The important subjects of a survey of the coast, and the manufacture of a standard of weights and measures for the different custom-houses, have been in progress for some years, under the general direction of the Executive, and the immediate superintendence of a gentleman possessing high scientific attainments. At the last session of Congress, the making of a set of weights and measures for each State in the Union was added to the others by a joint resolution.

The care and correspondence as to all these subjects have been devolved on the Treasury Department during the last year. A special report from the Secretary of the Treasury will soon be communicated to Congress, which will show what has been accomplished as to the whole, the number and compensation of the persons now employed in these duties, and the progress expected to be made during the ensuing year, with a copy of the various correspondence deemed necessary to throw light on the subjects which seem to require additional legislation. Claims have been made for retrospective allowances in behalf of the superintendent, and some of his assistants, which I did not feel justified in granting; other claims have been made for large increases in compensation which, under all the circumstances of the several cases, I declined making without the express sanction of Congress. In order to obtain that sanction the subject was at the last session, on my suggestion, and by request of the immediate superintendent, submitted by the Treasury Department to the Committee of Commerce of the House of Representatives. But no legislative action having taken place, the early attention of Congress is now invited to the enactment of some express and detailed provisions in relation to the various claims made for the past, and to the compensation and allowances deemed proper for the future.

It is further respectfully recommended that such being the inconvenience of attention to these duties by the Chief Magistrate, and such the great pressure of business on the Treasury Department, the general supervision of the coast survey, and the completion of the weights and measures, the works are kept united, should be devolved on a board of officers, organized specially for the purpose, or on the Navy Board attached to the Navy Department.

All my experience and reflection confirm the conviction I have so often expressed to Congress in favor of an amendment of the constitution, which will prevent, in any event, the election of the President and Vice President of the United States devolving on the House of Representatives and the Senate: and I therefore beg leave again to solicit your attention to the subject. There were various other suggestions in my last annual message, not acted upon, particularly that relating to the want of uniformity in the laws of the District of Columbia, that are deemed worthy of your favorable consideration.

Before concluding this paper, I think it due to the various Executive Departments to bear testimony to their prosperous condition, and to the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted. It has been my aim to enforce in all of them a vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business, and it is gratifying to me to believe that there is no just cause of complaint from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation.

Having now finished the observations deemed proper on this, the last occasion I shall have of communicating with the two Houses of Congress at their meeting, I cannot omit an expression of the gratitude which is due to the great body of my fellow-citizens, in whose partiality and indulgence I have found encouragement and support in the many difficult and trying scenes through which it has been my lot to pass during my public career. Though deeply sensible that my exertions have not been crowned with a success corresponding to the degree of favor bestowed upon me, I am sure that they will be considered as having been directed by an earnest desire to promote the good of my country; and I am consoled by the persuasion that whatever errors have been committed will find a corrective in the intelligence and patriotism of those who will succeed us. All that has occurred during my administration is calculated to inspire me with increased confidence in the stability of our institutions; and should I be spared to enter upon that retirement which is so suitable to my age and infirm health, and so much desired by me in other respects, I shall not cease to invoke that beneficent Being to whose providence we are already so signally indebted for the continuance of his blessings on our beloved country.

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6, 1836.

(Table referred to in the Message.

A.

Statement of distribution of surplus revenue of $30,000,000 among the several States, agreeably to the number of Electoral votes for President, and according to the Constitutional mode of direct taxation by representative population, and the differences arising from those two modes of distribution, as per census of 1830.

	Representative population.	Electoral votes.	Share according to system of direct taxation.	Share according to Electoral vote.	Difference in favor of direct tax mode.	Difference in favor of electoral vote mode.
Maine,	399,454	10	999,371	1,020,408		21,037
New Hampshire,	269,327	7	673,813	714,286		40,473
Massachusetts,	614,408	14	1,527,144	1,428,371	98,773
Rhode Island,	97,192	4	243,159	408,163		165,004
Connecticut,	297,665	8	744,711	816,327		71,616
Vermont,	280,652	7	702,147	714,286		12,139
New York,	1,918,518	42	4,749,978	4,285,714	514,264
New Jersey,	319,921	8	800,392	816,327		15,935
Pennsylvania,	1,348,072	30	3,372,662	3,061,225	311,437
Delaware,	75,451	3	188,716	306,122		117,406
Maryland,	405,842	10	1,015,352	1,020,408		5,056
Virginia,	1,023,502	23	2,560,640	2,346,939	213,701
North Carolina,	639,747	15	1,600,546	1,530,612	69,934
South Carolina,	455,025	11	1,138,400	1,122,449	15,951
Georgia,	429,811	11	1,075,319	1,122,449		47,130
Alabama,	262,567	7	656,751	714,286		57,535
Mississippi,	110,357	4	276,096	408,163		132,067
Louisiana,	171,904	5	430,076	510,904		80,128
Tennessee,	625,263	15	1,564,309	1,530,612	33,697
Kentucky,	621,832	15	1,555,725	1,530,612	25,113
Ohio,	937,901	21	2,346,479	2,142,858	203,621
Indiana,	543,030	9	858,206	918,368		60,162
Illinois,	157,146	5	393,154	510,904		117,050
Missouri,	130,419	4	326,288	408,163		81,875
Arkansas,	38,557	3	71,445	306,122		234,677
Michigan,	31,625	3	79,121	306,122		227,001
	11,991,168	294	$30,000,000	$30,000,000	$1,486,291	$1,486,291

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, it was,

Ordered, That five thousand copies of the message, and one thousand five hundred copies of the accompanying documents, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, being the annual report on the state of the Finances;

Also, a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, showing the operations of that office during the past year; which were laid on the table, and one thousand five hundred extra copies ordered to be printed.

Mr. KENT rose and said:

Mr. President: Yonder vacant seat, heretofore so ably and so faithfully filled, but too significantly indicates the object of my addressing you at this time.

I rise, sir, for the purpose of announcing to you and to the Senate, the melancholy intelligence of the death of my very worthy and excellent colleague, the late R. H. GOLDSBOROUGH. He departed this life during the late recess, after a short illness, in the midst of his usefulness, and at a period when we should have been justifiable in allotting to him many years of vigorous health.

But few individuals have occupied a greater space in public estimation in his native State than Mr. Goldsborough. He filled, from an early period of his life, with no inconsiderable degree of reputation, various public stations, and was twice elected to a seat in this body. Possessing the advantages of a liberal education, which had been well improved, with the most polished address, he was ever found a ready and efficient debater, remarkable for his courtesy and politeness. He may be truly said to have been "a man of manners and of letters too."

Mr. Goldsborough's exertions for the benefit of his fellow men were not confined to public life.—He was prominent as an agriculturist, making frequent and judicious experiments, enforcing his views by many able essays, thereby directing the attention of the agriculturist to such objects as were calculated to ameliorate and improve the condition of his exhausted lands. Truly exemplary in all the relations of private life, as a friend, neighbor, and in the domestic circle, he was unrivaled.

To me, personally, his loss is truly afflicting.—A severe hoarseness, under which I have labored for some time, obliges me to be thus brief. I beg leave to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, unanimously, That the members of the Senate, from a sincere desire of showing every mark of respect due to the memory of the Hon. ROBERT H. GOLDSBOROUGH, deceased, late a member thereof, will go into mourning for him one month, by the usual mode of wearing crape around the left arm.

On motion of Mr. KENT,

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 6, 1836.

The Hon. JOHN YOUNG, of N. Y. appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. PEARCE, of R. I. from the joint committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that the two Houses were organized and ready to receive from him any communication, reported that they had discharged that duty, and that the President would make a communication in writing to the two Houses at 12 o'clock.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, of Ohio, gave notice that he should, on to-morrow, move to rescind so much of the 15th rule of the House as provides that the business on the old calendar of the preceding session, shall be taken up after "six days" from the commencement of the present session. He explained his object to be that the business on that calendar should be taken up at once.

Mr. GILLET also gave notice of a proposition to amend the 107th rule of the House, by repealing the following clause thereof: "Nor shall any rule be suspended, except by a vote of at least two-thirds of the members present; nor shall the order of business, as established by the rules of the House, be postponed or changed, except by a vote of at least two-thirds of the members present."

Mr. BOON inquired of the Chair if the rules adopted at the last session were to be considered as having been adopted only for that, or for both sessions?

The SPEAKER understood the rules to be adopted for the whole Congress.

The following Message was received from the President of the United States by the hands of Andrew Jackson, Jr. Esq. his private secretary, which was read by the Clerk:

[The Message will be found in the proceedings of the Senate.]

Mr. LOYALL moved that the message be referred to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that 15,000 copies thereof, with the accompanying documents, and 5,000 copies without the documents, be printed for the use of the members of the House.

Mr. BRIGGS moved to amend the motion, by adding a provision that the 5000 copies of the message alone should be furnished within two days.

Mr. LOYALL accepted the modification, and the resolution, so modified, was agreed to.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a printed communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual statement of the expenses of the United States for the year 1835, which, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, of Ohio, was laid on the table, and the accompanying letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the same, transmitting the annual report on the state of the finances for the last year, which, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, was laid on the table, and twenty thousand copies ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the same, transmitting the annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, showing the operations of that office for the last year, which, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, of Ohio, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the same, transmitting the estimates of appropriation proposed to be made for the service of the year 1837; which, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELING, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting a statement of the annual expenditures made out of the contingent fund of the House for the last year; which, on motion of Mr. CAVE JOHN-ON, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. PARKS,
The House then adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 7, 1836.

The following Senators, in addition to those already mentioned, appeared:

Mr. BROWN, of North Carolina.

Mr. NICHOLS, of Louisiana.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communications:

1. From the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the amount of moneys paid by the disbursing officers of the Treasury Department; laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

2. A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount of money received from the sales of Chickasaw lands; laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

3. A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in compliance with a resolution of the last session, giving certain information respecting the importations of paupers into the United States; laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

4. A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount of funds applicable to the erection of marine hospitals in the United States, and on the subject generally; laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

5. A communication from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting a statement of his accounts; laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

6. A communication from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, showing the progress made in the erection of the buildings for which an appropriation was made by the last Congress; laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The following message was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of ANDREW JACKSON, Jr. Esq. his private Secretary:
To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit, herewith, copies of my correspondence with Mrs. Madison, produced by the resolution adopted at the last session by the Senate and House of Representatives, on the decease of her venerated husband. The occasion seems to be appropriate to present a letter from her on the subject of the publication of a work of great political interest and ability, carefully prepared by Mr. Madison's own hand, under circumstances that give it claims to be considered as little less than official.

Congress has already, at considerable expense, published, in a variety of forms, the naked journals of the revolutionary Congress, and of the conventions that formed the Constitution of the United States. I am persuaded that the work of Mr. Madison, considering the author, the subject matter of it, and the circumstances under which it was prepared—long withheld from the public as it has been by those motives of personal kindness and delicacy that gave tone to his intercourse with his fellow men, until he and all who had been participants with him in the scenes he describes, have passed away—well deserves to become the property of the nation; and cannot fail, if published and disseminated at the public charge, to confer the most important of all benefits on the present, and every succeeding generation—accurate knowledge of the principles of their Government, and the circumstances under which they were recommended, and embodied in the Constitution for adoption.

ANDREW JACKSON.

December 6, 1836.

On motion of Mr. RIVES, the reading of the correspondence was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BENTON gave notice that on to-morrow, he should ask leave to introduce the following bills:

A bill to increase the army;

A bill to construct certain fortifications;

A bill to provide for the construction of a western armory and arsenal;

A bill for the relief of the heirs of General W. M. Eaton;

A bill making a grant of land to the university of St. Louis.

Mr. B. also gave notice that on the first day on which there was a Senate sufficiently full, he should ask leave to introduce a resolution to expunge from the journals certain sentences thereon. He would state, at the same time, that the resolution he should introduce would be in the same words as the one introduced by him at the last session, and it was his wish that the resolution might be disposed of by the Senate, before the other important business of the session commenced.

Mr. BENTON submitted the following resolution.

Resolved, That the annual statement of the commerce and navigation of the United States be hereafter printed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and be communicated in a printed form, as soon as possible, after the commencement of each stated session of Congress.

Mr. KNIGHT gave notice that he should, on to-morrow, ask leave to introduce a bill to allow a drawback on imported metals.

Mr. LINN gave notice that he should, on to-morrow, ask leave to introduce the following bills:

A bill for the relief of Joseph Bogg;

A bill for the relief of A. Pelletier;

A bill for the relief of M. Lachance;

A bill to provide for running correctly the northern boundary line of the State of Missouri.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, gave notice that he should, on to-morrow, ask leave to introduce a bill for the organization of the District Courts of the United States in the State of Alabama.

Mr. WALKER gave notice that he should on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill to advance to the States of Mississippi and Alabama two millions of dollars, chargeable upon the 2 per cent. fund, for the purpose of constructing a railway from Brandon, in Mississippi, to Cahawba, in Alabama.

On motion of Mr. LINN,
The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 7, 1836.

DEATH OF THE HON. DAVID DICKSON, OF MISSISSIPPI.

As soon as the reading of the journal was concluded, Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi rose, and announced to the House the decease of his late colleague, the Hon. DAVID DICKSON.

Mr. CLAIBORNE addressed the House as follows:

Mr. SPEAKER: It is only a few years since I witnessed from that gallery the affecting honors paid to the remains of a distinguished Representative from the State of Mississippi.* Since that period she has lost two sons,† eminent for talents in the public service, and you are now called on to render the last homage to the memory of another. The time that has intervened since the death of my lamented colleague, saves me the painful duty of being the first to communicate it to his friends now present. He died, sir, as he had lived, through a life of extraordinary vicissitudes, with characteristic fortitude, with but one wish ungratified—a wish so natural to the human heart—that in his dark hour of dissolution, he might be supported by his nearest and best beloved, and the cherished beings that grew up and clustered around his bedside.

Sir, let death come when it will, in what shape it may, in the battle or the shipwreck, or in the solitude of the cloister, it is appalling to human contemplation. But, sir, when it overtakes us in a distant land, and we know that our last moments of agony and infirmity are to be witnessed by stranger eyes, and are conscious that we must be carried down to an unwept grave, where no kindred dust shall mingle with ours, for ever, and the last hope of home and of family fades from our filmed view. O! sir, this is death! this it is to die! Such was the destiny of my colleague, by strangers honored and by strangers mourned; his dying message was for those broken-hearted ones now in widowhood and orphanage—his expiring sigh a prayer for them.

* Hon. Christopher Rankin.

† Thomas B. Reed and Robert H. Adams, of the United States Senate.

Mr. Speaker: I shall pronounce no eulogy on the dead. Let history speak it. For twenty years he preserved a high position in the public service, and died poorer than when he entered it, leaving to his children the riches of an honorable name. If it be praise to have lived beloved and to die unapproached, then it is due to him.

It now only remains for us to pay the final honors to his memory—sad, because it seems like breaking the last link that binds the living to the dead; solemn, when we reflect how soon, how very soon, some friend now present may invoke the same tribute for ourselves.

I offer you, sir, the following resolution:

Resolved, That in testimony of their respect for the memory of DAVID DICKSON, late a Representative from the State of Mississippi, the members of this House will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

The resolution was adopted unanimously.

DEATH OF GEN. COFFEE, OF GEORGIA.

Mr. HAYNES then rose to announce also the decease of the Hon. JOHN COFFEE, late a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Mr. H. addressed the House as follows:

Mr. SPEAKER: On me has devolved the mournful duty of announcing to this House the death of one of its members, the Hon. JOHN COFFEE, of Georgia.

For a considerable portion of the last session of Congress, he labored under severe indisposition, which, at different periods, detained him from the service of the House. Although his symptoms were so mitigated before the adjournment as to enable him to resume the regular discharge of his public duties, no radical amendment had taken place; and with gradually increasing force, his disease closed his existence, in the bosom of his family, in the month of September last.

In speaking of a departed friend and colleague, the language of eulogy might well be excused. But, to those who have been associated with Gen. Coffee in the labors of this House for the last three years, such language would be unnecessary.

Suffice it to say, that in his domestic and social relations he was eminently characterized by affectionate kindness and courtesy, and that his public duties were discharged with honor to himself and fidelity to his country. As the usual mark of respect, I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved unanimously, That this House has received with the liveliest sensibility, the announcement of the death of the Hon. JOHN COFFEE, a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Resolved unanimously, That this House tenders to the relatives of the deceased the expression of its sympathy at this mournful event; and, as a testimony of respect for the memory of the deceased, the members will wear crape on the left arm for thirty days.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and, on motion of Mr. CUSHMAN,
The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

THURSDAY, December 8, 1836.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communications:

1. A communication from the War Department, exhibiting a statement of the disbursements made from the contingent fund of the office of the Secretary of War; laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

2. A communication from the War Department, exhibiting the amount of moneys paid on contracts by the disbursing officers of the War Department; laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

3. A communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a statement of expenditures during the present year, for the contingent expenses of northeast Executive building, for foreign intercourse, &c. laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

4. A communication from the Secretary of the Navy, exhibiting a statement of expenditures made from the contingent fund of his Department; laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EWING, of Ohio, gave notice that he should, on the next day of the meeting of the Senate, ask leave to introduce a joint resolution to rescind the Treasury order of the 11th of July, 1836, and to make uniform the currency receivable for the public revenue.

Mr. MOORE gave notice that on to-morrow he should ask leave to introduce bills for the relief of S. Miller, W. Edes, and John McCarty.

Mr. TIPTON gave notice that on to-morrow he should ask leave to introduce the following bills:

A bill supplementary to an act entitled "An act to provide for an exchange of lands with the Indians residing in any of the States or Territories, and for their removal west of the Mississippi," approved 28th May, 1830.

A bill for the relief of P. Warner.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Senate will on Monday next, at one o'clock, proceed to the election of a Secretary of the Senate, in the place of Walter Lowrie, resigned.

Mr. HUBBARD submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Senate will on Monday next, proceed to the appointment of the standing committees.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, on leave, introduced a bill supplementary to an act to amend an act for the better organization of the District Courts of Alabama; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KNIGHT, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of Sarah Angel, and the heirs at law of Benjamin King, deceased; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Also, a bill to allow a drawback of duties on imported hemp and cordage; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. BENTON, on leave, introduced the following bills:

A bill to increase the army;

A bill to construct certain fortifications;

A bill to provide for the construction of a western armory and arsenal;

A bill for the relief of the heirs of General W. M. Eaton;

A bill making a grant of land to the university of St. Louis;

All of which were read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. GRUNDY gave notice that, on Tuesday next, he should ask leave to introduce a bill supplementary to an act to amend the judicial system of the United States.

Mr. WALKER, on leave, introduced a bill to advance to the States of Mississippi and Alabama two millions of dollars, chargeable upon the 2 per cent. fund, for the purpose of constructing a railway from Brandon, in Mississippi, to Cahawba, in Alabama; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

On motion of Mr. EWING,

Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns, it adjourns to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BENTON then called up the following resolution, submitted by him on Wednesday:

Resolved, That the annual statement of the commerce and navigation of the United States be hereafter printed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and be communicated in a printed form, as soon as possible, after the commencement of each stated session of Congress.

Mr. BENTON stated his object to be to have the work printed by the direction of the Treasury Department, and laid before Congress at its meeting, in the same manner in which the receipts and expenditures were now printed and laid before Congress.

After a few remarks by Mr. KNIGHT, on motion of Mr. BENTON the resolution was laid over until Monday next; when

The Senate adjourned over to Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

THURSDAY, December 8, 1836.

On motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, of Ohio, the House took up the order moved by him on Monday last, directing the appointment of the standing committees of the House, according to the rules and orders of the House.

The motion pending was the amendment moved thereto by Mr. MERCER, providing that the absence of a member should not be regarded as a disqualification for his appointment on a committee.

Mr. WHITTLESEY did not observe the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Mercer) in his seat, or he should have requested him to withdraw his amendment, for he could not give it his support, and he hoped the House would reject it.

Mr. HARPER had understood the gentleman from Virginia to say, that as the time had elapsed he was himself not solicitous for the adoption of his amendment.

The amendment was then rejected, mem. dis. and the order was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. EVANS it was ordered, that when the House adjourn this day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The following message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his private Secretary, ANDREW JACKSON Jr. Esq.

To the Senate and House of Representatives.

I transmit, herewith, copies of my correspondence with Mrs. Madison, produced by the resolution adopted at the last session by the Senate and House of Representatives, on the decease of her venerated husband. The occasion seems to be appropriate to present a letter from her on the subject of the publication of a work of great political interest and ability, carefully prepared by Mr. Madison's own hand, under circumstances that give it claims to be considered as little less than official.

Congress has already, at considerable expenses published, in a variety of forms, the naked journal, of the revolutionary Congress, and of the conventions that formed the Constitution of the United States. I am persuaded that the work of Mr. Madison, considering the author, the subject matter of it, and the circumstances under which it was prepared—long withheld from the public as it has been by those motives of personal kindness and delicacy that gave tone to his intercourse with his fellow men, until he and all who had been participants with him in the scenes he describes have passed away—well deserves to become the property of the nation; and cannot fail, if published and disseminated at the public charge, to confer the most important of all benefits on the present, and every succeeding generation—accurate knowledge of the principles of their Government, and the circumstances under which they were recommended, and embodied in the Constitution for adoption.

ANDREW JACKSON.

December 6, 1836.

The message having been read, was, on motion of Mr. PATTON, referred to the proposed Joint Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

Another message from the President of the United States was also received, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, showing the progress made in the erection of the buildings for which an appropriation was made by the last Congress; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER laid before the House sundry executive communications, viz:

1. A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount of money received from the sales of Chickasaw lands; laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

2. A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in compliance with a resolution of the last session, giving certain information respecting the importations of paupers into the United States.

3. A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount of funds applicable to the erection of marine hospitals in the United States, and on the subject generally.

4. A communication from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting a statement of his accounts.

5. A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the expenditures in relation to the Potomac Bridge.

6. A communication from the same, transmitting a survey of the coasts of the United States.

7. A communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting an account of the contingent expenditures of that Department.

8. A communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting an account of the contingent expenses of that Department.

9. Also, from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a similar report of the contingent expenses of the Navy Department.

All the foregoing communications were severally ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

THE LATE HON. G. L. KINNARD.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, then rose for the purpose of announcing to the House, the death of one of his late colleagues, the Hon. GEORGE L. KINNARD.

Mr. D. addressed the House as follows:

Mr SPEAKER: Painful as the duty may be, it is mine of this morning, to announce to the House the decease of another of its members.

My friend and colleague, the Hon. GEORGE L. KINNARD, died at Cincinnati on the 25th ult. after a few days of suffering much more severe than ordinarily falls to the lot of mankind, in passing that dread ordeal.

The immediate cause of his death is perhaps well known to this House and to the country. It was his misfortune to suffer from one of those appalling accidents which are of but too frequent occurrence upon our steamboats, by the bursting of their machinery. He, too, like one of our associates, whose death was announced on yesterday, died among strangers yet among friends. At the hospitable mansion of the Hon. Robert Lytle, where he paid the great debt of nature, he received the most unrelenting attention and kindness, as also the most unwearied services of those who rank among the first in the profession of medicine; but all would not do; the omnipotent fiat had gone forth, by which he was called from the service of his country, to the service of his God. Had I studied by set phrase to pass an eulogy upon his character, I should find words too cold, language too inexpressive, to do justice to his virtues. It was my good fortune to be favored, for many years, with his acquaintance, and to share largely in his friendship. With a clear and discriminating mind, an honest heart, and an untiring industry, he had elevated himself to the highest seat in the affections of those who knew him best.

In all the varied relations of life, (to which he was about to add another of a sacred and responsible character,) he sustained the most unsullied reputation; leaving to the world indubitable evidence not only that he was a man of high attainments, but that he was, emphatically, one of God's noblest works—an honest man.

Mr. D. then submitted the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That as a testimonial of respect for the memory of the Hon. GEORGE L. KINNARD, late a member of this House, from the State of Indiana, the members of this body will wear crape on the left arm for thirty days.

Resolved, That the connections and constituents of Mr. KINNARD are joined in the sincerest condolence by this body, in the loss of that inestimable man, to them, to us, and to the country.

On motion of Mr. LAY,

The House then adjourned till Monday next.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ON THE STATE OF THE FINANCES.TREASURY DEPARTMENT, }
6th December, 1836. }

In obedience to the directions of the "Act supplementary to the act to establish the Treasury Department," the Secretary of the Treasury respectfully submits to Congress the following report:

1. Of the Public Revenue and Expenditures.

It is believed that the whole amount of money in the Treasury on the 1st of January next, applicable to public purposes, will be about $41,723,959.

This conclusion rests in part on what has been actually ascertained, and in part on estimates.

Thus the balance in the Treasury, on the 1st of January, 1835, was - $8,892,856 42
The receipts from all sources, during that year, were - $35,430,087 10

Viz:

From customs,	$19,391,310 59
" lands,	14,757,600 76
Dividends and sales of Bank Stock,	569,280 82
Incidental items,	195,561 98
Neapolitan indemnity,	516,332 96

Those, with the above balance, make an aggregate of $44,322,945 52
The expenditures on all objects during the year 1835, were 17,573,141 56

On Civil List, Foreign Intercourse, and Miscellaneous objects,	3,721,261 60
Neapolitan awards,	508,436 93
Military service, including Fortifications, &c.	9,420,312 69
Naval service, including gradual improvement,	3,864,939 06
Public Debt,	58,191 28

For the details of the receipts and expenditures in the year 1835, reference is made to the annual account thereof, which is this day submitted to Congress in a separate communication.

The balance left in the Treasury on the first of January, 1836, was, therefore, $26,749,803 96.

The receipts into the Treasury during 1836, as ascertained and estimated, will be about $47,691,898.

Of these, the receipts during the first three quarters, are ascertained to have been $38,141,898 04

Viz:

From Customs,	$17,523,151 79
" Lands,	20,048,929 88
Dividends and sales of United States Bank Stock,	292,676 67
Incidental items, including excess of repayments on account of public debt, as hereafter stated,	247,139 70

This does not embrace the receipts in trust on account of the Chickasaw Indians.

Of those receipts, and their investment, beside the expenditures from them, a report will forthwith be laid before Congress, in conformity to treaties, and the acts of Congress carrying those treaties into effect.

Neither does it embrace the receipts on account of the Post Office and Patent Office, of which, as well as the expenditures on the same accounts, separate statements are kept, in conformity to the late laws, and will be rendered by the proper officers.

Nor does it include what has been received in trust the present year for the claimants under the French, Neapolitan and Spanish treaties.

A separate account will be exhibited in this report of the receipts and expenditures from those sources, in order to avoid complexity and ambiguity in the statement of the general receipts and expenditures in behalf of the Government alone.

The receipts during the fourth quarter of the present year, it is computed will be about $9,550,000.

These, with the balance on the 1st of January, 1836, form an aggregate of $74,441,702.

The expenditures during the year 1836, are ascertained and estimated to be $31,435,032.

Of these, the amount during the first three quarters is ascertained to have been $20,791,372 16

Viz. on civil list, foreign intercourse, and miscellaneous, $3,850,101 55.

Military service, including fortifications, &c. $13,010,061 59.

Naval service, &c. $3,931,209 02.

Public Debt, less than the repayments by the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, as hereafter explained.

For the details of all these, and the incidental receipts, during those three quarters, reference is made to the exhibit annexed (A 1 and 2.)

The expenditures for the fourth quarter, as computed by the proper Departments, will be $10,643 660; but which, it is thought by me, will probably fall short of that amount.

This will leave on hand, on the first of January, 1837, an estimated balance of $43,005,669. From this, if the diminished sum of $1,080,000 for unavailable funds be deducted, the available balance of money, on the first of January, 1837, would be the sum of $41,925,669.

But beside the charges already imposed on this balance by appropriations for public purposes still unpaid, and which will soon be adverted to, there is in fact included in it about $201,710, which was paid into the Treasury, chiefly in former years, from private sources alone, and for private or specific purposes, and which neither accrued from the usual sources of public revenue, nor ever belonged to the General Government, except to fulfil the particular trusts under which it was received in behalf of others.

A schedule of those items and sums on the first of December, 1836, is annexed (B.) Deduct their amount from the available balance of $41,925,669, and only about $41,723,959 would remain on the first of January next, applicable to the general purposes of the Government.

To this deduction would be subjoined another, had not the receipts and expenditures connected with certain subjects during the present year, or portions of it, been kept distinct for reasons before indicated.

Thus the receipts on account of the Post Office, which, under the new organization, are paid into the Treasury and kept distinct, have, since it took effect, being the last half of the year, been ascertained and computed to be about $1,076,872 including near $410,472, that had been collected previously; and the expenditures have been about $562,952, leaving a balance on hand at the end of the year of about $513,920, as will be more particularly exhibited by the head of that Department.

The receipts on account of the Patent Office, since its new organization, for the present year, have also been ascertained and computed to be about $16,828; the expenditures chargeable to them about $7,241, and the balance about $9,587, as will be more particularly shown by the report of the proper officer.

Beside these, the receipts into the Treasury in trust from the treaties of indemnity with France, Naples, and Spain, have been about $3,765,994, and the payments to the claimants about $3,663,988, leaving a balance of about $102,026, still uncalled for or unadjusted.

The particulars of these will more fully appear in the general annual exhibit of all the receipts and expenditures.

Lastly, the receipts into the Treasury on account of the Chickasaw Indians, have been about $639,252; the expenditures, by investment and otherwise, about $577,675; and the balance on hand is about $91,574. The detailed account of these, and the other transactions in their behalf, will be, as remarked in a former portion of this report, immediately presented in a separate communication to Congress.

The charges already imposed on the general balance of $41,723,959, by means of current and permanent appropriations—which it is expected will not be expended till after the first of January next, amount to $14,636,062.

Of this sum it is computed that $3,013,389 can be applied in aid of the appropriations for the ensuing year without re-appropriation, and that $195,183 will be carried to the surplus fund, leaving $1,427,490, which will probably be required to accomplish the objects contemplated in the acts of Congress.

Deduct this remaining charge of $14,440,879 from the balance estimated to be on hand on the first of January, 1837, and the sum of $27,283,080 would be left to be appropriated by Congress towards new or former objects.

2. Of the expenditures for the Public Debt and its present condition.

Before the passage of the act of Congress at the last session on the subject of the public debt, the money, which had previously been deposited by the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, in the United States Bank, for the payment of the residue of it, was, under their direction, repaid into the Treasury, amounting to the sum of $136,773 01.

Since that event, and the suspension of the duties of the Commissioners, this Department, by virtue of the above act, has caused all those portions of the public debt outstanding and presented for payment, to be promptly discharged.

The payments made since the first of January last, have been as follows, viz:

On the funded debt, towards principal	$46,405 72
Towards interest,	3,139 00
Making in all the the sum of	$49,544 81

There still remains of the funded debt, unclaimed and undischarged, principal about $90,367
And interest with dividends, about $250,416

A small unfunded debt of $37,440 55, also, remains, which may hereafter be claimed, and on which has been paid during the past year, including $16 07 for interest on Treasury notes, the sum of $88 57

It consists of claims registered prior to 1798, for services and supplies during the revolutionary war, equal to $27,385 46

Treasury notes issued during the war of 1812 5,735
And Mississippi stock 4,320 09

3. Of the estimates of the public revenue and expenditures for the year 1837.

The receipts into the Treasury, from all sources, during 1837, are estimated at $24,000,000

Viz: From customs,	$16,500,000
From lands,	5,000,000
From bank stock,	2,000,000
Miscellaneous, including interest from deposit banks,	500,000

To these add the balance of available funds in the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1837, estimated, as computed for public purposes, at 41,723,959

And they make an aggregate of 65,723,959

The expenditures for all objects, ordinary and extraordinary, in 1837, including the contingent of only $1,000,000 for usual excesses in appropriations beyond the estimates, are computed at $26,755,831, provided the unexpended appropriations at the end of this and the next year remain about equal.

Thus the new and permanent appropriations chargeable to 1837, for specified purposes, whether ordinary or extraordinary, and including what can be used without re-appropriation, are computed at $25,755,831

Of these, the permanent appropriations already made, are estimated at $2,347,000
The existing appropriations, which will not be required for these vice of 1836, and which it is proposed to apply in aid of 1837, amount to - - - - - 3,013,389

The new appropriations that will be needed for 1837, are estimated to amount, in all, to - - - - - 20,354,442

The latter are divided among the different branches of the public service, as follows, viz:

Civil, Foreign intercourse and miscellaneous	- - - - -	$2,925,671
Military service, &c.	- - - - -	10,758,431
Naval service, &c.	- - - - -	6,670,341

The details of the above estimates are exhibited in a document from the Register's office, which this Department has the honor to lay before the House of Representatives, to-day, in a separate communication.

To these have been added, for the ensuing year, on account of the usual contingent excesses of appropriations beyond the estimates, one million of dollars, making in all, as before mentioned, the aggregate of $26,755,831.

From these calculations, it will be seen that if the outstanding appropriations unexpended at the close of 1837, be as large as at the close of 1836, and the other expenditures should agree with the above estimates, they would exceed the computed revenue accruing from all sources nearly three millions, or sufficient to absorb more than half of the present surplus, which is not to be deposited with the several States. But if these outstanding appropriations, at the close of 1837, should be much less than those in 1836, as is probable; or should the accruing receipts be much less, or the appropriations made for 1837, be much larger than the estimates, a call will become necessary for a portion of the surplus deposited with the States, though it will not probably become necessary, excepting in one of those events.

4. Some explanation of the estimates for 1837.

The unusual receipts during the last two years, have chiefly accrued from the unprecedented sales of public lands.

It is remarkable, that those sales assumed their extraordinary character chiefly between July, 1835, and October, 1836—a period of little more than fourteen months.

Arising, as they have, principally from private entries, and not from any unusual quantities of land offered for public sale, and marked, as they have been, by sudden and great vibrations, it has not been deemed judicious to consider them as a proper basis for permanent estimates of a public character.

Accordingly the sum adopted for the estimates of the sales the past year, as well as that for the ensuing year, though larger than usual, has been grounded on general considerations of a less fluctuating character, leaving accidental and occasional excesses or deficiencies to happen, as they often will, without either the attempt or ability in this Department to predict the extent of them with much certainty. The receipts from customs the present year will be somewhat augmented by the great speculations which have characterized the business of the country generally, and the destruction by fire of an extraordinary amount of foreign goods near the close of the last year. This calamity, followed by credits more liberal, and competition increased to supply the sudden and large deficiencies in the market, led to an excess in the importations of merchandise during the present year, even greater than the amount destroyed, and thus essentially contributed to swell the revenue from customs beyond the estimates. But overtrading, from whatever inducements it may arise, usually produces a reaction; and it is hoped that no accident of a similar and deprecated character will occur, which may enlarge our importations the ensuing year. The receipts from customs for 1837, have, therefore, from these and other circumstances, which it might be tedious to detail, been estimated at not more than $16,500,000.

Only about $50,000 of the amount secured by special bonds from the sufferers by fire last December, under the authority of an act of Congress on that subject, has been postponed, so as to fall due within the ensuing year, while a reduction on account of the diminished rate of duty imposed on wines since July last, has been made in the estimates for 1837, equalling quite three times that sum. Besides unusual speculations and overtrading, which are temporary in their operation, the last two years have exhibited an extraordinary degree of prosperity throughout the whole country, and which, it is presumed, will continue to exercise a considerable direct influence on the whole amount of our exports and imports, and consequently an indirect influence on our receipts from customs. Much of this flattering condition of things may have arisen from the great reductions already made in the tariff and duties on tonnage; from having cast off the burthens of a national debt; from our increasing expenditures on works favorable to commerce and public security; from permanent additions to the moneyed capital of the nation by the many millions obtained abroad for foreign indemnities; from the immense fertile tracts of land redeemed from Indian claims, and opened to the profitable enterprise and industry of our citizens at very low prices, by the humane policy of removing the aborigines west of the Mississippi; from the unpreceented improvements in the facilities, the rapidity and cheapness of communication and of transportation by steamboats and railroads; from the greater safety of our foreign commerce, and its extension to new and distant regions; from abundant crops and high prices; from the increasing numbers, intelligence, and enterprise of our people generally; or from these and various other causes combined. But though some of these causes may have spent most of their influence, others are acting in full vigor, and our national prosperity does not appear likely to be soon essentially checked, except so far as the excesses before mentioned, or war, or unavoidable physical calamities, like those of pestilence and bad crops, may from time to time produce temporary regressions.

The receipts from customs, therefore, though not estimated so high, as they proved to be during the past, or preceding year, have still been computed at a larger sum than it was formerly anticipated they would, on an average, equal under the existing tariff.

The imports during the year, ending September 30th, 1836, are ascertained and estimated at	- - - - -	$173,540,000
They show, compared with the preceding year, an increase of	- - - - -	$23,644,238
The imports during the three past years have, on an average, been about	- - - - -	$149,983,691
The exports, during the past year, are ascertained and estimated at	- - - - -	$121,789,000
Of these, $101,105,000 were in domestic, and $20,684,000 in foreign products.

Compared with the preceding year, they exhibit an increase of $35,423, and are $5,829,150 more than the average for the last three years.

The crop of cotton grown the present year which will constitute the chief exports of that article for 1837, is believed to be large, but from present appearances will probably be less valuable than during the two past years.

At the same time, the exports of flour and grain are likely to be smaller, in both quantity and value, and those of tobacco and rice, which, with the articles before named, form our principal subjects of domestic produce for exportation, are not believed to be materially greater, and have seldom, during the last quarter of a century in any series of years, much exceeded their previous amount. However enlarged by our rapid increase of population has been the demand at home for those and other articles of our own growth and manufacture, the most tempting and augmenting product for exportation seems to be cotton.

During near forty years it has attracted and engrossed a large portion of the spare capital and labor of nearly half the territory of the Union, and by the great demand for it abroad, independent of its increased consumption at home, it will probably long continue to constitute, not only our chief and most profitable product for exportation, but be the regulator, in some degree, of our ability to import, and of the balance of trade, between this country and Europe.

The receipts from incidental and miscellaneous sources, have been estimated on the following data. Nothing very definite could be presented, as arising from an arrangement which, under the recent act of Congress, is contemplated with the United States Bank, in respect to the stock, owned by the Government in that institution, until further progress shall be made, and the bank may indicate when it is willing to pay some specified amount.

It will be seen, by the documents annexed, (C 1, 2, 3,) that this Department took early steps to procure suitable information for a settlement with the Bank, and payment, in the course of the present year, of the due share of the United States in the nett collections from the assets existing on the 3d of March last, as well as to obtain specific proposals for an early adjustment of the whole concern. It has been a cause of some surprise that the information desired has not yet been communicated, nor any payment been yet made. On the contrary, the president of the State corporation, to which the assets of the United States Bank have been assigned, forwarded in September last a report of a committee appointed under authority of only those two bodies, estimating the value of the stock on the 3d of March. But it was accompanied by no offer to pay that value or any other particular amount, then, or at any future specified period, though professing a willingness that the United States should receive a just proportion out of the assets of the bank.

Commissioners were, therefore, appointed, and an invitation given to have them joined by others on the part of the United States Bank, to revise the estimate of the value put on the stock by the above committee, and after urging early payments as practicable towards what might, in the end, be found due to the United States, if failing to obtain any, to recommend such arrangement as might seem just for securing and paying hereafter what they considered to be the true worth of the share of the Government in the capital stock. Copies of the letters, report, and instructions before named, are annexed. (D 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.)

It is clearly to be inferred from the correspondence had by the commissioners above mentioned with a committee of the bank, that no payment whatever is intended to be made during the present year, and that long credits are expected and considered by the bank proper for portions of what may be due. That correspondence, and all the steps which have been taken under the particular instructions given to those commissioners, will more fully appear in the further documents which will be submitted to Congress after the commissioners make their final report.

No reasonable efforts will be spared by me to conclude some appropriate arrangement of this embarrassing and troublesome subject before the adjournment of the present Congress.

Trusting, that a proper sense of its obligations to the Government, as a large stockholder, will induce the bank to refund, at least, one-fourth of our original capital, with the profits thereon, in the course of the ensuing year, two millions of dollars have on that account been inserted in the estimates. To this, are to be added the dividends, anticipated on the stock owned in the Louisville and Portland canal; interest from the deposit banks; and some small receipts from other miscellaneous sources.

5. Of the surplus in the Treasury, and the disposition of it.

Various objects of a national and constitutional character, were recommended in the last annual report from this Department, as suitable for the application, by way of extraordinary appropriation, of any surplus funds for which the General Government should happen to have no other immediate use.

Liberal and useful appropriations were fortunately made to many of them, which will save expense in the end, and prove to be the soundest economy. The reasons for a continuance of the same wise policy, while our resources remain so ample, have lost none of their original force.

As the present surplus had chiefly arisen from an earlier sale of large portions of the public lands than had been expected, it seemed to this Department judicious to suggest completing with it sooner than had been contemplated the projected fortifications, and naval establishments of the country; improving more rapidly the navigation and security of its commercial bays and rivers, and, while its imports and exports were prosperous beyond example, erecting where needed, appropriate custom and warehouses, as well as suitable marine hospitals, court-houses, and post offices. In fine, the whole state of our finances appeared to justify and require, that all those great works heretofore deemed useful and constitutional, and which are intimately connected with the duties and powers of the General Government, should be more hastened, with our means so much increased and so prematurely available, than would have been proper or practicable, had the revenue continued at only the reduced amount which was generally anticipated. By pursuing such a provident course, it was supposed, that much less would remain to be accomplished, and hence that our expenditures would be much diminished, when our revenue shall become less by the reductions, which, under the existing laws, are to take effect in the customs before, and in 1842, and which will probably happen in the receipts from public lands during that period.

The necessary expenditures of the Government would thus, by that time, become naturally, as well as safely lessened, so as to bear a near proportion to our diminished receipts; while otherwise, if the expenditures for these works are not previously increased or expedited, the probabilities would seem to be, that the ordinary charges for them, and other usual claims on the General Government, with the extraordinary charges incident to war and similar calamities, from which no people can be wholly exempt, might then so far exceed the receipts, as to require new taxation, or an increased tariff.

In respect to another branch of the subject, which relates to a gradual reduction of the present large surplus in the Treasury, either by an immediate diminution of the existing tariff, or some new regulation calculated to limit and lessen the amount of the sales of the public lands, by confining them to actual settlers or otherwise, this Department felt bound, in the discharge of its public duties, to submit to Congress last year, a few considerations which are still equally applicable. It believed that when the balance on hand, with the accruing receipts, are likely for sometime to come to exceed the real wants and just objects of the Government for expenditure, a reduction in those receipts, and especially such as are derived from taxation, is the true remedy.

Beside the considerations relating to this reduction which were formerly submitted by this Department, it would now respectfully suggest that all the duties under 20 per cent. and which amount to near three millions annually, could, with about half a million more on the articles paying a higher duty, and specified in a report to the Senate at the last session, be at once repealed by Congress without any encroachment on the principle of the act of the 3d of March, 1833. Nor has this Department any doubt that if all the present and anticipated receipts from customs are considered by Congress not to be wanted for any public appropriations, or other legitimate objects, a reduction could be made in many other duties more rapidly than is now provided for, without any essential injury to any great interest intended to be fostered by the provisions of that act. At the same time such a step as the last, unless found indispensable from high public considerations, and hence generally concurred in, does not appear to this Department consistent with the expectations of most of those who united in the passage of that law, and has not therefore been urged.

But, if found indispensable, the next articles which, in the opinion of this department, could most appropriately be selected for greater and quicker reduction, are the raw materials of foreign origin used in some of our important manufactures; and though certain rival articles produced here might suffer by such a change, yet in this way the whole manufacturing industry of the country would probably be benefited. If sufficient reduction cannot be obtained on that class, the next kind of articles selected should be such as are largely consumed in promoting the comforts, and satisfying the necessities, of the people generally, and, at the same time, do not materially compete with important manufactures, nor conflict with great agricultural interests. And the next, if more be deemed necessary, might be such as have now a much higher duty or protection on them than others of greater national consequence.

Certain it is, that a much more just and useful discrimination could be introduced into the whole present system, by reducing more quickly the duties which are found to be least beneficial, by way of protection, and by reducing more slowly those deemed most indispensable. Equally feasible would it be, in the exercise of a proper spirit of comity and justice, to make some legal enactments which should prevent the further sale of the public domain to any persons who do not want it for immediate cultivation. This seems peculiarly proper at a time when the Government neither needs the proceeds of such sales for any public use, nor considers the money received adequate to the real value of the land sold, and when the settlement of the new States is retarded, by permitting the public domain to pass, in large quantities, into the hands of others than actual settlers. By a wise revision of our present laws, the enterprising, industrious, and needy, might, for a fair compensation, be liberally secured in the purchase and enjoyment of a due portion of land for immediate cultivation; and, at the same time, all be effectually prevented from seizing and securing, as a matter of speculation, in any case, on the best tracts, without previous purchase or any pretence of title; and from procuring, through floats or otherwise, for wealthy persons, whether residents or non-residents, the most valuable situations, at the minimum prices.

It must be obvious that nothing beyond a very general, and in some degree uncertain exhibit, could at this time, be presented of the probable amount of the surplus in the Treasury, deposited with the banks, and the States during a few subsequent years; and more especially of the various sums connected with the different hypotheses, for the future disposition of it, by appropriations for public objects, or by a diminution of it through a large reduction in our future revenue from either customs or lands. The uncertainty, as to these sums, is greatly increased, not only by the fluctuating character of our receipts, from both of these sources during the last four years, and as is anticipated for the future, but from the doubtful amount of our annual expenditure, hereafter, and the absence of any determination, yet expressed by Congress, whether to retain unexpended, all or any portion of the present surplus, till after 1841, with a particular view to supply the place of the great reduction which is then to be made, in our receipts from customs, under the existing laws.

Minute details, therefore, on these points would be only hypothetical, and might, without further data on which to found them, mislead instead of proving useful.

But it is probable that Congress may deem it expedient to pursue one of the following general courses in relation to the present large surplus, and any which might hereafter accrue under our existing laws. Either to appropriate more liberally to great objects of national consequence while the Treasury is so full, and in that way gradually call for and employ the surplus till those objects are accomplished, and then to reserve only the residue if any in deposit with the States, to meet future contingencies and the anticipated deficiencies in the revenue after 1842. Or to reduce it still more rapidly by largely diminishing our revenue, whether from customs or lands, and thus requiring more of the current expenditures to be paid from the present surplus until the whole shall be exhausted; or, to permit the most of it to remain longer in deposit within the States, and so shape future appropriations as never to render it necessary to call for the surplus, except to meet unexpected and extraordinary wants.

In respect to this last measure, so far as already adopted by Congress as a temporary one, and the operation of it upon our fiscal concerns to this time and hereafter, a few further observations may be expected.

Before the two sessions of Congress just passed, it was considered doubtful whether that body would deem it expedient to adopt the recommendations of this Department to expend early on proper objects all the nett balance in the Treasury after defraying existing charges; or, if unwilling to do that, to reduce at once the revenue from customs and lands, and leave with the people the excess which would otherwise be collected, so as gradually to absorb the present surplus, and ere long to collect none of any considerable magnitude, whether for extraordinary expenditure, distribution, or other purposes. Consequently, a suggestion was made in the annual reports of 1834 and 1835, for the temporary investment of the surplus, while either of those operations might be going on, and, if neither of them was adopted, then to remain safe and productive, until it should hereafter be needed for public purposes. The proposed disposal of it for these periods, which it was expected would not be very protracted, was in a form which was considered secure and profitable by the purchase of safe stocks. Thus easily and gradually, as well as most prudently, it was supposed the inconveniences of so unexpected and embarrassing an event as a large surplus would be obviated, and at the same time a provident fund created, which would be yielding interest, and which could afterwards be resorted to, when the current expenditures might from any cause, either before or after 1841, exceed the current revenue. In relation to that subject, though, a topic still intimately and deeply connected with our finances, few additional remarks at this time, seemed called for, since Congress at the last session, by a clause in the deposit law, provided for what this Department considers, and has taken all the proper preliminary steps to make, a temporary disposition of the whole money in the Treasury on the first of January next, except five millions of dollars. Looking at that as a financial measure, which is the only view now under consideration, the granting the use of the money without any interest, constitutes a difference from the mode proposed by this Department, which was doubtless designed as a benefit to the several States, and in that view was also very properly proffered to all if to any of the States, whether now in debt or not, and whether needing the money for any great public purpose or not. While treated in the nature of a mere temporary deposit or investment on the credit of each State respectively, without interest, the profits or income of it alone to be expended, and the principal to be ever held sacred and ready for repayment whenever needed, like a fund that is providently designed to meet any future public contingencies, this kind of deposit may not embarrass our finances, and is likely to prove useful and convenient to the Treasury. But should considerable portions of it be soon wanted by the General Government, the deposit will probably occasion, to many of the States, inconvenience and difficulties, if not losses, in the management and repayment of it, more than equivalent to the interest received. On the contrary, if much of it be not wanted for some years, or till after 1841, the result may be otherwise to such States as either need the money, or are able to employ it beneficially. The experience of this Department has been too brief, under the constant and laborious preparation, to carry into effect, in due time, all the provisions in the late deposit act, to warrant, on the present occasion, any recommendations of modifications in this particular portion of it. But it is respectfully suggested, that, though a gradual investment of the surplus in existing State stocks, would, it is believed, have produced no pressure in the money market, yet the embarrassments incident to the transfers of such large sums of money, as became necessary, in order to divide it seasonably among a greater number of banks, as well as among the different States, and the consequent temporary withdrawal of considerable portions of it from immediate use, are embarrassments inseparable from the provisions and faithful execution of the law in its present form. Though they constitute only a portion of those evils which now afflict the commercial community, and have been mitigated in their operation by this Department, wherever practicable, they could not be wholly obviated, without departing entirely from the duties imposed by the law.

Immediately after its passage, steps were taken, as required by Congress, to commence a reduction of the deposits, which had then accumulated in certain banks beyond three-fourths the amount of their capitals, and at the same time to have some portion of the anticipated surplus taken from States where its accumulation had been large or inconvenient; and placed, before the first of January next, in States where enough had not before been deposited, and where suitable banks existed willing to receive it. These steps will be more fully detailed in a subsequent part of this report. All the payments to the several States for the whole year, are expected to be made punctually at the times required. But it will be necessary, from the mode of keeping public accounts, to take the current statement of the Treasurer on the 1st of January next, as the guide for the supposed amount in the Treasury which is required to be apportioned among the States, and one quarter of it to be deposited on that day. By pursuing any other course, an unavoidable delay of weeks, if not months, would be necessary in making the preliminary arrangements for the first payment. But that statement seldom differs more than a few hundred dollars from the result as ascertained on subsequent settlement; and hence, its amount, independent of unavailable funds, and what is held for the Post Office and Patent Office, and in various special trusts, will be deemed the true sum intended by Congress as subject to apportionment, after deducting five millions, unless in the mean time the Department shall be otherwise directed by that body.

The whole sum to be deposited with the States, will, on these principles, and according to present appearances, range between thirty-five and thirty-eight millions of dollars, and exceed somewhat $120,000 to each electoral vote in each of the twenty-five States, now in the Union; Michigan, from the language of the act, not being considered as yet entitled to an apportionment under it. Three States have already signified their willingness to receive the money on the terms proposed, and it is expected that several more will do the same before the first of January, and probably most of them in the course of the present winter.

Leaving further suggestions on these and various other considerations which bear on this interesting subject, but which need not be here repeated, the Department will next proceed to an exhibit of the manner in which this surplus, as well as the rest of the public money, has been kept during the past year, and of the detailed preparations which have been made for the future custody and preservation of it, in conformity to the act of Congress to regulate the deposits of the public money passed June 23, 1836, and the supplementary act on the same subject passed the 4th of July, 1836.

6. Of the keeping of the public money, and state of the deposit banks.

The money in the Treasury has been safely kept during the year 1836. Until July last, as during the two previous years, it was placed in the State banks, selected according to the discretion of this Department, on account of their high standing and favorable position for fiscal purposes, and regulated in a manner considered most secure to the Treasury, and convenient to the community, as well as useful to all concerned. It is a source of much gratification to be able to add, that, while so selected and employed, not a single dollar was lost to the Government by any of them, or a single failure occurred to transfer promptly, and pay out satisfactorily, the public money entrusted to their custody.

Nor is it believed that the domestic exchanges of the country were ever lower or more regular than during that period; and the large amount of them performed by those deposit banks in ordinary purchases or discounts, equalling from one hundred and fifty to two hundred millions of dollars yearly, or near a third more than those of the same kind by the United States Bank, while the fiscal agent of the Government, evinced the great ability and usefulness of those banks on this important subject.

But since the passage of the act of Congress, June 23d, 1836, "to regulate the deposits of the public money," most of the discretionary power before exercised by this Department on this subject, under previous laws and long usages, has been considered as no longer possessed, and various solicitations to use it, though some of them were in cases of extreme hardship, could not, therefore, be complied with. Relieved from great responsibility, and in many cases from much delicacy, in the exercise of it, by the passage of that act, a new system, in conformity with its provisions, and in place of the former one, was at once commenced by this Department, and has since been pursued with all the strictness and regularity which the nature of business so extensive and complicated would permit, and at the same time with every indulgence and forbearance, in cases of embarrassment or suffering, which were permissible without a violation of law. It was necessary by the act to appoint anew all the former deposit banks, if they were to be retained in the service of the Government. Accordingly, the preliminary inquiries, rendered proper by the new law before any selection was authorized to be made, were immediately instituted in every case of the former deposit banks; and having been satisfactorily answered, all of them have been reappointed, except three, where some formalities in their papers are not yet completed.

The provision in the act which prohibits more public money to be left in any one bank than three-fourths the amount of its capital, rendered the selection of numerous new banks to receive the sums which the old ones were not allowed to retain, indispensable in the present overflowing condition of the Treasury, and especially at places in which the capitals of the old banks were small.

The transfer of all the money in the Treasury, except five millions, on the first of January next, to be deposited in the treasuries of the several States quarterly during 1837, in ratable proportions, made it proper to select also a few other new banks in some of the States to receive those proportions, or sufficient parts of them, when they happened to be either collected there, or to be incidentally and easily transferable there.

Thus the trouble and embarrassment of a second and sudden transfer in January next, and quarterly thereafter during the year, were often saved by combining in several appropriate cases the transfers ordered by Congress to be soon made from banks having an excess, with the transfers of that excess to other banks in the States where it was to be paid during the present year on appropriations, or the ensuing year on the apportionments and in which last described banks and States a deficiency existed. In this way, on several occasions, the opportunity has been improved, of beginning to perfect, gradually, and, in some degree, contemporaneously, between places near, suitable, and of easy intercommunication, the great and difficult apportionment of the deposits of public money among several different States, as well as among different banks. The whole amount of transfers ordered since the first of July last, have, of necessity, been at times very large; but many of them have not yet taken effect; many more are still to be ordered, and the whole amount necessary to accomplish both objects will be less, and their operation easier, than if a different course had been pursued, and the two apportionments between the banks and the States, had not been united in cases where practicable and convenient, and where large accumulations existed on the one hand to be reduced, and deficiencies on the other to be supplied. Their union in such cases is supposed to have been specially contemplated by Congress, as explained in the second and supplementary deposit act passed in July, and, as seemed just to the several States which had not before enjoyed much, if any benefit from the deposit and use of the public money within their limits. Hence, while many transfers have been forborne, when feasible under the law, and desired from public considerations, connected with the great pressure in the money market, and which pressure they would, though authorized by the acts, have severely aggravated, yet great care has been employed not to make a single transfer, except, in the language of the first deposit act, "to facilitate the public disbursements, and to comply with the provisions of the act;" or, as described more fully in the second act, either "to prevent large and inconvenient accumulation in particular places, or in order to produce a due equality and just proportion, according to the provisions of said act." All the transfers ordered, have likewise been so modified in respect to time, place, and business, as to produce the least inconvenience and expense possible to the banks or the community, consistent with faithful endeavors to execute the law on both subjects seasonably and efficiently. They have been so conducted, as also to relieve the Treasury from any expense whatever in a financial operation so large and unusual. But in carrying out so large a moneyed operation as the new law demanded, and one neither comporting with our usual fiscal proceedings, nor following the ordinary channels of trade, it has required great caution not to create more embarrassment than has really occurred from this source, and a greater derangement in exchanges than actually exists. In complying with the deposit act, it has already been found necessary to appoint forty-eight more banks, making on the first instant, with the former ones, without their branches, the whole number of eighty-one. The Department has endeavored in these selections to conform to the spirit of the act of Congress, as regards their convenient location for accommodating either the collections or the disbursements of the public money. It has in all cases required the preliminary information made necessary by the act. It has, as enjoined, chosen at least one bank in every State, which had banking institutions, and which included all except Missouri and Arkansas. It has obtained from each bank a written agreement to comply with the duties prescribed by law, and in every case, except four or five not deemed suitable, from peculiar circumstances, has received collateral security for the faithful fulfilment of these agreements, and has endeavored, from time to time, to make such requests on the subject of specie and other topics connected with their condition, and their mode of transacting business, as seemed conducive to safety and public convenience. The names of each deposit bank, with the amount of public money in each, and its detailed condition, in all respects, near the first of November, 1836, are exhibited in the documents annexed (E 1, 2.) In another document (F,) is presented, more fully and recently, the condition of those banks with this Department, as it shows by their last returns to the Treasurer, on the first instant, the amount of public money then on hand, the outstanding drafts then against them, and the existing transfers to and from each bank.

A number of the States now have deposits sufficient, with the accruing revenue, to meet all the probable demands within their limits the next year. But it is otherwise with several of them, and, where money has not yet been placed in each State sufficient to meet the probable amount of deposits required there during the first quarter of the next year, for expenditure, as well as apportionment, it has been, or will be, put under orders of transfer, so as to reach there seasonably.

Numerous difficult and embarrassing questions have arisen in the execution of the new deposit act, in consequence of the novelty of many of its provisions, and the unequal operation of others on some of the depositories. But where great doubts existed, as to the true intention of the law, the opinion of the Attorney General has been taken. When that opinion has been unfavorable to the views entertained, under the law as it now stands, the parties have been left, as they must always be, in such cases of supposed inequality and hardship, to resort to Congress for appropriate relief.

It is therefore respectfully suggested, that relief for the past, may be proper, in several cases, which it is anticipated the parties interested will present to the consideration of Congress. For the convenience of this Department, it is desirable that a provision be made for the future, that any agency furnishing ample security, be regarded under the law, as having the same separate capital where established, as the bank to which it belongs.

It is further recommended, that authority be given to discontinue such of the newly selected banks, as may from time to time be no longer needed for fiscal or other purposes. A large portion of them, after the contemplated deposits are made with the several States, will probably, become entirely useless to the Treasury, while their returns and correspondence will continue to be burdensome to all concerned.

Immediately after the passage of the law, it became the duty of this Department, among other things, to select a sufficient number of banks to hold the public money without exceeding three-fourths of the amount of their capitals, and one at least in each State having banks. As it seemed impossible to carry these provisions into execution in several of the States, unless banks should be selected which might possibly have issued or paid out some small bills after the 4th of July, and before they had completed the agreement, and assumed the duties imposed by the act, it was thought that a natural construction given to this limitation in that respect, would make it applicable only to such banks as were selected and subject to the law previous to that date, and that the others must not on a like principle make any such issues after their selection. This would impart a reasonable and practical effect to the clause, and at the same time not tend entirely to defeat the operation of other provisions in the act. Accordingly, minute inquiries were not instituted whether the banks applying to be selected had previous to their application issued such bills or not; but all were required at the time of their selection, to enter into an express written agreement to conform to the provisions of the act, and consequently not to issue any while they were public depositories. On more mature reflection, doubts having arisen whether this was going far enough, and whether any banks which may have issued small bills between the 4th of July and their selection could, in strict law, be retained, or could have been legally appointed, it was deemed proper to take the opinion of the Attorney General on this point. He confirmed these doubts, but recommended the submission of the subject to Congress, before discontinuing any of the banks, which upon investigation might appear to have made such issues before entering into the agreement.

The Department would, therefore, respectfully recommend that an act be passed, sanctioning the selection and continuance of deposit banks which may be so situated, provided such banks have not issued or paid out small bills after their appointment as public depositories.

7. Of the Mint and the Currency.

On the subject of the Mint and the new coinage, the Department is gratified to state that, by means of additional appropriations, of improvements in machinery, and of an ample supply of metal for coining, through the fortunate remittances to this country of the French, Spanish, and Neapolitan indemnities, in gold, more money has been, and will be, coined during the present, than in any previous year since the foundation of the Government. The whole amount, from the 1st of January, 1836, to the 1st of November, 1836, has been in gold, $3,619,440; in silver, $2,877,000, and in copper, $22,634. The sums transferred to the Mint in aid of the coinage, under a clause in the late deposit act, have amounted to $700,000. When the annual report of the Director is made on the 1st of January next, a more minute account of all his operations, with his views on these transfers, will be presented, accompanied by such suggestions for further legislation on the subject as his experience may lead him to consider useful.

The Mint and its branches would, in my opinion, be more efficiently assisted by means of appropriations, rather than mere transfers, to supply fully and promptly the additional coinage, which the additional wants of the community may from time to time require. The Department is still convinced, for reasons formerly urged on the consideration of Congress, that a gold coin of one dollar in value might be very convenient and useful to the public in many of the ordinary transactions of society. The branch mints are all in progress, and will probably be completed by June next, and their machinery at a still earlier day. The coinage in them can commence immediately after their completion, if the proper appropriations are in the mean time made, and the proper officers appointed. The greatly increased quantity of gold now existing in the country, amounts, probably, to upwards of $15,000,000. For this, we are chiefly indebted to the new valuation of our coin, though some influence must be ascribed to the efforts made by the General Government, and most of the States, to suppress the circulation of small bills, as well as to the favorable condition of our foreign exchanges since 1834, and the policy of ordering home the foreign indemnities in gold, and encouraging public payments to be, in part, made with this kind of coin. At this time, the abundance of gold here is such as to have produced increased facility in distant specie operations, and it is becoming more widely and beneficially diffused over the different sections of the Union, to the greater accommodation of most classes of people, particularly in travelling and exchanges, and to the permanent improvement of our circulating medium. The amount of gold coined since the new valuation in 1834, has been near $10,000,000, and has exceeded by one or two millions the whole amount coined in the thirty-one previous years which had elapsed, after the mint went into operation. The amount coined during the past twelve months alone is greater than that during the whole of the first sixteen years after its establishment. Another important and gratifying consequence which has resulted principally from the present policy and system as to the currency, has been, that of all the gold coined before August, 1834, amounting to about $12,000,000, probably not $1,000,000 then remained in the country; of that small amount only a very diminutive portion was in active circulation.

Indeed, before 1834 our coinage of gold was of little benefit except to purify and prepare the bullion for exportation and for the use of foreign mints.

But the great mass of near $10,000,000, since coined, undoubtedly remains in the country, and an increased and increasing proportion of it, is in active and convenient circulation. To promote this desirable end, a larger portion than usual of quarter eagles has been recently struck, and the whole number of gold pieces of every kind made since the beginning of the present year is about 1,000,000, and almost equals the entire number coined during the whole for years previous to the new coinage. The change in the amount of specie of all kinds in the country, during the last three years, is highly gratifying, as an earnest of a more solid basis to a paper circulation already too large in proportion, and as a security not only to those classes who are most safe in the employment of a metallic currency for all common purposes, but to the banking institutions themselves in periods of panic and unfavorable balances in foreign trade. The whole specie in the country in October, 1833, when the public deposits were removed from the United States Bank, did not probably exceed $30,000,000, and the portion of this in banks is not supposed to have exceeded $26,000,000; while now the whole specie in the country probably exceeds $73,000,000, and of that the portion in banks is believed to be over $45,000,000, leaving $28,000,000 in active circulation.

The paper circulation within the above period, has also been greatly and unfortunately enlarged. From about $80,000,000, which was then the supposed aggregate after deducting the large amount of $20,000,000 for notes held in different banks, it has probably risen, and chiefly within eighteen months past, to about $120,000,000. But this increase, though great, it will be seen is not half so great a relative increase as has taken place in the whole specie in the country, nor quite as great as has happened in the specie in the banks alone. Computing that the paper in active circulation in the United States has generally averaged about two to one of specie on hand in the banks, and was, in October, 1833, about three to one, or near 50 per cent: over the usual proportion, the comparative amounts of specie at the several returns, from 1833 to 1836, presented a very favorable change, had become greater than the usual proportion, and even now, in all the banks, taken as a whole, are somewhat improved since 1833. But they have much deteriorated the last year and a half. Again: While the whole amount, as well as proportion of specie in the country, is much greater than it was two years ago, and the proportion is ample for the paper circulation in several of the banks and States; yet it is manifest that many institutions in other States have of late departed more widely from the proper and safe proportions than their peculiar location or advantages for business, however favorable, might warrant on sound banking principles. As some illustration of the general changes on those points since 1833, the following brief exhibit in round numbers, and in a tabular form, prepared partly from actual returns, and partly from estimates, may be useful.

Dates.	Paper in active circulation.	Specie in active circulation.	Specie in banks.
Near
Oct. 1833,	80,000,000	4,000,000	25,000,000
1 Jan. 1834,	76,000,000	12,000,000	27,000,000
1 Jan. 1835,	82,000,000	18,000,000	43,000,000
1 Jan. 1836,	108,000,000	23,000,000	40,000,000
1 Dec 1836,	120,000,000	28,000,000	45,000,000

At all these periods, except the 1st of January last, twenty millions of paper have been computed as issued, but not in active circulation among the people, being held by other banks, and so far considered as equivalent to a deduction of a like amount from their own circulation, liable to be redeemed in specie. On the first of January last, the amount so held was about thirty-two millions; and in July last the active paper circulation was also probably some millions larger than it now is. This exhibit makes the whole active circulation of both paper and specie, about $6 50 per head of our whole estimated population in October, 1833; about $6 50 in January, 1834; about $7 in January, 1835; about $8 50 in January, 1836; and near $10 at the present time. Though this is a less proportion of circulating medium than is now usual in the countries of Europe, which are most commercial, and where specie is more used than bills, yet it is a larger ratio than has ever been supposed to be necessary. In the United States, considering the character of two or three millions of our southern population. The average here has usually been about $6 per head. Nor has the amount ever before 1811 been supposed much to exceed $5, and at no time since has exceeded about $7 per head, except under the excessive paper issues towards the close of the late war, by which, in 1816, it was estimated to have reached $11 per head.

While our country has, of late years, become more commercial and wealthy, and has a larger portion of specie in use, which circumstances would somewhat increase the necessary and proper amount of circulation per head, it has, as counteracting causes to these, greatly increased in the ease and quickness of communication, whether by mail or otherwise, and in the use of bills of exchange and drafts, instead of money, for distant operations. Hence our circulation, during the past twelve months, at $8 50 and $10 per head, is deemed excessive, and as in 1816, one great cause of the exorbitant prices which have prevailed in relation to almost every article, as well as of the extraordinary propensity to overtrading and speculation which has pervaded almost every section of the country. It is true that during a few months past the paper portion of our circulation has, as before suggested, been considerably reduced; but till that, with our present large amount of specie in circulation added, falls as low as about $7 per head, or the bank notes, to about $80,000,000, instead of $120,000,000, the currency may be considered as too redundant, and in an unnatural and inflated condition. The credit system has not only undergone an unusual expansion among individuals and States, but it has, by means of these inordinate paper issues, penetrated more deeply than is safe into the whole currency of the country, and rendered that which, as money, is and should be deemed the substitute or antagonist of credit, dependent too much on credit itself, and subject to many of the dangers and fluctuations in value inseparable from mere credit, rather than possessing the intrinsic and uniform value attached to specie.

This condition is believed to have been produced chiefly by numerous incorporations of new banks, without suitable legal restrictions, in many States, on the amount either of discounts or of paper issued, in proportion to the specie on hand; and by the excessive demands for money, thus tempted and stimulated, to aid an unusual number of extravagant adventurers in lands, stocks and trade.

These, acting together, and in some degree influencing and exciting each other, have induced many banks to hazard unreasonable and indiscreet issues, as well as loans, to supply the wants of such an extraordinary crisis, and which there is good reason to believe, (however large a proportion of specie fortunately exists in the country, and which may tend sooner to avert the usual evil consequences from the above state of things,) will produce much distress, embarrassment and ruin, before this specie can be duly equalized, the excesses of paper sufficiently curtailed, and the exorbitant discounts gradually lessened to their safe and proper limits. This increase of about forty millions or one-third of the paper circulation in a year and a half, is a sudden and great fluctuation, which never could occur in a currency entirely metallic, and which would probably during the past year, as in 1811, have been much greater, had not the larger proportion of specie now in the country, and the increasing disuse of small bills, operated strongly as preventive checks.

But even now the excess has been sufficient to constitute the chief cause for the artificial augmentation in prices, an unnatural stimulus to speculation, and a rapid vacillation in the regular modes of doing business, which cannot, under sound views of political economy, be too greatly deprecated, or their recurrence too carefully guarded against. These sudden and great vibrations in the value of property, labor and debts, however produced, or however flattering to many at first, are in the end dangerous to all classes, as well as ruinous to commerce, and every species of regular industry.

But should paper issues, according to anticipation, continue to be reduced, as during the four months past, by the natural and conservative reaction of commercial causes, at home and abroad, and by the general, wise, and increasing discontinuance of the use of small bank notes through State legislation, and provisions of a similar character and tendency by Congress, as at the last session, in the general appropriation act, and in the deposit law, and by the diminished receipt of all bank notes, the last few months at the different land offices for the sales of the public domain, a sounder and less artificial state of things will ere long return.

The prospect on the subject of the currency is, therefore, on the whole, becoming more satisfactory, even without further legislation. But if all the States would unite in repressing entirely the circulation of small notes, and in rigidly restricting all paper issues, so as not in any case to exceed three to one of specie on hand, which would be about two of paper in active circulation to one of specie on hand, and would add a few judicious limitations on the amount of discounts as compared with the capital and deposits, and on the safe kind of security to be taken for them, with the requirement of frequent publicity of their condition in detail, and of rigid accountability to periodical examinations by legislative authority, the time is not distant when our currency would become quite stable. Indeed, it deserves consideration, whether, under such circumstances, the whole monopolies of banking might not, with public advantage, be entirely abolished, and the banking privilege, under the above general restraints, securities, limitations and requirements, might not, particularly if the personal liability of the stockholders is superadded, safely be thrown open to all.

A larger amount of tax or bonus to the States would probably be thus collected, without any increase in the usual rate; and, it is believed, that the interest now paid by borrowers, would by these changes become at an early day sensibly reduced. But without the most careful and rigid restrictions, such a measure in this country, whatever may have been its operations elsewhere, would, under our different institutions and habits, probably increase, rather than diminish, any existing evils in the currency.

It is conceded that these disproportionate issues by banking institutions, are, in fact, much more frequent in regions where the number of banks is small, than where it is large, provided their charters be similar, in omitting prudent limitations. Because, in the former case, there is less vigilance, caution, and correction, produced by the jealousies and interests of rival institutions to prevent excessive issues, and irregular and dangerous discounts.

But the tendency to excessive trading, excessive credits, and rash enterprises, is so strong, and sometimes ungovernable, in individuals, and in some respects equally, or more so in corporations, as to endanger the stability of both banks and business, unless the power to manufacture paper money is carefully restricted and wisely regulated. The present amount of bank capital, as well as its increase for some years past, is another kindred topic of some interest. But space does not exist on this occasion, for its full exposition, and at the same time, it is not very alarming, except where it has been authorized without proper limitation on paper issues, and without other prudent bank restrictions.

The whole bank capital in active operation, is computed to have been over

$200,000,000	in 1833-4
231,000,000	in 1834-5
250,000,000	in 1835-6

And near fifty millions more has been authorized, most of which is supposed not yet to be in full operation.

More facts will be exhibited on these points, and particularly on the amount of bank capital in each State, in a special report, soon to be presented from this Department to Congress, concerning the detailed condition of the State banks near the 1st of January, 1836.

Had it not been for large sales of American stocks abroad, and the very high prices given there for our principal staples, a demand for specie, for export, would doubtless have arisen ere this from our overtrading, and have greatly enhanced the present difficulties which some of the banks now experience chiefly from the great excess of paper in circulation. The comparative value of specie being reduced by such excesses, the evil would have been still more aggravated, if those excesses had not become somewhat diminished, and specie had not become in greater demand here, in consequence of the circular, as to the kind of money receivable for the public lands, issued by direction of the President in July last. This demand has contributed to retain and diffuse it wider, and to make its great and early export less probable, than it otherwise would have been. The other objects of that circular were gradually to bring back the practice in those payments to what was deemed to be the true spirit, as well as letter of our existing laws, and to what the safety of the public money in the deposit banks, and the desirable improvement of our currency, seemed at that time to unite in rendering judicious. The reasons, more in detail, for the measure, are contained in the document itself, of which a copy is annexed. (G) Our moneyed operations have also been somewhat affected by a few difficulties abroad, in the nation with which our commercial intercourse is greatest, and whose monetary system of late years, often beating with a pulse like our own, is under influences nearly corresponding.

Since 1833 the paper circulation in England is supposed to have increased over sixteen millions of dollars, while the specie possessed by the banks has diminished over twenty-three millions. The whole circulation of private banks, joint stock banks, and the Bank of England, is now probably about 152,000,000 of paper to less than 26,000,000 of specie on hand; whereas in 1833 it was only about 137,000,000 to 50,000,000 of specie, or now from five and six to one, but then only two and three to one. Consequently, an alarm and pressure have arisen there, which are operating unfavorably here, though they have arisen not so much from an excessive amount of both the paper and specie currency united, as from the greatly increased disproportion being quite doubled between the paper issues and the specie on hand by all the banks. What portion of their paper was, or is now, held by each other, is not known; but as the bills of the Bank of England are a tender by all the private and joint stock banks, the amount is probably large. Their banking system, as a whole, with every supposed benefit to be derived from a national bank, is believed to be under much more defective regulations, as to excessive issues, excessive discounts, and secrecy of condition and proceedings, than is our own in most of the States of the Union. Indeed so unsatisfactory has been its operations, that they have recently become the subject of parliamentary inquiry, which is it proposed to resume and push much further at a subsequent session.

8. Land Office.

Immediately after the passage of the law at the last session, re-organizing the General Land Office, some doubts arose whether it still remained attached to the Treasury Department, and the opinion of the Attorney General was taken on the question. In consequence of his opinion, that the supervision over its concerns remained here, and of the direction of the President of the United States, under whose control that law now places all the affairs of the General Land Office, steps were taken by me to carry it into immediate effect.

The result has thus far been a sensible diminution in the pressure of the business of that office; a better system of supervision and despatch for most of it, and much less delay in completing titles to the public domain. Should the sales not continue very large during a few ensuing years, it is believed, that the whole arrearages of business can be disposed of, and the promptitude in all its future operations secured, which is so immediately important to the great western and southwestern sections of the country, and more or less beneficial to all, as well as creditable to the administration of the Government. The report of the Commissioner will speedily be laid before Congress in a separate communication and contains many suggestions, which seem to deserve careful attention.

9. Miscellaneous.

Great inconveniences have been sustained in many parts of the country, by an omission to repeal or modify the provisions in the tariff act of 1832.

A detailed report on this subject has once been submitted by this Department; and the interests of the community, connected with the articles of hardware, affected by these provisions, and convenience in the execution of the revenue laws, appear to require the earliest attention of Congress to the subject.

The revision of the present system of compensation to custom-house officers, with the various changes in our collection laws, heretofore recommended in connection with that revision, is deemed very important to the mercantile community, as well as to the Treasury, and at the same time to the just and rateable compensation for arduous and responsible duties to many collectors, and other officers who are now inadequately paid, while some receive an amount disproportioned to their situation and labors.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

BY BLAIR & RIVES.

—WEEKLY—

PRICE $1 PER SESSION.

24TH CONG.....2D SESS.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1836.

VOLUME 4.....No. 2.

In connection with this subject, and in addition to former recommendations to Congress, as well as the valuable report on the safety of steam boilers, submitted at the last session from the Franklin Institute, it seems proper to urge earnestly for consideration the necessity of some provision for the more careful management of steamboats navigated under papers from the custom houses—subjecting their commanders, and in suitable cases their owners, to the forfeiture of their papers, and other severe penalties, in cases of carelessness or neglect, destructive to property or life.

The security of the public money would be promoted in many cases, by requiring bonds from district attorneys through the hands of some of whom large sums pass, in collections, without any collateral obligations being given for the indemnity of the United States, as required in most analogous cases of public officers.

The act in respect to insolvent debtors, the execution of which is placed in the charge of this Department, expires in June next, and the propriety of the further continuance of its provisions is suggested to Congress.

The four first instalments due, under the French treaty, have been paid in Paris, since my last annual report. The sum claimed by our agent, and by this Department, exceeds that paid by the French Government, in the amount of more than a million of francs, and the difference is now, the subject of correspondence and negotiation. What was actually paid has been remitted to this country in gold, and divided among the claimants. From the rates of exchange and price of gold, it was deemed most advantageous to the claimants to have it sent home in that form, though a direction was subsequently given to substitute bills of exchange or other modes of remittance, if more profitable, but which the agent did not find it expedient or beneficial to do.

The third instalment of the Neapolitan indemnity, and the first payments due on the inscriptions under the treaty of indemnity with Spain, have also been since discharged with punctuality, and remitted here in a similar manner under similar instructions.

Various other topics suggested in the two last annual reports to the consideration of Congress, and not yet finally legislated on, the Department would earnestly, but respectfully, present again to its attention. Among them may be more particularly mentioned the reorganization of this Department, and the change in the commencement of the fiscal year and of the annual appropriations.

Several other subjects have received proper attention, which are connected with the official duties of the Treasury, or have been specially devolved on its charge; such as the repairs of the bridge across the Potomac, the survey of the coast, and the manufacture of weights and measures, not only for the different custom-houses, but for each State in the Union; the appropriate sites for new marine hospitals, the practices pursued in other countries as to the transportation of their poor citizens hither, who have been burdensome for their maintenance, a digest of the returns and condition of State banks near January first, 1836, the sums disbursed under each appropriation made the present year, and more detailed exhibits of all the contingent expenditures of the Department.

The most important of these will at an early day be made the subject of separate communications. All which is respectfully submitted by

LEVI WOODBURY,
Secretary of the Treasury.

HON. JAMES K. POLK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS. SECOND SESSION.

IN SENATE,
MONDAY, DEC. 12, 1836.

The following Senators appeared and took their seats:

The Hon. JOHN BLACK, the Hon. D WEBSTER, and the Hon. N. P. TALLMADGE.

A message was received from the President of the United States by his Private Secretary, ANDREW JACKSON, Jr.

Mr. BENTON presented a petition from the heirs of Gen. William Eaton; which was laid on the table.

Mr. ROBBINS obtained leave, and introduced a bill for the more equitable administration of the Navy Pension Fund. Read a first time and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. EWING of Ohio, in pursuance of notice given, introduced the following joint resolution, which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Treasury order of the eleventh day of July, anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, designating the funds which should be receivable in payment for public lands, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Resolved, also, That it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to delegate to any person, or to any corporation, the power of directing what funds shall be receivable for customs, or for the public lands; nor shall he make any discrimination in the funds so receivable, between different individuals, or between the different branches of the public revenue.

On motion of Mr. PRENTISS, leave was given to Jonathan Dean to withdraw his petition and papers.

Mr. MOORE asked and obtained leave to report bills for the relief of John McCartney, William East, and Samuel Miller; which were read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. BENTON, in pursuance of notice given, introduced a bill to establish a foundry; an armory in the west and southwest; arsenals in the States in which none have yet been established; and depots for arms in certain States and Territories; which were read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. BENTON also, in pursuance of notice given, reported a bill granting a township of land to the French University of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. TIPTON reported a bill to authorize Peter Warner to purchase a half section of land; which was read a first time and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. TIPTON also reported a bill to provide for the exchange of land with certain Indian tribes; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. BENTON gave notice that he would, on tomorrow, introduce a bill granting a certain quantity of land to the State of Missouri for internal improvements.

Mr. MORRIS gave notice, that he would, on tomorrow, introduce a bill to prohibit the sales of public lands, except to actual settlers, in limited quantities.

Mr. BENTON called up the resolution submitted by him on Thursday last, relative to printing the Annual Report on Commerce and Navigation.

Mr. KNIGHT moved the following as a substitute therefor:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the annual statement of the commerce and navigation of the United States, be hereafter printed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and communicated as soon as possible after the commencement of each stated session of Congress; and that said statement be printed in the same form, and at the same price as the ordinary printing of the two Houses of Congress; that the same number of copies as are usually printed, be furnished for the purpose of binding and distribution; and that 5,000 additional copies be equally distributed to the members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. BENTON expressed his willingness to accept the modification, provided that the words "three thousand" be inserted, instead of five.

Mr. KNIGHT then amended the resolution accordingly; and the same, as amended, was passed, and ordered to be engrossed.

The bill for the better organization of the District Courts of the United States in the State of Alabama, which lay on the table, was taken up and read a second time.

On motion of Mr. KING of Alabama, the Senate, in pursuance of its order, proceeded to the election of a Secretary of the Senate.

On the first ballot Mr. Dickens received 20 votes, Mr. Naudain 18, Mr. Young 1, Mr. Bryan 1, blank 1. There being 41 votes given, and it requiring 21 votes to elect, consequently there was no choice.

On the second ballot there were 40 votes cast, 21 necessary to a choice; Mr. Dickens received 21, Mr. Naudain 18, Mr. Bryan 1. Mr. Dickens having obtained a majority of the whole number of votes given, was declared duly elected.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, informing the Senate that the House had passed a joint resolution for the appointment of a Committee on the Library, and had appointed the committee on its part.

Mr. BENTON offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the present copper coinage of the United States, and of substituting therefor a coinage of mixed metal, compounded of copper and silver, and called in the French mints billon. Also, that the said committee inquire into the expediency of directing a gold coin of the value of one dollar to be stamped at the mints of the United States.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, the Senate proceeded to the election of chairmen of the Standing Committees, which resulted as follows:

Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.—Buchanan 21, Clay 14, King of Alabama 1, King of Georgia 1.—Mr. Buchanan elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Finance.—Wright 20, Southard 1, Webster 15, Tallmadge 1, blank 1.—Mr. Wright elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Commerce.—King of Alabama 20, Davis 14, Tomlinson 1, Niles 2, King of Georgia 1, blank 1.—Mr. King of Alabama elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Manufactures.—Niles 22, Knight 13, Moore 1, blanks 5.—Mr. Niles elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.—Page 20, Brown 14, Swift 1, blank 1.—Mr. Page elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.—Benton 26, Crittenden 5, Wall 2, Tipton 1, McKean 1, blanks 2.—Mr. Benton elected.

Chairman of the Committee on the Militia.—Wall 19, Robinson 12, Grundy 3, McKean 1, Tipton 1, blank 1.—Mr. Wall elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.—Rives 20, Southard 14, Tallmadge 1, Cuthbert 1, blanks 3.—Mr. Rives elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.—Walker 21, Ewing of Ohio 12, Morris 1, Southard 1, blanks 4.—Mr. Walker elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims.—Linn 19, Black 15, Ewing of Ohio 1

Fulton 1, Hubbard 1, Wright 1, blanks 2. No person having a majority of all the votes, there was no election. Second ballot.—Linn 21, Black 17, blank 1—Mr. Linn elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.—White 29, Sevier 2, Cuthbert 1, McKean 1, blanks 5—Mr. White elected.

Chairman of the Committee of Claims.—Hubbard 19, Swift 10, Ewing of Ohio 2, Tallmadge 1, Southard 1, Brown 1, Tipton 1, King of Georgia 1, blank 1—Mr. Hubbard elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.—Brown 18, Moore 13, blanks 2—Mr. Brown elected.

Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.—Grundy 21, Prentiss 11, Crittenden 2, Webster 2, Tallmadge 1, blank 1—Mr. Grundy elected.

Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.—Robinson 22, Ewing of Ohio 7, Davis 3, Fulton 1, Ewing of Illinois 1, blank 1—Mr. Robinson elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Roads and Canals.—Hendricks 27, King of Georgia 1, blanks 3—Mr. Hendricks elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Pensions.—Tomlinson 31, Prentiss 1, blanks 3—Mr. Tomlinson elected.

Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.—Kent 21, King of Georgia 12, Southard 2, King of Alabama 1—Mr. Kent elected.

Chairman of the Committee on Engrossed Bills.—Morris 23, Ruggles 5, Niles 1, Hubbard 1, Fulton 1, McKean 2—Mr. Morris elected.

Mr. TIPTON offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect for the memory of the Hon. G. L. KINNARD, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Indiana, the Senate will go into mourning by wearing crape on the left arm for thirty days.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

MONDAY, Dec. 12, 1836.

The Standing Committees of the House, appointed by the Speaker, were announced from the Clerk's table, as follows:

Of Ways and Means.—Messrs. Cambreleng, McKim, Loyal, Corwin, Johnson of Tenn. Smith, Lawrence, Ingersoll, and Owens.

On Public Lands.—Messrs. Boon of Ind. Williams of N. C. Lincoln, Casey, Kennon, Dunlap, Chapman, Harrison of Mo. and Yell.

Of Elections.—Messrs. Claiborne of Va. Griffin, Hawkins, Burns, Kilgore, Buchanan, Maury, Boyd, and Young.

Of Claims.—Messrs. Whittlesey of Ohio, Fennell, Grennell, Davis, Taliaferro, Chambers of Ky. Darlington, Graham, and Russell.

On Commerce.—Messrs. Sutherland, Pinckney, Pearce of R. I. Gillet, Phillips, Johnson of La. Ingham, Cushman, and McKean.

On the Post Office and Post Roads.—Messrs. Connor, Briggs, Laporte, Hall of Vt. Cleveland, French Shields, Hopkins, and Kilgore.

For the District of Columbia.—Messrs. W. B. Sheppard of N. C. Heister, Bouldin, Washington, Lane, Rodgers, Fairfield, Moore, and Claiborne of Miss.

On Revolutionary Claims.—Messrs. Muhlenberg, Crane, Standefor, Turrill, Beaumont, Craig, Chapin, Underwood, and Weeks.

On the Judiciary.—Messrs. Thomas, Hardin, Pierce of New Hampshire, Robertson, Peyton, Toucey, Martin, Vanderpoel, and Ripley.

On Public Expenditures.—Messrs. Page, Clark, McLane, Mason of Me. Leonard, Haley, White, Pearson, and Chetwood.

On Invalid Pensions.—Messrs. Beale, Schenck, Taylor, Harrison of Penn. Doubleday, Horst, Hewell, Jenifer, and Williams of Kentucky.

On Manufactures.—Messrs. Adams, D. May, McComas, Webster, G. Lee of New York, Granger, Ryum, Fowler, and Whittlesey of Conn.

On Agriculture.—Messrs. Bockee, Bean, Shinn, Peaberry, Bailey, Logan, Phelps, Elmer, and Black.

On the Militia.—Messrs. Glascock, Henderson,

W. K. Fuller, Wagener, Calhoun of Mass. Joshua Lee of N. Y. Carter, Graves, and Holt.

On Foreign Affairs.—Messrs. Howard, Cramer, Hamer, Alan of Kentucky, Parks, Cushing, Jackson of Georgia, Dromgoole, and Reacher.

On Military Affairs.—Messrs. Johnson of Kentucky, Ward, Thomson of Ohio, Bunch, McKay, Anthony, Mann of New York, Coles, and Glascock.

On Naval Affairs.—Messrs. Jarvis, Milligan, Lansing, Reed, Grayson, Parker, Wise, Ash, and Grantland.

On Private Land Claims.—Messrs. Carr, Galbraith, Patterson, Chambers of Pennsylvania, May, Huntsman, Lawler, Slade, and Garland.

On Indian Affairs.—Messrs. Bell, McCarty, Everett, Ashley, Haynes, Hawes, Chaney, Montgomery, and Garland of Virginia.

On Territories.—Messrs. Patton, Potts, Brown, Pickens, Pierce of Maryland, Hall of Maine, Johnson of Virginia, Boyd, and Miller.

On Revolutionary Pensions.—Messrs. Wardwell, Lea of Ten. Lay, James, Storer, Morgan, Klingensmith, Bond, and Fry.

Of Roads and Canals.—Messrs. Mercer, Vinton, Lucas Reynolds of Ill. Steele, Calhoun of Ky. Evans, McKennan, and Hard.

Of Accounts.—Messrs. Lee of N. Y. Hall of Me. Johnson of Va. Turner, and McKennan.

On Revisal and Unfinished Business.—Mr. Huntsman, Mann of Pa. Mason of Ohio, Harlan, and Farlin.

On Expenditures in the Department of State.—Messrs. Augustine Sheppard of N. C. Calhoun of Mass. Hunt, Morris, and Sickles.

On Expenditures in the Department of the Treasury.—Messrs. Allen of Vt. Harper, Spangler, Russell, and Barton.

On Expenditures in the Department of War.—Messrs. Jones of Ohio, Bovee, Johnson of Va. Love, and Hubley.

On Expenditures in the Department of the Navy.—Messrs. Hall of Maine, Sloane, Seymour, Pettigrew, and Mason of New York.

On Expenditures in the Department of the Post Office.—Messrs. Hawes, Burns, Childs, Bailey, and Reynolds of New York.

On Expenditures on the Public Buildings.—Messrs. Darlington, Hazeltine, Pearce of Rhode Island, Galbraith, and Beale.

The SPEAKER, on leave, presented to the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in obedience to a call of the House of third of June last, directing him to ascertain and report on the practicability of establishing a navy yard at Red Barn island, in the strait called the East river, and at Perth Amboy, in the State of New Jersey; which, on motion of Mr. JARVIS, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Petitions and memorials were then presented by Messrs. EVANS, SMITH, and JARVIS, of Maine;

[The following petitions were presented by Mr. SMITH: Petition of David Hodge for pension; Samuel T. Winslow, James Wyman, Lot Davis, Joseph Veerie, Daniel Davis, John McLellan, Charles Coffin, John O. Briggs.]

Mr. CUSHMAN of New Hampshire;

Messrs. GRENELL, CUSHING, BRIGGS, REED, HOAR, CALHOUN, PHILLIPS, LINCOLN, BORDEN, ADAMS, and LAWRENCE, of Massachusetts;

[Mr. ADAMS and Mr. LINCOLN presented sundry memorials, praying for a repeal of the duty on foreign coal, and Mr. A. having moved their reference to the Committee on Manufactures;

Mr. PATTON moved their reference to the Committee of Ways and Means. Whereupon,

Mr. ADAMS asked for the yeas and nays on his motion, (which had precedence,) and they were ordered.

The memorials, under the rule, lie over one day for consideration.]

Mr. PEARCE, of Rhode Island;

Messrs. TOUCEY, HALEY, and WHITTLESEY of Connecticut;

Messrs. EVERETT, and ALLEN of Vermont;

Messrs. HARD, CAMBRELENG, VANDERPOEL, DOUBLEDAY, WARDWELL, CHA-

PIN, LAY, GRANGER, TAYLOR, TURRILL, EFNER, RUSSEL, and LEE, of New York;

[Mr. GIBSON LEE presented the petition of Huldah Taylor, widow of Augustine Taylor, of the revolutionary army, praying for a pension; referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions; also, the petition of Salmon Ingon, praying for a pension; referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions; also, the petition of the "proprietors and residents contiguous to Sandy creek, Monroe county, New York," praying Congress to improve the harbor at the mouth of that creek.]

[Mr. CHAPIN moved that the petitions on the files of the House, asking an appropriation for the improvement of Port bay, on lake Ontario, be referred to the Committee on Commerce; agreed to.]

[Mr. HARR presented various petitions for the construction of a ship channel around the Falls of Niagara; also, the petition of inhabitants of New York, praying for the survey and construction of a harbor at the mouth of Eighteen-mile creek, in the State of New York.]

Mr. PARKER, of New Jersey;

Messrs. MCKENNAN, HARRISON, ANTHONY, GALBRAITH, BEAUMONT, CHAMBERS, CLARK, INGERSOLL, HARPER, and DENNY, of Pennsylvania;

[Mr. FAY presented the petition of Christian Mattis, of Pennsylvania, a revolutionary soldier, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

Messrs. MCKIM, THOMAS, WASHINGTON, and JENIFER, of Maryland;

[Mr. MCKIM presented the following: the petition of Hugh McDonald; of James Chalmers; of Martha B. adshaw; of Samuel Deal; of Susanna Wurley; and of Ann Crawford and Mary Turpin.]

Messrs. CRAIG, ROBERTSON, WISE, LOYALL, PATTON, TALIAFERRO, MERCER, HOPKINS, GARLAND, and JOHNSON, of Virginia.

[Mr. GARLAND, of Virginia, presented the petitions of the heirs of Lieut. John Peper; the heirs of Lieut. John White; the heirs of Lieut. William Lewis; the heirs of John Godfrey; the heirs of John Robertson; the heirs of Surgeon Gay; the heirs of Maj. Thomas Massie; the heirs of Capt. James Dillard; the heirs of Capt. Stewart; praying compensation for revolutionary services.]

Mr. W. B. SHEPARD of North Carolina;

Messrs. GRAYSON and PINCKNEY, of South Carolina.

[Mr. PINCKNEY presented the memorial of Ferdinand Clark, of Havana, in the island of Cuba, praying the remission of certain duties paid under the act of 1834, concerning tonnage duty on Spanish vessels; referred to the Committee on Commerce.]

Mr. GLASCOCK of Georgia;

Messrs. FRENCH, HARLAN, UNDERWOOD, ALLEN, and WILLIAMS, of Kentucky.

[On motion of Mr. HARLAN, the papers in the case of Henry King's heirs, on the files of the House, were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. Mr. HARLAN presented the petition of Wilson Tharp, of Kentucky, praying the grant of a small tract of the public domain; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.]

Messrs. CARTER, DUNLAP, and SHIELDS, of Tennessee;

Messrs. MASON and STORER, of Ohio;

Messrs. JOHNSON and GARLAND, of Louisiana;

Messrs. LANE, CARR, and DAVIS, of Indiana;

[Mr. LANE presented the memorial of Capt. John Cranson, of Dearborn county, Indiana, praying relief, as an invalid naval officer, for injuries received in the performance of important public services, under circumstances of great danger and personal suffering; the memorial of Richard Oliver, of Dearborn county, Indiana, praying relief as an invalid soldier of the last war.]

[Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of Norman Holt, of Indiana, asking permission to enter other lands, in lieu of lands entered through error of Register.]

Messrs. CASEY and REYNOLDS, of Illinois;

[Mr. CASEY presented the petition of sundry citizens of Marion county, Illinois, praying that certain lands in that county, heretofore sold by the Government, and relinquished, be again brought into market; and that the right of pre-emption, for a certain term of time, be granted to the settlers thereon; which, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.]

[Mr. REXFORD presented the proceedings of a public meeting of the citizens of Alton, in the State of Illinois, praying for a survey and the location of the National road from Vandalia, by Alton, in the State of Illinois, to Jefferson City, in the State of Missouri.]

Mr. R. stated that it was due to the House, and to the Representatives from Missouri, to say, that these proceedings required him to cause a location of said road from Vandalia to Alton to be made, and in no other place or manner whatever.]

MESSRS. LEWIS, CHAPMAN, MARTIN, and LAWLER of Alabama.

Mr. ASHLEY of Missouri.

On motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject of the finances, together with the estimates for the year 1837, was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. CHILDS moved that the use of the Hall be granted on Tuesday evening next to the American Colonization Society, and on the adoption of the resolution, asked for the yeas and nays, but the House refused to order them, and the motion prevailed by a vote of 91 to 59.

Mr. GILLET submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands inquire into the expediency of so altering the laws relating to bounty lands, as to allow those entitled to them to locate on any public lands subject to entry at private sale, or to receive land scrip in lieu of bounty land.

The resolution having been read by the Clerk, Mr. GILLET said he would explain the object of his resolution. It was within the recollection of most of the members present, that the soldiers of the last war were promised bounty lands. The act which contained this promise, provided that public lands should be surveyed in Michigan, Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas, if he remembered rightly. The survey in Michigan was never made, and the lands set apart in Illinois and Missouri were long since exhausted. Consequently, those who have not received their bounty lands are compelled to locate them in Arkansas. The lands there, he presumed, were good and valuable, but they were at too great a distance from the northern soldiers to be valuable to them. They can neither go there to settle on them, nor can they readily sell them. If they keep them, it is difficult for the owner to pay taxes at such a distant point, with which northern people have little or no communication. By the very words of the promise, the soldier has a right to lands at the North, where they are the most valuable to them. This will work no injury to the United States, but may greatly benefit the war-worn soldier, who may desire to settle upon or sell his lands. He conceived, with his friend from Ohio, (Mr. Vinton,) that the issuing scrip would be highly advantageous and convenient to the soldier, and prejudicial to no one.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. CHAPIN offered the following resolution, which, under the rule, lies over one day:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if he shall deem it consistent with the public interests, to communicate to this House all information he may have obtained in relation to the bequest of James Smithson, late of London, deceased, to found an institution at Washington for the diffusion of knowledge among men, since the appointment of an agent under the act of Congress of the last session.

On motion Mr. GIDEON LEE,

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means to inquire into the expediency of establishing a system of warehousing connected with the customs, similar in its general features to the systems now in use in some of the commercial nations of Europe, and to that of Great Britain in particular.

On motion of Mr. MANN, of New York,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing the name of Niel McNeil, a soldier of the revolution, on the pension roll.

On motion of Mr. EVERETT,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending the benefits of the third section of the act entitled "An act granting half pay to widows or orphans, when their husbands and fathers have died of wounds received in the military service of the United States, in certain cases, and for other purposes," to all widows and revolutionary pensioners, so far as to allow them half the pension to which their husbands were entitled.

Mr. FRY submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of immediately abolishing the duty on foreign grain and bread stuffs of all kinds.

Mr. REED moved to amend the resolution by striking out the words the "Committee of Ways and Means," and inserting the "Committee on Agriculture."

Mr. FRY hoped the resolution would take the course he had in the first place intended it should. He considered the Committee of Ways and Means the most appropriate committee to which the subject could be referred.

Mr. REED considered the Committee on Agriculture the most appropriate committee. He was in favor of having the subject examined, and carefully examined, but at the same time he wished it examined by the appropriate committee.

Mr. REED'S motion was agreed to by the House: yeas 87, noes not counted.

Mr. ADAMS moved a further amendment, so as to embrace a repeal of the duties on foreign coals, salt and iron.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of N. C. moved also to insert sugar.

Mr. DAVIS moved to postpone the further consideration of the resolution till Monday next, which was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to the widow of Nathan Taylor, 2d, late of New York, the arrears of pension to which he would have been entitled (if living, and his name had not been stricken from the list of pensioners) upon the pension obtained by him, under the act of Congress, passed 18th March, 1818, for his services in the war of the Revolution; his name having been stricken from the roll of pensioners for the single reason that he was not in indigent circumstances.

On motion of Mr. McKEON,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of regulating the pilots in the several Atlantic ports of the United States.

On motion of Mr. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania,

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to consider the expediency of reporting a bill, limiting the liability of the surety of deceased or removed public officers of the United States.

Mr. MERCER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to report a bill to amend the 13th section of the act of the last session of Congress, entitled "An act to regulate the deposits of the public money," by releasing the several States who may receive any part of the surplus revenue of the United States, in pursuance of that act, from any obligation to return the same.

The resolution being then read,

Mr. MERCER moved to postpone the consideration of the resolution till Wednesday week next.

Mr. DUNLAP remarked:

Mr. Speaker: I am opposed to the gentleman's resolution being made the special order of this House. The resolution involves a very important question, to wit: the power of Congress to distribute the surplus revenue. This important constitutional question was avoided at the last session, and now it is intended to be brought up to the exclusion of all other business. The States have the money, and may do what they please with it, and I wish the discussion of this subject to be postponed until a long session of Congress. This will be a very short session, and should be a business session. The Tennessee land bill, in which my constituents are immediately interested, has heretofore been postponed for the want of time, so much having been spent in the discussion of important political questions. I would be doing injustice to the interest of my constituents, if I did agree that this important question should be taken up to the exclusion of other business. Sir, this question alone would occupy weeks in its discussion, and other measures must be made to give way to it, when no legislative action can be had on it this session.

I am opposed to all unnecessary discussion at this session; and I desire that the business of the American people should be attended to. I therefore move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. MERCER asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and were: yeas 126, nays 73 as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. John Q. Adams, Anthony, Ash, Barton, Beale, Beaumont, Black, Boon, Borden, Bouldin, Bovee, Briggs, Brown, Cambreleng, Campbell, Carr, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Craig, Cushman, Davis, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Efner, Fairfield, Fowler, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, Garland, Gillet, Glascock, Granger, Grantland, Grayson, Grennell, Griffin, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Albert G. Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Hiester, Hoar, Holt, Hopkins, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, Jabez Jackson, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Cave Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, Lawrence, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Thomas Lee, Leonard, Lewis, Lincoln, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Joshua L. Mann, William Mason, Moses Mason, McKay, McKim, McLene, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parker, Parks, Patterson, Patton, Franklin Pierce, Dutee J. Pearce, Phelps, Phillips, Pickens, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Ripley, Robertson, Russell, Schenck, Seymour, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Taylor, Thomas, Thomson, Toucey, Turill, Vanderpool, Wagener, Ward, Wardwell, Weeks, Weeks, Elisha Whittlesey, Thomas T. Whittlesey, and Yell—126.

NAYS.—Messrs. Chilton Allen, Heman Allen, Bailey, Bell, Bonl, Buchanan, Buach, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, Carter, Casey, George Chambers, John Chambers, Childs, Nath. H. Claiborne, Clark, Connor, Corwin, Crane, Darlington, Deberry, Denny, Evans, Everett, French, Rice Garland, Graham, Graves, Hiland Hall, Hannegan, Hardin, Harlan, Harper, Hawes, Hazeltine, Howell, Ingersoll, James, Jenifer, Henry Johnson, Lane, Luke L. Love, S. Mason, Maury, McCarty, McComas, McKenna, Mercer, Montgomery, J. A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Peyton, Potts, Reed, Rogers, W. B. Shepard, A. H. Shepherd, Slade, Sloane, Staudefer, Storer, Sutherland, Taliaferro, Turner, Underwood, Vinton, Washington, White, L. Williams, S. Williams, and Wise—73.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. JARVIS submitted the following resolution, which by the rule, lies over one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish this House with the names of the officers of the Navy, who, have, during the year 1836, received orders for service, and who have asked to be excused, together with the reasons offered by them for such indulgence.

On motion of Mr. HARD,

Resolved, That two Chaplains of different denominations be elected to serve, during the present session of Congress, one by each House, who shall interchange weekly.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Virginia,

Resolved, That the bill No. 353, entitled a bill to extend the provisions of an act, entitled an Act supplementary to the act for the relief of certain surviving officers of the Revolution, approved 7th June, 1832, be reprinted, together with the report.

On motion of Mr. GARLAND of Virginia.

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act of the 5th of July, 1832, entitled "An act to provide for liquidating and paying certain claims of the State of Virginia," as to embrace officers entitled to five years full pay, in lieu of half pay for life; and that the said committee be further instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the payment of such judgments as have been, or may hereafter be, recovered against the State of Virginia for half pay or commutation pay, under the act of the Legislature of Virginia of May, 1779.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of N. Carolina,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the term of service to three months, for which militia soldiers shall be entitled to draw a pension.

Mr. SHEPHERD of N. C. submitted the following resolution, which was rejected:

Resolved, That all bills remaining on the calendar, and which were not disposed of during the last session, be reprinted for the use of the members of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Ky. submitted the following resolution, which was rejected:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of passing a law extending the provisions of the act of June 7th, 1832, to those who were engaged or served in the revolutionary war for a less period than six months.

On motion of Mr. HARLAN,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions inquire into the expediency of restoring the name of Benjamin Briggs, of Kentucky, on the pension roll.

On motion of Mr. GRAVES,

Resolved, That the petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Kentucky and other States, in favor of a purchase, by the United States, of the undivided stock of the Louisville and Portland canal, together with all other papers on that subject, heretofore referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, be recommitted to the same committee.

Mr. CHAMBERS of Kentucky, submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to this House the amount of revenue due to the United States, the payment of which has been suspended under the "act for the relief of the sufferers by fire in the city of New York," passed at the last session of Congress; and that, in doing so, he state the proportions of the amount which has been suspended under the first and second sections of the said act; and what amount of the sums suspended under said section has been paid.

On motion of Mr. SHIELDS,

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of remunerating the troops who were called into the service of the United States under the proclamation of the President of the United States of the 6th June, 1836; and who have been engaged since that time, in the service of the United States, in the Creek war, or in the expedition to Florida against the Seminole Indians, for the loss of such horse or horses, as shall have been killed in battle or by casualty; or as shall have died or been abandoned in said service for want of forage; or such as shall have been abandoned on account of inability to perform further services from fatigue in said service, or from other unavoidable causes; and that the same committee inquire into the expediency of compensating the troops of Kentucky and Mississippi, who were ordered into the service of the United States, by the order of Gen. Gaines, but disbanded by the President of the United States.

On motion of Mr. HAWES,

Resolved, That a select committee of nine be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire what abuses, if any, exist in the Military Academy at West Point; and what changes, if any, are necessary to be made in the mode and manner of the appointment of the cadets; and also whether it would not be compatible with the public interests entirely to abolish said Military Academy; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing an armory in Greenup county, Ky. on or near the Ohio river.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted the following resolution, which by the rule lies over one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to lay before this House a statement of the various sums paid to the new States respectively out of the five per cent. upon the nett proceeds of the sales of public land within their respective limits; and likewise, copies of the reports made by said States or their agents respectively, in relation to the objects to which the said sums have been appropriated, and the manner of its appropriation.

Mr. McCOMAS submitted the following joint resolution; which was read, and postponed to the 2d January, 1837:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, two-thirds of both Houses concurring, That the following amendments to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution, to wit: First, the President of the United States shall, from and after the 4th of March, 1841, be elected for the term of six years. Second, no person who shall have been elected President of the United States shall again be eligible to that office. Third, hereafter the President and Vice President of the United States shall be chosen by the people of the several States, in the manner following: On the first Monday and succeeding Tuesday and Wednesday in the month of September, 1841; and the same days in every six years thereafter, an election shall be held for the President and Vice President of the United States at such places and in such manner as elections are held by the law of each State for the members of the most numerous branch of the Legislature thereof. And the citizens of each State, who possess the qualification of electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature shall then and there vote viva voce for the President and Vice President of the United States, one of whom shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; and the superintendents, or persons conducting said election in each election district, shall immediately thereafter make returns thereof to the Governor of the State. And it shall be the duty of the Governor, together with such other persons as shall be appointed by the authority of each State, to ascertain the result of said returns; and the persons receiving the greatest number of votes for President and Vice President, shall be holden to have received the whole number of votes which the State shall be entitled to give for President and Vice President; which fact shall be immediately certified by the Governor, and sent to the seat of Government of the United States, to each of the Senators in Congress from such State; to the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The place and manner of holding such elections, of canvassing the votes, making returns thereof, and ascertaining their result, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

But Congress may, at any time, make, or alter such regulation. Congress shall have the power of changing the times of holding such elections, but they shall be held on the same days throughout the United States. The Congress of the United States shall be in session on the second Monday in October, in the year 1841, and the same day in every sixth year thereafter; and the President of the Senate, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, shall, as soon as convenient and practicable, proceed to open all the certificates and returns, and the electoral votes of the States shall be thereupon counted; the persons having the greatest number of votes for President and Vice President, shall be President and Vice President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of votes given; but if no person have such majority, or if the person having the majority of the whole number of votes given, shall have died before the counting of the votes, then a second election shall be held on the first Monday and succeeding Tuesday and Wednesday in the month of December next ensuing, which shall be confined to the persons having the two highest number of votes at the preceding election. But if two or more persons have the highest or an equal number of votes, then to the persons having the highest number of votes; provided, however, if in the first election there were but two persons voted for, and the persons receiving the highest number of votes shall have died before the counting of the votes, then in the second election the choice shall not be confined to the persons previously voted for; but any person may be voted for who may be otherwise qualified by the Constitution to be President and Vice President of the United States, which second election shall be conducted, the returns made, the votes counted, and the result of the election of each State certified by the Governor, in the same manner as in the first, and the final result of the election in each State shall be ascertained in the same manner as in the first, at such time as shall be fixed by law or resolution of Congress. And the person having the greatest number of votes for President and Vice President shall be President and Vice President of the United States. But if two or more persons have received an equal and the highest number of votes, or if the persons who shall have received the majority of the whole number of votes given at the second election, and shall have died before the counting of the votes, then a third election shall be holden on the first Monday and succeeding Tuesday and Wednesday in the month of January next ensuing; and if an election of President and Vice President shall, from any cause, fail to be made, an election shall be held on the 1st Monday and succeeding Tuesday and Wednesday in each succeeding month until an election shall be made by the people according to the provisions of the constitution. In case of the removal of the President from office, of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President and Vice President, and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed, and a President shall be elected by the people.

Fourth, no Senator or Representative in Congress shall be appointed to any civil office, place, or emolument, under the authority of the United States, during the term for which he was elected, and for three months thereafter.

On motion of Mr. PINCKNEY,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 13, 1836.

Mr. A. DICKENS, yesterday elected Secretary of the Senate, appeared and took the oath of office.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution of the Senate in July last, showing the amount of moneys paid on contracts; on advances made to the disbursing officers out of appropriations made at the last session of Congress, &c.; which was laid on the table.

Mr. BENTON, agreeably to notice given, introduced a bill granting a certain quantity of land to the State of Missouri, for purposes of internal improvement; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. GRUNDY, pursuant to notice given, introduced a bill supplementary to an act entitled an Act to amend the judicial system of the United Stater," which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. LINN, agreeably to notice given, introduced a bill for the relief of the heirs of Antoine Peltier, which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WALKER, pursuant to notice given, introduced a bill for the relief of the executrix of Richard W. Meade; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

The resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. BENTON, relative to coins, was taken up, considered, and adopted.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the Senate proceeded to the election of members of the Standing Committees, which resulted as follows:

Foreign Relations.—Messrs. Tallmadge, King of Georgia, Clay, and Rives.

Finance.—Messrs. Webster, Nicholas, Benton, and Cuthbert.

Commerce.—Messrs. Davis, Linn, Brown, and Ruggles.

Manufactures.—Messrs. Morris, Black, Hubbard, and Preston.

Agriculture.—Messrs. Morris, Kent, McKean, and Clay.

Military Affairs.—Messrs. Preston, Tipton, Wall, and Ewing of Illinois.

Militia.—Messrs. Hendricks, Swift, Ewing of Illinois, and Moore.

Naval Affairs.—Messrs. Southard, Tallmadge, Cuthbert, and Nicholas.

Public Lands.—Messrs. Ewing of Ohio, King of Alabama, Ruggles, and Fulton.

Private Land Claims.—Messrs. Porter, Bayard, Preston, and Sevier.

Indian Affairs.—Messrs. Swift, Tipton, Linn, and Sevier.

Claims.—Messrs. Tipton, Prentiss, Crittenden, and Ewing of Ill.

Revolutionary Claims.—Messrs. White, Hubbard, Crittenden, and Niles.

Judiciary.—Messrs. Crittenden, Morris, King of Ga. and Wall.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS,
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

TUESDAY, December 13, 1836.

On motion of Mr. LOYALL, the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. ADAMS in the chair, for the purpose of taking up and referring the message of the President of the United States.

On motion of Mr. LOYALL, the reading of the message was dispensed with, and Mr. L. offered the following resolutions, which were read:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the political relations of the United States with foreign nations, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of the message as relates to the commerce of the United States with foreign nations and their dependencies, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolved, That so much of said message as relates to the finances, and every thing connected therewith, the safe keeping of the public money, and every thing connected therewith, and the Bank of the United States, including the stock in said institution, be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Resolved, That so much of said message as relates to the public lands, and all things connected therewith, be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Resolved, That so much of said message as relates to the report of the Secretary of War, and the public interests entrusted to the War Department, except so much thereof as relates to Indian affairs, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of the said message as relates to the militia of the United States, be referred to the Committee on the Militia.

Resolved, That so much of the said message as relates to the Indian tribes, and every thing connected therewith, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of the said message as relates to the report of the Secretary of the Navy, and the public interests entrusted to the Navy Department, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of the said message as relates to the report of the Postmaster General, the condition and operations of the Post Office Department, and every thing connected therewith, be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Resolved, That so much of the said message as relates to "an amendment of the constitution which will prevent, in any event, the election of President and Vice President of the United States devolving upon the House of Representatives and the Senate," be referred to a select committee.

Resolved, That so much of the said message as relates "to the want of uniformity in the laws of the District of Columbia," be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Resolved, That so much of the said message as relates to the "survey of the coast, and the manufacture of a standard of weights and measures," be referred to a select committee.

On motion of Mr. WARD, the resolutions were taken up seriatim.

The first, second, third, fourth and fifth, were agreed to without amendment or division.

The resolution referring the subjects of Indian affairs having been read,

Mr. LEWIS moved to strike out the words "and all things connected therewith," and insert the following:

"— except what relates to the breaking out of hostilities in Florida, Alabama and Georgia, the taking the property of individuals for public use, and the relief of sufferers by Indian depredations, or by the operations of our troops in Florida, Alabama and Georgia."

Mr. GILLETT suggested to the gentleman from Alabama not to move to strike out the words referred to, but to suffer them to be retained in the resolution, and make an exception of the cases referred to in the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS accepted the modification, and went on to contend that the subject should be referred to a select committee. There was no standing committee to whom it properly and exclusively belonged. Some of the cases might properly come under the inquiry of the Committee of Claims; and others, arising out of the intercourse act of 1802, might be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; but it would be better to refer the whole to a select committee. This was the short session, and no standing committee would have time to investigate all the claims arising out of this subject.

Mr. BELL suggested a further modification, so as not to take away from the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs the jurisdiction of inquiry into the causes of the war, but to except that part of the President's message relating to the question of the expediency of providing for the sufferers.

Mr. WILLIAMS could see no reason why these claims should not go before the Committee of Claims, and he should make a motion to that effect, by moving to strike out the words "select committee."

Mr. GLASCOCK moved a modification, meeting the views of the gentleman from Tennessee, (Mr. Bell,) so as to leave the question of the inquiry into the causes of the Indian hostilities in Georgia, Alabama, and Florida, open for the investigation of the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.
Mr. LEWIS then offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the taking the property of individuals for public use, and the relief of sufferers by Indian depredations, or by the operations of our own troops in Florida, Alabama and Georgia, be referred to a select committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina moved to strike out "select committee," and insert "Committee of Claims."

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio referring to former laws passed in favor of sufferers by Indian depredations, all of which had originated in, and been reported by, the Committee of Claims, contended that all these cases ought also to go before that committee, though, if he consulted merely his own feelings and convenience, he should desire the course proposed in the resolution. The Committee of Claims, in the laws referred to, had laid down certain principles; and all former claims arising out of Indian depredations, had been a judicious on them. Now if a select committee were raised at this time, and they adopted a new principle of adjudication, every old rejected claim would be revived and brought again before the House; for the same principle which governed in Georgia, Alabama, and Florida, would have to be applied to Indiana and Illinois.

Mr. GLASCOCK contended in favor of referring the subject to a select committee. It would facilitate the business of the House, and it did not follow that there would be a necessary departure from the principles which had governed the House heretofore. There might, however, be special cases, cases not embraced under any of the previous laws, and there was therefore an evident propriety of referring the whole subject to a select committee.

Mr. PEARCE, of Rhode Island, was opposed to giving this subject a direction different from that which had always heretofore been given to subjects of a similar character. All these matters had been invariably referred to the Committee of Claims; a committee which acted upon certain fixed rules, and therefore had more weight with the House than a newly raised committee.

After some further remarks from Mr. LEWIS, the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS was agreed to, and the resolution, as modified, was also agreed to.

The resolution referring the subject of weights and measures, having been read,

Mr. SUTHERLAND suggested the propriety of referring this resolution to the Committee on Commerce, which had heretofore had the subject under consideration, which Mr. LOYALL accepted as a modification, and, so modified, it was agreed to.

The resolution on referring that part of the message relating to an amendment of the constitution was then taken up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD moved to strike out, all after the word "Resolved," and insert the following: "That so much of the President's message as relates to an amendment of the constitution, together with all propositions and resolutions submitted at the last and present session of Congress, proposing an amendment of the constitution, be referred to a select committee, to be composed of — members."

Mr. LINCOLN inquired if such an amendment was in order. The House had gone into Committee of the Whole on the President's message only, and he submitted whether other matter not embraced in the message, could be then considered and referred.

The CHAIR decided the amendment to be in order, on the ground of the identity of the subject.

The amendment was agreed to, by a vote of 93 to 51, and the resolution, as amended, was also agreed to, and the committee ordered to consist of nine members.

The remaining resolutions were then agreed to without a division.

Mr. CARTER moved an additional resolution, referring so much of the President's message as related to the employment of the Tennessee volunteers who had been called upon, but not mustered into service, to a select committee.

Mr. PEARCE of R. I. suggested its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, to which Mr. C. assented.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON moved to refer it to the Committee of Claims; which was agreed to—yes 98, no's not counted.

Mr. WISE submitted the following resolution:
Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the "condition of the various Executive Departments; the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted; the vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business" in all of them; and the causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation," be referred to a select committee, to consist of — members, with power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to inquire into the condition of the various Executive Departments; the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted; into the manner in which the public business has been discharged in all of them, and into all causes of complaint, from any quarter; at the manner in which said Departments, or their bureaus, or their offices, or any of their officers or agents of every description whatever, directly or indirectly connected with them in any manner, officially or unofficially, in duties pertaining to the public interest, have fulfilled or failed to accomplish the objects of their creation, or have violated their duties, or have injured or impaired the public service and interest. And that said committee, in its inquiries, may refer to such periods of time as to them may seem expedient and proper.

Mr. W. then proceeded to address the House at length in an examination of the course of policy, conduct, merits, &c. of Andrew Jackson, both as Chief Magistrate, and prior to his election to that office—drawing historical parallels between him and several of the Roman Emperors; reviewing, and passing severe strictures upon, the last annual message.

The resolution was agreed to—yeas 86, nays 78; and the committee was ordered to consist of nine members.

On motion of Mr. HARPER, the committee rose and reported to the House.

The SPEAKER having resumed the Chair,

Mr. EVERETT moved the printing of the resolutions and amendments; which was agreed to.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report, in pursuance of a resolution of the House of the 29th of April last, relative to the officers and non-commissioned officers, soldiers, and volunteers, who entered the service during the late war with Great Britain, and regularly discharged; which, on motion of Mr. BRIGGS, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

On motion of Mr. MANN,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

WEDNESDAY, December 14, 1836.

Mr. CALHOUN attended, and took his seat.

Mr. McKEAN presented the petition of sundry hardware merchants of the city of Philadelphia, praying for the repeal or modification of certain provisions contained in the tenth and twelfth clauses of the second section of the tariff act of July 14th, 1832; referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LINN presented the memorial of John McDowell, of Detroit, asking compensation in lands or money for the property taken by the enemy during the late war, in consequence of the memorialist's services in the American cause; referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HUBBARD presented the petition of John Brunson, praying compensation for goods lost near Buffalo, in 1813, in consequence of his teams being taken by the American troops while hauling them; referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. HUBBARD also presented the petition of H. B. Brevoort, praying for compensation for services as clerk to the board of Land Commissioners at Detroit; which was referred to the same Committee.

Mr. KING of Georgia, presented the petition of sundry citizens of Walker county, Ga. praying for the establishment of a post route; referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. WHITE presented the petition of sundry citizens of Jefferson county, Tennessee, who had organized themselves as a company of volunteers, praying compensation for their services. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of certain umbrella manufacturers of the city of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the construction put by the Custom House officers on the tariff laws in relation to the duties on certain imported articles used in their business. Referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUCHANAN also presented the petition of John Laub, Chief Clerk in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury, praying compensation for performing the duties of the Comptroller during the sickness of that officer. Referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BENTON presented the petition of Doctor King, of the Medical Staff of the United States Army, praying for an additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MOORE presented the petition of Joseph McCoy, praying for commutation of half pay for revolutionary services; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the memorial of the representatives of Henry Morfit, presented at the last session, was again referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. WALKER, the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, in favor of the establishment of a military depot at Columbus, Mississippi, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CRITTENDEN gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to bring in bills for the relief of Samuel Y. Keen and George F. Strother.

Mr. MORRIS, on leave, and in pursuance of notice given, introduced a bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities; read twice and referred.

Mr. LINN, on leave, and in pursuance of notice given, introduced a bill for the relief of the heirs of Nicholas Lachance, and the heirs of Joseph Placide; which was twice read and referred.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the War Department, enclosing a report from the Chief Engineer, made in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 6th of July last, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOMLINSON gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to bring in a bill to provide for the issuing of additional scrip for the satisfaction of United States military land warrants.

Mr. ROBINSON gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to bring in a bill to establish a Surveyor General's Office in Illinois.

Mr. BENTON gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Mrs. Caroline Clitherall.

The resolution of the House of Representatives for the appointment of two chaplains of different religious denominations, was considered and concurred in.

The Senate then proceeded to ballot for the remaining members of the standing committees, which resulted as follows:

On the Post Office and Post Roads.—Messrs. Knight, Grundy, Brown, and Niles.

On Roads and Canals.—Messrs. McKean, Robinson, Nicholas, and Page.

On Pensions.—Messrs. Hubbard, Morris, and Sevier.

On the Committee for the District of Columbia.—Messrs. King of Ala. King of Ga. Black, and Nicholas.

On the Library.—Messrs. Robbins, Prentiss, and Wall.

On Engrossed Bills.—Messrs. Page and Fulton. Mr. HUBBARD submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to the heirs of Doctor William Cogswell, deceased, (who was a hospital surgeon of the army during the war of the revolution,) the commutation pay granted to such officers in pursuance of the resolution of the Continental Congress, of March, 1783.

Mr. WALKER submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of creating Vicksburg and Grand Gulf, in the State of Mississippi, ports of entry, and placing on the same footing all the ports of entry of the United States.

Mr. LINN submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the completion of the river Raisin harbor, in Michigan, agreeably to the estimate furnished by the Engineer under whose superintendence and direction the work is constructing.

On motion of Mr. RIVES, the message of the President on the subject of the proposed publication of Mr. Madison's History of the Convention, was, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on the Library.

The following bills were severally read the second time and referred:

The bill to amend the act to provide for the better organization of the courts of the United States for the district of Alabama;

The bill for the relief of Sarah Angel and others;

The bill to allow a drawback on cordage manufactured from foreign hemp when exported;

The bill making appropriations for the collection of materials, the purchase of sites, and the commencement of certain fortifications, and for other purposes;

The bill to increase the present military peace establishment of the United States;

The bill for the relief of the heirs of General William Eaton; and

The bill to advance to the States of Alabama and Mississippi one million of dollars, out of the three per cent. fund reserved from the sales of the public lands, for the purpose of constructing a railway from Brandon, Mississippi, to Cahaba, Alabama.

The resolution submitted by Mr. EWING of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order of July last, designating the funds to be received in payment for the public lands, was taken up for consideration.

Mr. EWING having cited the terms of the Treasury order of the 11th of July last, said he thought that he might fairly denominate this paper as one of an extraordinary character. But before he proceeded to an examination of it, and the different bearings and propositions it contained, he would, in a few words, give his views as to the state of things in which the order had originated. He did not think that the objects avowed therein were the only—certainly not the leading—motives which induced the issuing of the order in question. He thought there were more potent reasons than those to be found in the order itself. It would be recollected that early in the last session there was a contest for the disposition of the public funds. It was foreseen by us that there would be a large accumulation of the public revenue, and it was supposed, even prior to the meeting of Congress, that some bill would be introduced for the purpose of taking the surplus out of the hands of the Executive, and making some disposition of it. Early, however, after the assembling of Congress, the policy developed itself of conveying to the public and the two Houses of Congress, and impressing on them, the idea that there was then no surplus, nor would there be any. Now, this was the course of policy which appeared to be resolved upon, and which was finally adopted. He contended that the Secretary of the Treasury, when he made his report to Congress, last December, must have been able to state, if he would—and certainly within two millions of the amount—what would be the probable receipts in the Treasury at the expiration of the two following quarters. He (Mr. Ewing) knew from experience, that it was easy enough to ascertain pretty nearly what would be received in a given time, taking the past as a basis for the calculation of the future. From looking at the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, at the time, he had ascertained what would be the amount. Even allowing that the Secretary did not know the fact, it was nevertheless in his power to have arrived at a knowledge of it by making the necessary inquiries. It was his (Mr. Ewing) impression that the Secretary of the Treasury did not desire that Congress and the people should know what amount had been received, or was about to be received, into the public Treasury. Honorable Senators generally took the same ground; and it was not until the month of April that this body, or the joint majority of it, could be brought to concede that there was to be any actual surplus; and gentlemen did contend, at last, that there would be no surplus for distribution. It was said that the estimate we then made would be fastened upon us as a wrong calculation. He had thought then that it would be a very hard matter to do so, and so time had proved.

Mr. E. proceeded to say that the course of those who had expressed their opinion that there would be no surplus, had been to get up expedients by which to squander millions upon millions of the public money, and thus do away with the impression that there would be any surplus. It was a remarkable fact that Congress had adjourned only seven days when the Treasury circular was issued, and which grew out of the circumstances he had already detailed. It was issued, not in pursuance of a law of Congress, but, he presumed, at the instance of gentlemen who had joined in recommending it.

He entertained the opinion that the effect of it had been to embarrass the commerce and currency of the country; and it was no doubt promulgated for the purpose of making the public suppose that it was the distribution bill which had caused the pressure and embarrassment under which they were laboring. Doubtless, among other motives, one was to effect a check in the sales of the public lands, by raising their price, and thus enabling the holders to sell them for cash at ten or fifteen per cent. more than they had agreed to pay for them. Mr. E. maintained that the order worked favorably for speculators, defended the banks generally from the charge made against them of having made over issues, and averred that the allegation was true only as respected the deposit banks. Another object, which he understood the Treasury order was issued to effect, was, to put down the paper currency, and increase that of gold and silver. Mr. E. here went into an elaborate argument to show that the attempt would totally fail, and then contended that the order, having produced the effects he had indicated, ought, as a mere matter of policy, to be at once rescinded. If that were done, confidence would be restored, and the difficulties which exist in regard to the currency would immediately disappear. He would say, with regard to the second branch of the resolution which he had the honor to offer, that, if passed, it would prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from making any discrimination in the money receivable for the public lands. It was not right nor just that there should be any such discrimination made when public property was set up for sale.

Mr. BENTON observed, that he should want to make some exposition of facts which he thought would go far to invalidate the statements made respecting the previous effects of this Treasury order, and to demonstrate clearly what had been its practical and beneficial results. For this purpose he should want a little more time, in order to get the returns, and such other documentary evidence as it would be necessary for him to refer to. He should show then to the Senate, far more satisfactorily by facts, than the gentleman from Ohio had been able to do by argument, why the banks had been prevented from extending the usual accommodations to the public. While on his feet, he would say that he entirely concurred with the Senator from Ohio in his construction of the law as respected payments into the public Treasury, for the purchase of lands. It had been his opinion for sixteen or seventeen years past, that the law ought to be so construed, though it had remained but as a dead letter on the statute book. He remembered that some years ago a Register of a land office in Missouri, construing the act as he and the Senator from Ohio did, refused to receive from a purchaser a Treasury certificate of deposit, and he (Mr. B.) was applied to by the individual to get the money returned to him.

He had, however, heard it said since his arrival here, (though he did not get his information from any officer of the Government,) that as soon as the attention of the Secretary was turned to the law, he had given it the same construction that had been given to it by himself and the Senator from Ohio.

While up, he would remark that as to this large amount of surplus on hand to distribute, which showed that there was so great a mistake on the part of those who said that there would be none, (though they said so with the necessary qualifications, that the appropriations should be made in time to be used,) yet when they came to look at the President's message, they found that of this large surplus, fifteen or sixteen millions of it was appropriated money, which could not be used, because the year was half gone before the appropriations were made. This, (said Mr. B.) we represented so often last session on this floor, that if walls had tongues, as they are said to have ears, they would again and again reiterate the warning. But (said Mr. B.) the committees were so organized, being controlled by gentlemen who were in favor of distribution, and consequently anxious for surpluses, that the necessary appropriations were 'staved off,' for the purpose of making them.

In this way they might have surpluses in abundance at every session, and the whole revenue might, by keeping off the appropriations till too late to be used, be converted into surplus. It was almost incredible (Mr. B. said) to see the manner in which business was procrastinated at the last session. These few leaves, said Mr. Benton, (turning over a few pages of the acts,) contain every private act passed by Congress at the last session. They were Mr. Whittlesey's acts—acts sent up by the industry of one single man in the other House. Here, said Mr. B. (turning again to the volume,) are the remainder of the acts; and when you come to look at them, you will find that the appropriation bills were 'staved off' until the last moment. He repeated, that if the appropriations had been made in time to be used, which would have been done had it not been for the extraordinary organization of the committees of that body, by which they were controlled by those gentlemen in favor of surpluses, the case would have been far different from what it was. There would not have been so much surplus to talk of, and there would have been no occasion for this new application of the term to an unexpended balance. It was a new idea (he said) to prevent the appropriations from being passed; and, instead of letting the money remain for two years before it could be called a surplus, as under the usage of the former law, to immediately seize upon it for distribution.

We have often (said Mr. B.) had fifteen or sixteen millions of the surplus in the Bank of the United States, and not one word was said about it; and if the appropriations of the last session had been made in time to be used, (and there were many, too, that had been given up by their supporters,) there would be no more surplus in the Treasury now than had frequently been in the Bank of the United States, without occasioning any excitement or alarm.

Mr. B. only rose to say that he concurred with the Senator from Ohio in his construction of the law as to Treasury certificates of deposit, and to state what he had heard, that the officers of Government had given it the same construction. What he had further to say was, that some disposition of this resolution of the Senator from Ohio should be made, which would permit the ordinary business of the Senate to go on without interruption, and not to have the important bills attending the commencement of the session blocked out by a protracted debate. He wished that the resolution might be laid on the table for the present, to give him time to refer to the documents necessary to be used in reply to the Senator, and that the ordinary business of the Senate might go on.

Mr. WEBSTER observed that he did not see that so much effect would be produced by the operation of the resolution on the land offices themselves, as upon the general currency of the country. It was notorious that the currency of the country was in a very disordered state. An anomalous state of things in relation to the currency existed. Prices of commodities remained high, while money was scarce. For this they must look for some extraordinary cause, producing so extraordinary a result. He presumed that the country would look with considerable anxiety on the proceedings of Congress with regard to this subject; and he therefore hoped that the resolution would be considered at as early a day as possible. He had no desire to obstruct the business of the Senate, but he thought that the resolution might be taken up in the beginning of the next week, without materially interfering with it. He would, therefore, move that it be postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Monday next, and that the Treasury order referred to by it be printed.

The motion of Mr. Webster was accordingly adopted.

The resolution directing the annual Treasury statements of the commerce and navigation of the United States to be printed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 14, 1836.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department, transmitting, in pursuance of the acts of 1809 and 1817, statements of the accounts remaining unsettled, or on which balances are due, more than three years prior to the 30th of September, 1836; which, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

On motion of Mr. LOYALL, the House then took up the resolutions reported on yesterday from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the President's message.

The resolutions, as amended, having been read, they were all concurred in except three.

Mr. ADAMS moved to amend the third resolution, which was as follows:

"Resolved, That so much of the said message as relates to the finances, and every thing connected therewith; the safe-keeping of the public moneys, and every thing connected therewith; and the Bank of the United States, including the stock of the United States in that institution, be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means;" by inserting after the word "therewith," in the third line, the following: "except so much as relates to the protecting duties and every thing connected therewith;" and also to add the following at the end of the resolution: "and, Resolved, That so much thereof as relates to the protecting duties, and every thing connected therewith, be referred to the Committee on Manufactures."

Mr. ADAMS went at some length into the reasons which induced him to propose the amendment he had offered. He said it was a remarkable circumstance that in the whole message, so far as he had looked into it, there was nothing to be found which related to the subject of the protective duties; and perhaps, in consequence of this, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Loyall) had not made a proposition to refer any part of the message to the Committee on Manufactures. It must be apparent that that part of the message relating to the finances, &c. bore very considerably on the interests of manufactures, and should be considered by the committee on that subject. It had been the pleasure of the House to appoint a standing Committee on Manufactures, and having the honor of being placed at the head of that committee, he felt himself bound therefore to attend to those interests when committed to his charge; but he must repeat that he was surprised to find no more reference to those interests than if none such existed. He considered the subject not to belong to the Committee of Ways and Means. Their duties were to devise ways and means for raising revenue, but at present they had too much revenue, and the question was how should they dispose of some part of it. The interests of commerce, of agriculture, and of manufactures, were all deeply interested in this question, and he considered the Committee of Manufactures the appropriate committee to which to refer the subject. There was no difference of opinion as to the propriety of some reduction of duty; but it was as to the extent of the reduction. On the first day on which petitions were received, he had presented one from 1,100 citizens of Boston, requesting a reduction of the duty on iron, coal, and the necessities of life. He moved to refer that petition to the Committee on Manufactures, because it operated on the manufacturing interests of the country. He was, however, satisfied with the determination of the House. If the House should refer the subject to the Committee of Ways and Means, he would not complain; but if they did, so far as this subject was concerned, he thought the Committee on Manufactures might as well take a holiday to the close of the session.

Mr. CAMBRELENG briefly opposed the course recommended by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Mr. C. was glad to hear from the gentleman that he had examined the President's message in vain for any thing on the subject of protecting duties, but there were some statements made by the gentleman to which he felt impelled to say a few words in reply. He had no particular objection to the reference of subjects wholly relating to the protection of domestic manufactures to any committee of that House; but this was not one of that character. Adverting to the petition referred to by Mr. A., he said it was in the recollection of the House that a memorial was presented, two years ago, on the subject of the duty on coal, which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and remained there till the present presiding officer of the House, (then chairman of that Committee,) reported upon it; and a similar memorial had been so referred at the present session. Now he would briefly show the distinction between the two committees. When the Committee on Manufactures was first established, it was for the purpose of examining into the various commodities on which duties were proposed to be levied, and into the propriety of protecting them, without any reference whatever to the subject of the revenue of the country. Upon this very principle, the bill of 1816 was passed; for the purpose of cherishing the interests of the great capitalists, but not for revenue. They now found themselves in a different position, collecting millions upon millions under that law beyond the wants of the Government; and the question now arose, in what manner those sums should be reduced; a question purely and altogether of finance, and properly coming under the cognizance of the Committee of Ways and Means. That was, however, a question which the House could determine hereafter—the whole subject having to come up on Monday next, and it would probably result in referring it to a select committee. Was it the province of the Committee on Manufactures, or the Committee on Commerce, or the Committee on Agriculture, to determine upon every interest of the country? or was it not specially the province of the Finance Committee? After a few further remarks on the propriety of referring the whole subject to the Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. C. concluded by congratulating the country upon the return to the spirit of 1800 once more, in the message of the President.

Mr. ADAMS asked for the yeas and nays on his amendment; which were ordered.

Mr. MANN adverted to the frequent decisions of the House heretofore on the same subject, and he saw no reason why the former course should be departed from. He was in favor of referring the subject to the Committee of Ways and Means, inasmuch as all questions relating to the reduction or raising of revenue belonged to it, and this had no reference whatever to the great interest of domestic manufactures.

Mr. DENNY briefly supported the amendment of Mr. Adams, on the ground that it was the great manufacturing interest which was most deeply involved. He concluded by saying that the principal part of the present surplus in the Treasury, amounting to upwards of forty millions of dollars, was derived from the pockets of the manufacturers.

Mr. PARKER thought the question resolved itself into this: If the subject related only to manufactures, it should go to that committee; if to revenue, it should take the course advocated by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOON said that it had not been his intention to say one word on the question now before the House, had it not been for the most extraordinary doctrine advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, (Mr. Denny.) If the remarks of the gentleman could be confined to his own district, and to his own constituents, he would not reply to them at this time. But (said Mr. B.) the gentleman's speech will find its way through the columns of the newspapers into my district, and among my constituents. I should suppose, from the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that he (if not a manufacturer himself) represents a manufacturing people; and to this I have no objections to urge. But (continued Mr. B.) my constituents are an agricultural people—they are the consumers of articles manufactured. The farmers and the mechanics are to be made poor for the purpose of enriching the manufacturers.

The gentleman has told us that there is now in the Treasury of the United States a surplus revenue, amounting to upwards of forty millions of dollars, and would have the people of this country to believe, that this vast amount of money was derived from the manufacturers. Not so, Mr. Speaker. It is the result of over taxing the people; it has been received from the customs; and from the sales of the public lands. Upwards of twenty-four millions of dollars of the surplus revenue has been received from land sales. I have thought it proper to say thus much, with a view only to correct error, and to let facts go forth to the public.

I confess, (said Mr. B.) my utter astonishment at the attack made upon the President by the venerable member from Massachusetts, (Mr. Adams.) That gentlemen would have it believed that the President has neglected the great interests of the country in not having made particular mention of the manufacturing interest in his late message to Congress. Sir, (said Mr. B.) I presume that President Jackson's opinions on the subject of the tariff are known in his previous messages to Congress; and I am sorry to say, that while the gentleman from Massachusetts was President of the United States, I was not able to know any thing of his opinions on that particular subject, as they were never expressed in any of his state papers to Congress. I think, therefore, it comes with a bad grace indeed from that gentleman, to charge upon General Jackson, what he himself was deficient in performing while he was President.

Mr. PICKENS was not willing to touch the subject of the reduction of the revenue, unless he could move in concert and harmony with those gentlemen who were supposed to represent the great manufacturing interests of this country, and the reason was obvious. He was disposed to regard the compromise act as an act settled under certain circumstances, implying good faith in all the different interests of this country. With this view, as that act was in operation, he, for one, would repeat he was not disposed to touch the principles involved in it, or its leading features, except in concert and harmony with those representing the great manufacturing interests. But for that act, he would say the remarks of the gentleman from New York were just and correct; but so long as it existed, he was not disposed to touch the interests embraced in it.

Mr. P. said, if he understood the act of 1816, it was a reduction of the revenue from the war taxes, with a view to pay off the national debt; and, in settling that measure, due regard was observed to the great interests enlisted under war measures. It was a measure essentially for revenue. In no sense could it be regarded as a tariff for protection, but a tax law to pay the public debt of the country.

So far as subjects which did not interfere with our domestic manufactures were concerned, he had no objection. For instance, he would advert to the discriminating duties upon the importation of foreign silks; especially silks coming from beyond the Cape of Good Hope. Upon that subject, no one, he thought, could have any difficulty.

Mr. BOULDIN said he was afraid he might be misunderstood by the House and his constituents in any vote he might give on referring this matter to any committee. He was, in a degree, a new member, and did not know much of the duties of them in regard to form and detail. His inclination had not led him much to things of that sort, and duty had not been required of him in that line. He had some fixed opinions, made up maturely; and on the subject-matter under consideration he had a very decided opinion. He was sure the income ought not to be beyond the wants of the Government—the economical wants of the Government. He wished them brought down to economy, and he would vote for any investigation likely to produce it.

He was like the gentleman from South Carolina in one thing—he did not wish to do violence to the faith of the nation. If the compromise bill pledged the faith of the nation to any point, he would abide it. "Nothing," said a great man, "doth so cover a man with shame, as to be found false and perfidious." So, (he said,) of a nation—he would not have this faith even argued or brought into question, if he could avoid it.

He would first take off all duties under twenty per cent. provided by this compromise act, to regulate the amount of revenue, so as to meet the wants of the Government, expressly excepted out of the compromise bill. He would then stop the sales of the public lands, or reduce the price to the wants of the Government. If these measures in their full extent would not do it, he would then inquire, whether we had really placed ourselves in a situation in which we could not stop taxing the people, even when that tax went to the ruin of those who received, as well as those who paid the tax.

It seemed generally agreed that the vast sums collected corrupted all the fountains and channels of justice and of right. He was sure such sums were dangerous wherever they might be lodged; they could not be safe, either in regard to their own security, or in regard to the purity of the individuals into whose hands they might fall. He said they were offensive no where. If left here, they would corrupt every thing. If divided they would render the States dependent on the bounty of the Union. Suppose large works, half finished by means of the amount divided, what would be the effect when the money gave out? An humble supplication to Congress for more. The lovers of federal power have been long feeling in various ways for some hold on the sovereignty of the States. They tried alien and sedition laws, standing armies, and various ways and means. They now try to get a hold on the pockets of the people. They now are endeavoring to get the States in debt to the United States. They endeavor to persuade them that they will be more independent by being in debt. He said his experience was different, and exactly the reverse. Suppose the internal improvements half finished, and the money out, and an application for more money, what would be the natural answer? Agree to increase the tariff, and submit to protecting duties, and you shall have it; otherwise not. Sir, (said Mr. B.) how grateful it would be to the friends of federal power to see a State supplicating and submitting in this way. Had there been no such relation existing between the several sovereign States and the United States, or rather the friends of federal power, in short federalists and republicans, as the one supposed? Where, (he asked,) was Patrick Henry, and where was Alexander Hamilton? and what was the difference between them? and what is the difference between all their followers to this day? In disguise and out of disguise?

He said he was scarcely opposed to any distribution of the surplus unnecessarily and unjustly accumulated, though it might not be exactly equal. If not divided, its accumulating millions would corrupt and corrode and destroy every thing. If divided, he feared it would subjugate the States, and render them entirely dependent on, and servile to, the United States. He was not willing to be responsible for the money to remain in such vast sums, either here or distributed among the States. Either, he thought, would end in the total overthrow of all our institutions in their purity. To avoid this evil, he was willing to almost any division that would be final, and that had at tached to it a provision that there should hereafter be no repetition of the same thing. He had no constitutional scruple about restoring the money of the people to them, however unjustly obtained. Even the highwayman might make restitution. But if he propose to repeat it, or do not promise not to do it, it is quite a different thing. To be robbed of one hundred, and return seventy five, would, in the long run, ruin any body, or any nation, rich or poor. If the money was not our own, why offer to lend it before we offer to borrow? If our own, why take our bond for it? Cotton is now twenty dollars or upwards. Get us in debt millions, and call on us when cotton is ten dollars, and we are ruined with our own money. Sell a man's horse to pay his taxes for half he is worth, when the tax is not wanting; keep the money a year or two, and then return two thirds of it. Sir, (he asked,) where is the sense of this? But, it is agreed by all, and distinctly by the venerable gentleman, for whom he had a most profound respect, especially in matters of this kind, where his constituents were peculiarly concerned, that we must have a reduction of the duties to some extent. All seem to agree in this, that the revenue ought to be reduced; but when some would proceed to it, every possible means is objected to, and obstacles in regard to committees seem to fall in the way.

Mr. B. said, his aim being to reduce the revenue to the wants of economy in the administration of affairs, he would first take off the whole of the duties under twenty per cent. as excepted out of the compromise bill; he would then stop the sales of the public lands. If this reduced too much, he would reduce the prices; some might say, and had said, to stop the sale of the public lands, would check the settlements; not at all. Let them settle, and give pre-emption before, instead of after settlement. He would sooner do this, than do it after. He would do either. The west was settled by men who had no money to buy lands. No man who had money, would risk his life among wild beasts and Indians. These men took the land from the savages, and the wild beasts of the forest, and we sold it afterwards. It was a kind of trespass in law for the squatter to settle on the public lands, which Mr. B. would always excuse. He had rather give the privilege, than excuse the offence.

Some said our money is placed in unsafe banks. The land is safe; why sell it? That cannot run away. Let the settler have the refusal of the land at Government price, and let him have his own improvements. Where is the injustice or serious difficulty?

Gentlemen had entered somewhat into the protective or tariff system. The manufacturers are protected by our bayonets and our fortifications. What other protection ought they to desire? He said he knew nothing of the details of commerce or manufactures. His mind was made up upon this point. He believed it was not his interest to pay a high price for an inferior article, and pay it in gold or silver, in preference to a low price, and pay it in truck, tobacco, or any thing he had for sale. He did not believe he was the richer the higher he was taxed. Yet these seem to be the propositions of the advocates of the protecting duties.

He was once induced to enter into an argument with a mathematician, upon the question whether one part of a wheel did not run faster than another. He was firm in the belief that this was not the case. He was sure the whole wheel went on together. The mathematician convinced him. Mr. B. sometime after went to convince a lady of the truth of this most absurd proposition, and, in the argument, drawing his lines with his knife, he cut her finger, which very naturally broke up the argument, and he immediately relapsed into his former belief, that one part of the wheel could not outrun the other, while all the parts remained entire. He had made up his mind never to run the risk of being convinced of such absurdities again. He was sure it was not the interest of the people to pay high taxes and prices in preference to low ones, however it might be as to particular monopolies or monopolists. Much had been said as to the President's support of the tariff, the bank, and the internal improvements. It seems, however, that he has destroyed, or nearly destroyed them all; and the friends of them seem to be almost in despair. He said President Jackson was the first President who had recommended even a reduction of protecting duties, and had followed it up through his whole administration; and in this his last annual message, recommended a reduction of the income to the wants of the Government. This had made Mr. B. hold to him and to his administration with far more tenacity than he would have done; for all men commit faults, and doubtless General Jackson had committed many. Mr. B. said these were his opinions, very unexpectedly to himself expressed; but he hoped they would be understood, and he was willing the subject should go to any committee that would forward their being put into execution. He said he should vote against the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HARDIN did not think we need be under apprehensions relative to the tariff; it was not that which had filled the Treasury to overflowing. It was the thirst for speculations, principally in the public lands. How long was this to last? In the course of a few years all the lands in the western States would be disposed of, and then where was the revenue to support the Government to come from? The tariff must be touched with a delicate and master hand. In 1842, he contended, the revenue would not exceed the expenses of the Government, and the public lands at that time would yield but a very small amount of money. The great interests of the south and west, the production of sugar, silk, and grain, he contended, ought to be protected. He was in favor of referring the subject to the Committee of Ways and Means. He imagined that the objections raised to the distribution bill of the last session was because the deposit banks were not able to pay over the money placed in their hands.

Mr. VANDERPOEL said, that though the debate had taken a wide range, he was not disappointed; for at this crisis, every gentleman must know that no proposition could be introduced here, remotely bearing upon the question of protection, without provoking a most earnest debate. He would not now commit himself to any interest—he would reserve to himself the right of acting independently upon all propositions that might hereafter come before us touching that portion of our tariff that involved protecting duties; he would not even ask the representatives of any particular interest to “harmonize” with him before he acted. He would reserve to himself this right, this independence of action, though he had the honor to represent a district to a very great extent manufacturing. It was a district agricultural and manufacturing. He would here take occasion to say, that his first object was to terminate a state of things by which millions and millions were annually taken from the pockets of the people, that were not required for the purposes of the Government; and if that great and desirable end could be obtained consistently with that protection which our manufacturers now enjoy, he would rejoice, yes, he would most heartily rejoice, for he felt for the great manufacturing interests of the country that solicitude which the representative of a district like his should feel. But if the alternative should be presented, “Reduce the duties at once below the rates contained in the compromise bill, or accumulate in your Treasury millions and millions for years hereafter, for the demoralizing purpose of distribution;” if such an alternative should be presented, he would meet it boldly and independently; because then the question would rise above any particular interest; it would be a question touching the interest of the whole country, not only for the present time, but for years to come. But he sincerely hoped, and still believed, that that trying alternative could still be guarded against; that we could select articles enough for reduction that did not require protection to bring down the revenue to the wants of the Government.

He would now say a word about the question immediately and legitimately under discussion. To what committee did the subjects embraced in the amendment of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts properly belong? If to the Committee on Manufactures, then must the Committee of Ways and Means be an unimportant committee indeed. And this, too, instead of being what we have always supposed them to be—the most important committee of the House; then would they only have to report to us what ways and means are necessary to keep the wheels of Government in motion, and ask the Committee on Manufactures to be so kind and condescending as to tell them out of what articles these “ways and means” must be raised. This would not only be depriving the Committee of Ways and Means of their appropriate functions, but would be against all precedent. What but the Committee of Ways and Means took cognizance of these subjects, when the “compromise” bill passed? He (Mr. V.) was not then a member of this House, but he was an attentive reader of its proceedings; and he well recollected that an honorable gentleman from the city of New York (Mr. Verplanck) was then chairman of the Ways and Means, and reported the bill upon which the compromise from the Senate was engrafted. If it properly belonged to the Ways and Means then, why should it belong to the Committee on Manufactures now? No good reason had been urged for the change, and he should therefore vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BRIGGS contended the question was a simple one. That part of the message which related to the protective duties ought to go to the Committee on Manufactures. That part relating to finances might belong to the Committee of Ways and Means; but certainly that part of it relating to the protective duties should go to another committee. Adverting to the congratulatory conclusions of the remarks of the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng,) Mr. B. said it would be found that Thomas Jefferson had, by messages, recommended not only high, but prohibitory duties, exclusively for the protection of the manufacturing interest.

Mr. ADAMS pointed to former precedents, in which the subject had been divided in the same manner, in which he now proposed to divide it, and went on at some length to reply to the argument of the gentleman from New York, (Vanderpoel,) and alluded to the proceedings which took place at the session of 1832, when the compromise act was passed. That compromise was not effected by the representatives of the people, but by certain individuals in another part of this building, without consulting the interests of the manufacturers.

Mr. TOUCEY wished, if practicable or in order, for a division of the question. He said he was willing to refer the subject to both committees, in its twofold character; first to call upon the Committee of Ways and Means to report their views upon it, as it related to the revenue; and next, to refer it to the Committee on Manufactures for their views as to its effect upon the subject of protecting duties.

Mr. EVERETT suggested a modification of the motion, by merely striking out the words “and every thing connected therewith.”

Mr. ADAMS would have been willing to allow the resolution to be adopted as it was originally reported, if it had not been so general in its character. He then modified his amendment by retaining only the additional clause at the end of the resolution, which he had moved that morning.

Mr. GILLET moved to amend the amendment by inserting the words “on manufactured articles.” He said that if the subject was divided at all, a branch of it should go to the Committee on Agriculture.

This amendment was rejected, and the amendment of Mr. Adams being agreed to, so amended the resolution was concurred in.

Mr. GALBRAITH moved to amend the twelfth resolution as follows:

“12. Resolved, That so much of the said message as relates to amending the Constitution of the United States, together with all propositions and resolutions submitted at the last and present sessions of Congress, proposing amendments to the constitution, be referred to a select committee, to be composed of nine members;” to insert the words “which have been or may be” subject, &c. Lost 63 to 86.

Mr. GALBRAITH proposed a further amendment, "and that said committee be required to report on or before the first of January next." lost.

The resolution was then agreed to:

The 15th resolution was then read as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the "condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, the vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business in all of them, and the causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation," be referred to a select committee, to consist of nine members, with power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to inquire into the condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, into the manner in which the public business has been discharged in all of them, and into all causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which said departments, of their bureaus or offices, or any of their officers or agents of every description whatever, directly or indirectly connected with them in any manner, officially or unofficially, in duties pertaining to the public interest, have fulfilled or failed to accomplish the objects of their creation, or have violated their duties, or have injured and impaired the public service and interest; and that said committee, in its inquiries, may refer to such periods of time as to them may seem expedient and proper.

Mr. PEARCE of R. I. said as this subject was likely to be debated, he would move an adjournment, but gave way to the CHAIR to present an Executive communication.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of State, in answer to a resolution of the 3d of July last, requiring him to ascertain and report to the House the number of persons imprisoned for debt in the District of Columbia, since the year 1820; which, on motion of Mr. MERCER, was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed.

Mr. TALIAFERRO asked leave to submit a resolution providing for going into the election of a Chaplain on the part of the House on Friday, the 16th, but it was objected to.

The motion of Mr. PEARCE to adjourn recurring—

Mr. PEYTON wished to inquire of the gentleman if his motion to adjourn was predicated on his own intention to address the House on the subject of the resolution? Because, if such was the case, Mr. P. would not oppose it.

Mr. PEARCE replied, that he would claim no privilege on that account; and whether he should speak upon the question or not, he was not then prepared to say.

The House then adjourned.

IN SENATE,

THURSDAY, December 15, 1836.

Mr. RIVES presented the credentials of the Hon. RICHARD E. PARKER, elected by the Legislature of the State of Virginia a Senator from that State, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. Benjamin Watkins Leigh.

Mr. BROWN presented the credentials of the Hon. ROBERT STRANGE, elected by the Legislature of the State of North Carolina a Senator from that State, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. W. P. Mangum.

The VICE PRESIDENT then administered to Messrs. Parker and Strange, the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and they took their seats in the Senate.

Mr. WEBSTER presented two petitions, numerous signed by citizens of Boston, praying for the abolishment or reduction of the duty on foreign coal, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. SWIFT presented the petition of Patience Babcock, praying for remuneration for supplies furnished the American troops during the Revolutionary war, which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. KENT presented the petitions of William

A. Gordon, Alexander Estep, and the heirs of Thomas Jones; which were severally referred.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of Capt. Shubrick of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion of Mr. BUCHANAN, the petition and papers of Charles Frazier Sibbold, on the files of the last session, were again referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion of Mr. RUGGLES, leave was granted to Thomas Cutts to withdraw his petition and papers, presented at the last session.

On motion of Mr. HENDRICKS, the petition of the inhabitants of Michigan city, praying for a port of entry, presented at the last session, was again referred to the Committee on Commerce; and similar memorials from the citizens of Lafayette and Delphi, Indiana, were again referred in like manner.

Mr. NICHOLAS presented the petition of Commodore Patterson of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of William Eaton, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce; also the petition of sundry merchants and importers of Boston, praying for the repeal of the fifth section of the act of July, 1832, respecting the duties on imported goods, and for the revival of the provisions of the law of 1818, granting credits at the custom-house; which was referred to the same committee.

Mr. NILES presented the petition of John S. Williams, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GRUNDY presented the petition of the heirs of Washington Bowie, and others, praying remuneration for the loss of the ship Allghany, which was lost in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. HUBBARD presented the petition of the collector of the port of Portsmouth, praying for additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FULTON presented the petition of sundry citizens of Arkansas, praying for an appropriation for the defence of the southern frontier; also several memorials from the Legislature of Arkansas, praying for an appropriation for the removal of obstructions to certain rivers in that State, and for extending pre-emptions to the unsurveyed lands, and that the refuse lands may be granted to actual settlers; all of which were appropriately referred.

Mr. PAGE presented the petition of Joseph Ford, praying for arrears of pension, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Petitions were further presented by Messrs. MCKEAN, TIPTON, WALL, KING of Alabama, LINN, WEBSTER, BROWN, and RIVES.

Mr. ROBINSON offered the following resolution, which was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the cause of the destruction by fire of the building in which was the General Post Office, the city Post Office, and the Patent Office.

Mr. TALLMADGE submitted the following resolution, which lies one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be directed to inquire into the expediency of furnishing some of the principal post offices in the United States with copies of the maps of the post offices and post roads, which have been compiled under the direction of the Post Office Department.

Mr. MOORE submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing payment to such volunteers and other troops as have been called out during the late Creek war, and not mustered into actual service; and, also, for indemnifying the Alabama mounted volunteers in the said war for horses lost in the service.

Mr. BENTON, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of Mrs. Caroline Clitheral; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. LINN gave notice that he would to-morrow introduce a bill for the relief of the heirs of Sebastian Butcher and others, and a bill to provide for the extension of certain surveys.

Mr. WRIGHT gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to bring in a bill supplementary to the act establishing the Mint, and for the regulation of the coins of the United States.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, on leave, introduced bills for the relief of George F. Strother, and the legal representatives of Samuel Y. Keen; which were severally twice read, and referred.

Mr. TOMLINSON, on leave, introduced a bill to extend the time for issuing scrip on United States military land warrants; which was twice read, and referred.

Mr. ROBINSON, on leave, introduced a bill to provide for the establishment of a Surveyor General's office in Illinois; which was twice read and referred.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT,
Ordered, That so much of the President's message as relates to finance, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MOORE gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for the relinquishment of the sixteenth section of land granted for the use of schools, and the entry of other lands in lieu thereof.

Mr. CLAY gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill to appropriate, for a limited time, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant lands, to certain States, and for other purposes.

The resolutions submitted yesterday by Messrs. LINN, WALKER, and HUBBARD, were severally considered and adopted.

The following bills were severally read the second time, and referred to appropriate committees:

The bill for the more equitable administration of the navy pension fund;

The bill for the relief of John McCarty;

The bill for the relief of William East;

The bill for the relief of Samuel Miller;

The bill to establish a foundry and armory in the west or southwest, arsenals in certain States, and depots of arms in certain States and Territories;

The bill granting a township of land to the French University of St. Louis, Missouri;

The bill to authorize Peter Warner, of Indiana, to purchase a certain half section of land;

The bill supplementary to the act entitled an act to provide for an exchange of lands with certain Indian tribes, and their removal beyond the Mississippi;

The bill granting to the State of Missouri a certain quantity of land for the purposes of internal improvement;

The bill supplementary to the act to amend the Judicial system of the United States;

The bill for the payment of a debt due to the heirs of Antoine Peltier;

The bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, after which it adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

THURSDAY, December 15, 1836.

CONFLAGRATION OF THE POST OFFICE.

Mr. CONNER, from the Committee on the Post Offices and Post Roads, on leave, reported a resolution, instructing that committee to inquire into the cause of this morning's conflagration of the Post Office Department; and also to inquire what losses the Government may have sustained, and whether any and what measures of legislation may be necessary; which was concurred in by the House.

Mr. PARKER, on leave, submitted a resolution, to print five thousand extra copies of the account of the receipts and expenditures of the United States, for the year 1835, for the use of the members of the House, which, under the rule, lies over one day.

Mr. OWENS, on leave, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill entitled an act to amend an act entitled an act to establish branches of the Mint of the United States; which was read twice and referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

On motion of Mr. MANN of N. Y. the House resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. WISE on Tuesday last, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the "condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, the vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business in all of them, and the causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation," be referred to a select committee, to consist of nine members, with power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to inquire into the condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, into the manner in which the public business has been discharged in all of them, and into all causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which said departments, or their bureaus or officers, or any of their officers or agents of every description whatever, directly or indirectly connected with them in any manner, officially or unofficially, in duties pertaining to the public interest, have fulfilled or failed to accomplish the objects of their creation, or have violated their duties, or have injured and impaired the public service and interest; and that said committee, in its inquiries, may refer to such periods of time as to them may seem expedient and proper."

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island went at some length into an argument in opposition to the resolution. The resolution, he said, was predicated on a clause in the President's message which was not usual, and perhaps it was gratuitous on the part of the President. The question was, whether it was necessary, because the President, in his last annual message, with an overflow of feeling towards the heads of the Executive Departments—as he believed him to have the kindest feelings toward all men living—had thought proper to compliment them, it was necessary to have an investigating committee to ascertain whether he spoke the truth. Although it was not the usual course, still the President had a precedent. Many years ago, Mr. Monroe stepped out of the usual course to compliment the then head of the War Department, (Mr. Calhoun.) But because he did this, no committee was raised to ascertain whether or not the compliment was deserved. He was opposed to the resolution, because the direct object of it was to ascertain whether the President spoke the truth or not. Hethen went on to show that all the subjects contemplated to be investigated by this proposed select committee was provided for by the House in the appointment of the standing committees. Among these committees was that on Ways and Means, and it was the duty of that committee to take into consideration and report upon all "such reports of the Treasury Department, and all such propositions relative to the revenue, as might be referred to them by the House; to inquire into the state of the public debt or the revenue, and of the expenditures, and to report from time to time their opinion thereon; to examine into the state of the several public departments, and particularly into the laws making appropriations of moneys, and to report whether the moneys have been disbursed conformably with such laws; and also to report from time to time such provisions and arrangements as may be necessary to add to the economy of the departments, and the accountability of their officers." That committee was required to do all that any select committee, however raised, could do. Besides this, there were other committees, whose duty it was to examine into the condition of the departments, and the expenditures thereof. Every gentleman must recollect that at the last session of Congress, a gentleman from North Carolina, (Mr. Shepperd,) chairman of one of these committees, investigated the affairs of some of these departments; made a report, and the report was acted on by the House; and could not that before done, be again done? He submitted to the House, then, to say whether this resolution was not gratuitous, uncalled for, and had nothing to justify it, except the paragraph alluded to in the President's message. Another objection he had to it was, that gentlemen said it was not intended to be raised out of any hostile feeling to the President of the United States. Well, what were the Secretary of State, Treasury, War, Navy, &c.? They were the mere mouth-pieces of the President; men selected to do what he could not do himself. Mr. W. read the law relating to the Department of State, showing his duties, and showing that the head of that Department was created to do for the President under the law, that which the President could not do in person. How then could gentlemen say that the President was not implicated, when the acts of his ministers were nothing more nor less than his acts. Let gentlemen take the bull by the horns. If they had any allegations to make against the President let them do so in form. While passing on the acts of his principal public officers, they necessarily passed on the acts of the President himself. He then proceeded to show that the laws of the land threw around individuals certain guards; they were not to be arraigned without notice, &c. But how were the heads of these Departments to be heard and tried under the resolution. They were to have no hearing and no trial, and were to be disfranchised and divested of their rights, upon the mere rumors of newspapers, and gossip of old women. There never was a committee raised upon mere suggestion and gossip, without something like a charge or an allegation. Then let the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Wise,) or any other gentleman, make out a charge against the President, and he might have as large a committee, and have it clothed with what powers he pleased; but until this course should be adopted, he was, and should be, opposed to the adoption of the resolution. Who could tell what powers this committee might assume? It might require the Departments to submit to it all matters connected with removal, or it might assume any other authority it pleased. The resolution claimed a greater scope for the committee than was ever granted to a committee of that House, or any other legislative tribunal. When was its powers to cease? Who could tell this? From the form of the resolution, never; because they were to take cognizance of all matters, from all quarters of the Union; from every town, village, city, and hamlet; all causes of complaint from responsible and irresponsible sources; of all the ten thousand charges which an old lady, who had charge of a paper in this city, had made, and the ten thousand more which she probably would make.

But, sir, said Mr. P. this was to be somewhat an ex parte proceeding. Suppose the heads of some of these Departments shall have done some commendable acts. The committee will not be bound nor required to look into it. No, sir, their object will be to arraign them and bring them to trial, and inflict punishment upon them. Perhaps the committee might wish to inquire into the causes which take some of the heads of Departments home to their native States, to ascertain whether they want to operate on the politics of such States. Well, sir, the Secretary of State went home during the last summer; and, if his object was to operate on the politics of Georgia, he met with but poor success. The Secretary of the Navy also went home, but his going, if he did go for political effect, only added to the strength of the party opposed to him. If the results in those States were the consequence of their visits, it would have been much better they had not gone. But suppose, as the President has said, that all of the heads of these Departments shall have faithfully done their duty, we shall have no report from this committee on the subject. It was to be a fault-finding committee; their object was to condemn, and not to compliment the President or his ministers. If there was no want of fidelity in the departments, you would have no report from this committee. Although the Secretary of the Treasury may have his department in such a condition that any thing which is brought against it, either from ghost or goblin damned, could not effect it; although the Postmaster General may have produced order out of chaos, and although the Secretary of War may have discharged with the greatest ability two offices, not a word will be said in their favor by this committee: their object ex vi termini will be to undo what the President has done; or, failing in that, they will do nothing. Committees of that House were raised for special causes; for causes shown. What were the causes shown why this committee should be raised? What were the specifications? Then, unless they were to innovate on the rules of the House, they could not adopt this resolution in its present form. Let a resolution be introduced in due form, and he imagined no friend of the Executive on that floor would shrink from an investigation. Let the charges be made against the Executive and his ministers, jointly and severally, and he thought he could safely say none would shrink from the investigation. It was not his business to go into Roman history, from the age of Augustus to that of Tiberius, for the purpose of finding out examples of men who had waded through blood to power; and if he did so, it was only for instruction, and to make him the more happy that he lived in a country where none of those scenes were enacted.

Many men, Mr. P. said, changed their minds, and opinions of men, and got to disapprove the course of those they used to admire.

Mr. WISE said, if the gentleman alluded to him, he must inform him that he never was in the situation of the gentleman from Rhode Island in his life.

Mr. PEARCE proceeded. The character of a nation depended very much on the character of the individuals at the head of the Government. No nation was rendered more valuable by their resources than by the character and reputation of the individual who presided over it. Why did Virginia hold herself so high? It might be somewhat on account of her soil, climate, and resources, but more because of her Washington, her Henrys, her Jeffersons and her Madisons. Their characters not only gave character to Virginia, but to all the States. Why was he (Mr. P.) proud of the little State he had the honor, in part, to represent? He, to be sure, might be proud of her great resources; but more proud, because it was the land of Greene and Perry. Seven cities contended for the honor of giving birth to Homer; and tyrannical as Napoleon might have been, his name was revered by most of the French nation. What would England, the fast-anchored isle of the ocean, have been, if it was not for her poets, her philosophers, and her statesmen?

Mr. P. concluded, by repeating that he could not vote for the resolution in its present form; and at the same time said, he would not shrink from the responsibility of an investigation, if a proper committee was raised. He submitted to the House the following amendment: Strike out all after the word "resolved," and insert the following:

"That so much of the President's message as is in the following words, to wit: "Before concluding this paper, I think it is due to the various Executive Departments to bear testimony to their prosperous condition, and to the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted. It has been my aim to enforce in all of them a vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business; and it is gratifying to me to believe that there is no just cause of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation," be referred to a select committee of nine members, with instructions to inquire into any specific causes of complaint which may be alleged against the integrity of the administration of any of the departments, or their bureaus, or the vigilance and fidelity with which their duties have been discharged, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers."

Mr. PEYTON followed in support of the original resolution, and in reply to the gentleman from Rhode Island. Mr. P. adverted to the change that had taken place in the sentiments of that gentleman since General Jackson came into power, and went on to examine the objections made by him to the resolution. His first objection to it was, that it questioned the veracity and integrity of the President. This was the old cry under which that gentleman and his party had shielded themselves for some years past, when an investigation into abuses was sought for. The gentleman from Rhode Island also said that the Committee of Ways and Means had power to make this investigation. Mr. P. denied this. The head of that committee (Mr. Cambreleng) would not dare to carry on the inquiry; and even if they were to set about it, their efforts would be powerless. It would be like the trial of the notorious Reuben M. Whitney, during the late recess, in East Tennessee, conducted by another of the new friends of the President, a Mr. Kennedy, and tried by the President himself, who pronounced the verdict that Whitney was a persecuted patriot.

Mr. P. adverted to the President's journey to Tennessee, and to certain remarks alleged to have fallen from him in relation to Mr. P. and his friend from Virginia, (Mr. Wise,) wherein they were both denounced as guilty of falsehood; and also detailed sundry other expressions said to have fallen from General Jackson, which Mr. P. said he was prepared to prove. He controverted that doctrine of the gentlemen from Rhode Island and his party, that the President alone ought to be held responsible for the acts of the Executive officers. Why should they all be shielded under the broad mantle of General Jackson? He was for stripping them of this shield, and letting them stand forth in their true colors. He denied that the resolution was intended as an attack upon Gen. Jackson; nor was its object to institute a criminal prosecution against the other officers of the Government, but simply to enable the representatives of the people to look into and examine the archives of the Government; and why should this be refused? Mr. P. went on to say, that the Treasury order was intended for political effect, identical with the objects of the travelling cabinet last summer; the Secretary of State to Georgia, the Secretary of the Navy to New Jersey; and Amos, himself, it was said, to New England; all of which journeys were undertaken for electioneering purposes and with a similar result in each State.

The gentleman from Rhode Island had said, that the resolution might lead to a disfranchisement of the officers. Mr. P. maintained, that, though facts might come out leading to criminal punishment; some of the cases, very probably, to expiation in the penitentiary; but that was only the possible, remote effect, and not the immediate design of the resolution, which was merely the institution of an inquiry.

Mr. P. then went into a cursory review of the proceedings of the House, on certain prominent measures of the Jackson party, the Executive patronage bill, and the proposed amendments to the constitution in particular, in order to show the insincerity with which the majority had acted on those occasions; being avowedly in favor of them, but effectually defeating them by their votes, and the direction they forced those measures to take. He then resorted to the subject of the resolution, and said it was due to the character of the existing administration, due to the one about to come into power, and, above all, due to the country, that inquiry into these alleged abuses should be made. What had the party to fear? They surely could have no apprehensions that an unfavorable committee would be appointed; for, as yet, in that point, they certainly could have no complaint to make. After dwelling on these topics at some length, he concluded, by expressing a hope that the House would suffer the resolution to pass in the form presented by the mover.

Mr. GLASCOCK said he should, in the first place, vote to sustain the resolution of the gentleman from Rhode Island, and if the House should not adopt it, he would then vote for that of the gentleman from Virginia. It was, however, due to the administration, and due to those distinguished gentlemen who had filled the head Executive offices in this Government, that the charges against them should be specifically made, and not on vague rumor. At the same time he was willing that both the gentlemen members of the committee, and have an opportunity of examining every document, exploring all the archives, and ransacking every recess, for information if they had any suspicion of frauds. Mr. G. then went on at some length to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee, which were uncalled for, especially at this time, so far as the President was concerned, from any thing contained in the brief passage quoted from the message. He said he knew that the President desired investigation. Mr. G. was authorized to say that it was the President's own desire that, before his term of service should expire, a strict investigation should take place into all the different Departments, and that all matters therewith connected should be inquired into.

Mr. RIPLEY said, as a member from Louisiana, he would raise his voice against the original resolution, if no other man did; for it was entirely without precedent in the history of this Government. It went directly to impeach the integrity of the President, whose correctness of conduct and purity of motive had never yet been questioned; and it proposed objects, requiring an exercise of power extending far beyond any ever exerted by that House. The charges should be specific.

Mr. PEYTON made an explanation in reply to the gentlemen from Georgia and Louisiana, denying that he had ever opposed the leading measures and principles of Andrew Jackson; nor had he striven to derogate from his character or reputation. Mr. P. would say, as he had always said, that General Jackson was an honest man.

Mr. MANN, of New York, remarked that he was asked, on all sides of the House, to make a motion to adjourn; but if he did, another day would then be consumed in debate, and, in his opinion, of all the debates he ever witnessed on this floor, this was the most useless. Was there any opposition to the passage of these resolutions in some shape or other? All he had heard was nothing like opposition to them, except from his friend from Louisiana, (Mr. Ripley,) and he understood that gentleman to object only on the ground of want of specification. But, let him ask, could it be unknown there that this cry of corruption now heard from several quarters of that House had been made against the heads of these Departments for the last two or three years, not only without specification, but without even a single fact proffered either to that House or to the country, showing mal-administration, mal-feasance, or corruption. Now, for one, under these circumstances, Mr. M. would be well pleased to see the accusers come face to face with the accused, and that the latter should suffer an examination into all their transactions. Let them be brought to light; and if there be corruption any where in this administration, let us know it—draw it all out. For one, continued Mr. M., I assume upon myself to say, in behalf of the Executive heads of the Departments of this administration, that they court inquiry, and desire your investigation. Send your committees there, arm them with full power to send for persons and papers, and examine every action of their lives. For one, sir, I am in favor of it. But the original resolution, Mr. M. said, seemed to him very much in the nature of a general search, without specifying one single fact, though he would not have the inquiry confined too much. He was in favor, then, of the motion of the gentleman from Rhode Island, and to give the committee power to examine into any charge brought against the Executive Departments, whether it be by gentlemen on that floor, or by any other respectable man; and he would again repeat, that if corruption was found to exist, let it be brought to light; if not, let the accusers be confounded.

In reply to a question from Mr. UNDERWOOD,

Mr. MANN explained, that he did not say that he should vote against the original resolution, if the amendment be not adopted, but that he preferred the latter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the House for some time in opposition to the amendment, on the ground of its inefficiency to meet the desired object.

Mr. LANE rose and moved an adjournment, but gave way to

Mr. BRIGGS, who, on leave, submitted a resolution, giving the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads power to send for persons and papers, in investigating into the causes of the burning of the Post Office building. Mr. B. explained that the resolution was offered to supply a defect in the one adopted on the same subject that morning. The resolution was concurred nem. diss. and then

The House adjourned.

The following gentlemen were appointed by the Speaker the Select Committee on the amendment of the Constitution of the United States:

Mr. DROMGOOLE of Virginia.
VANDERPOEL of New York.
LEA of Tennessee.
MAY of Illinois.
RIPLEY of Louisiana.
UNDERWOOD of Kentucky.
LYON of Alabama.
HUBLEY of Pennsylvania.
MCCOMAS of Virginia.

WEST POINT ACADEMY.

The following gentlemen were appointed a Select Committee to examine into the abuses, if any, which exist in the Military Academy at West Point, in pursuance of a resolution to that effect submitted by Mr. HAWES:

Mr. HAWES of Kentucky.
HANNEGAN of Indiana.
LEWIS of Alabama.
PIERCE of New Hampshire.
BRIGGS of Massachusetts.
SMITH of Maine.
BROWN of New York.
JONES of Virginia.
CAMPBELL of South Carolina.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

FRIDAY, December 16, 1836.

On motion of Mr. OWENS, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, reported by him on yesterday, from the Committee of Ways and Means, amendatory of the act for the establishment of the Mint of the United States; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FORESTER, on leave, submitted the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making suitable compensation for the expenses incurred by the volunteers or militia in equipping for a campaign, and who were received into the service of the United States, but immediately discharged, as may seem just.

On motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, of Ohio, the House agreed to proceed with the private orders; and, on motion of the same gentleman, went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HAYNES in the Chair, on the following bills:

1. Bill providing for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States;
2. Bill for the relief of Robert Allison, a lieutenant in the revolutionary war;
3. Bill for the relief of the representatives of Col. Anthony White;
4. Bill for the relief of the representatives of Tristram Coffin, deceased;
5. Bill for the relief of the representatives of Capt. John Winston, deceased;
6. Bill for the relief of the representatives of Capt. Tarpley White, deceased;
7. Bill to amend the charter of the Potomac Fire Insurance Company;
8. Bill for the relief of Lieut. John McDowell.
9. Bill for the relief of Elihu Hall Bay and others;
10. Bills for the relief of William W. Stevenson and Joseph Henderson;
11. A bill for the relief of Simon Summers;
12. A bill for the relief of the representatives of Captain Thomas Cook, deceased;
13. A bill for the relief of the Union Gold Min-from Virginia and Tennessee should be named ing Company;

14. A bill to reward the captors of the Tripolitan frigate, late the frigate Philadelphia;

15. A bill for the relief of the representatives of Garland Burnley, deceased;

16. A bill to provide compensation to James Barron, for the use of his invention, called a Ventilator of ships;

17. A bill for the relief of Mary Tucker;

18. A bill for the relief of James L. Cochran;

19. A bill for the relief of Thomas M. Burland;

20. A bill for the relief of Isaac Welborn;

21. A bill for the relief of the representatives of
Col. Thomas Knowlton, deceased;

22. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Joshua
Fanning, deceased;

23. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Lt. Col.
Richard Campbell;

24. A bill for the relief of the representatives of Dr. William Johonnot, deceased;

25. A bill for the relief of J. Elol Rachal;

26. A bill for the relief of Paul Poissot;

27. A bill for the benefit of William Marbury;

28. A bill for the relief of the representatives of Presly Thornton, deceased;

The bill No. 1, being taken up,

Mr. HARDIN moved to strike out from the first section, the following "4th of May, 1822," and insert "4th of July, 1812, so as to extend its provisions back to the former period.

After some remarks from Messrs. HARDIN and WHITTLESEY of Ohio, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLSEY moved a further amendment to the bill extending its provisions to those whose property had been impressed in the Florida and Creek wars; which, after some remarks from Messrs. HOLSEY, WHITTLESEY of Ohio,
WHITE of Florida, and HARDIN, was rejected, and the bill was laid aside to be reported.

After some time spent in Committee of the Whole, Mr. WARD moved that the committee rise and report bills number 1, 2, and 3 to the House; which was agreed to.

The Speaker having resumed the chair, the bill providing for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States, and the bill for the relief of Robert Allison, a lieutenant in the revolutionary war, were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. ALLEN of Vermont then moved that bill
No. 3 be postponed to Monday next; lost.

Mr. MANN of New York moved that when the House adjourn, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Objection being made, Mr. MANN moved a suspension of the rules.

On this question Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana called for the yeas and nays, which were not ordered, and the motion to suspend was agreed to—ayes 87, noes 40.

Mr. HANNEGAN, on leave, submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of nine members, be appointed to examine into the condition of the steamboat navigation of the country generally, the causes of the frequent disasters in that way, and the propriety of a general law for the regulation of such navigation.

On motion of Mr. Allen, of Vermont,

The House adjourned over to Monday next.

IN SENATE.

Monday, December 19, 1836.

The CHAIR communicated the credentials of the Hon. James Buchanan, re-elected, by the Legislation of the State of Pennsylvania, a Senator from that State for six years, from the 4th of March next; which were read.

The CHAIR also communicated a letter from the Treasury Department, enclosing a report from the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia on the subject of the explosions of steam boilers, and the means of preventing them; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALHOUN presented the petition of sundry citizens of South Carolina and Georgia, praying for the establishment of a mail route; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SOUTHARD presented the petition of Tench Ringgold, late Marshal of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CALHOUN presented the petition of Col.
Samuel Warren; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. LINN presented the petition of Martin
Thomas, late superintendent of the lead mines in Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WALKER presented the petition of the Trustees of the Nashville Hospital; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CLAY presented the petition of a number of the revolutionary pensioners of the United States, praying that their pensions may be increased. Referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. RIVES, the petition and papers of Daniel Steinarod, on the files of the last session, were again referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of a number of the merchants and other citizens of Philadelphia, praying that an appropriation may be made for the purchase of a site and the building of a custom house at that place. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUCHANAN also presented a petition from the Judges of the United States Court for the District of Pennsylvania, and from a number of the lawyers of the city of Philadelphia, praying that an appropriation may be made for the building of a court house at that city. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of a number of merchants, sufferers by the fire in New York, in December, 1835, praying that the duties paid by them on goods that were destroyed by said fire, may be refunded to them. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FULTON presented the memorial of the Legislature of Arkansas, praying for an extension of the time for granting bounty lands to soldiers of the late war. Also, a memorial from the same, praying for an appropriation for opening a road in said State, both of which were appropriately referred.

Mr. HUBBARD presented some additional papers in support of the claim of Moses Strong; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HUBBARD also presented the petition of two of the sureties of the late John P. Decatur, praying, for reasons therein set forth, to be released from their liabilities. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petitions were further presented by Messrs.
EWING of Ill. DAVIS, GRUNDY, TOMLIN-SON, ROBBINS, PRENTISS, NILES, ROBIN-SON, SEVIER, and PAGE.

Mr. CALHOUN gave notice that he would, to-morrow, ask leave to introduce a bill to continue the operations of the deposit act of the last session, so as to operate on the excess of revenue that may be received this year.

While up, Mr. C. said he would put a question to the chairman of the Committee on Finance,
(Mr. Wright.) He wished to be informed by that gentleman, whether his motion of Thursday to refer so much of the President's message as relates to finance to the Finance Committee, included that part of the message which relates to the reduction of the revenue to the wants of the Government?

Mr. WRIGHT replied that he was unable to answer the question precisely. In making his motion, he had intended to refer all parts of the message relating to finance to the Committee on Finance. He had had no consultation with his colleagues, as to how far they considered that portion of the message referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina, as coming under their consideration. Whether or not they considered it as more properly belonging to the Committee on Manufactures than to the Committee on Finance, he knew not.

Mr. CALHOUN said, that he would then move, in order to remove all doubts on the question, that that portion of the message to which he had alluded, be referred to the Committee on Finance. He made the motion, because of its probably having a stronger bearing on the action of this body, and on political events hereafter, than any other question which might be brought before the Senate.

Mr. NILES submitted the following resolution, which lies one day on the table for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire whether there is any law in force in this District which confers on a Medical society, or any other association, whether self-constituted or incorporated, the power to grant licenses to persons to practice medicine, or to decide on licenses granted elsewhere, and making it illegal and a criminal offence for persons not so licensed or approved to practice physic or surgery in the District. Also, to inquire into the justice and expediency of the repeal of such laws, if any such are found to exist.

Mr. NICHOLAS submitted the following resolution, which lies one day on the table for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of an appropriation for the erection of a suitable building for a custom house and public stores in the city of New Orleans.

Mr. WALKER submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing an arsenal at Columbus, in the State of Mississippi, as recommended in the memorial of the Legislature of that State, presented to the Senate at the last session.

Mr. SEVIER submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of confirming to the purchasers thereof, certain tracts of land sold to them by John Pope, late Governor of Arkansas, by virtue of an act of Congress, authorizing him to dispose of ten sections of the public land to build a State house at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Mr. EWING, of Illinois, submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making provision, by law, for the establishment of a more efficient system of operations on the Cumberland road, in Illinois, and for the appointment of a separate superintendency for said road in that State; and also into the expediency of continuing said road from Vandalia, Illinois, to the Mississippi river.

Mr. LINN submitted the following resolutions, which lie one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act establishing the Territorial Government of Wisconsin, as to authorize the appointment of two additional attorneys, and that the committee also inquire into the expediency of authorizing, by further amendment of said act, the extending of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, in cases where the sum in controversy shall not exceed one hundred dollars.

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of appropriating money for holding treaties with, and the purchase of the lands belonging to, the Sacs,
Fox, Sioux, and Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin Territory, and to provide for their removal west of the Mississippi river.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands
be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a Surveyor General's office for the Territory of Wisconsin; and that the same committee also inquire into the expediency of establishing two additional offices for the sale of the public lands in that part of the Territory lying west of the Mississippi river, and comprising the counties of Des Moines and Du Buque.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of appropriating, for the purpose of constructing roads and bridges, in the Territory of Wisconsin, in money, the value at this time of all the rent lead received at the United States lead mines, on the upper Mississippi river; which money shall be expended for the above purpose, under the direction of the Governor and Legislative Assembly of said Territory.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making appropriations, in lands and in money, for the construction of roads in the Territory of Wisconsin, from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi river, through the United States lead mines; for a road from the northern boundary line of Missouri, through the counties of Des Moines and Du Buque; for the completion of the road leading from Chicago, Illinois, through the counties of Milwaukee and Brown, to Fort Howard at Green Bay.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of improving harbors and constructing light houses on the coast of Lake Michigan, in the counties of Milwaukee and Brown, in Wisconsin Territory; and that the said committee also inquire into the expediency of constructing a pier and beacon light at the head of Green Bay, and of placing buoys in the channel of Green Bay to the mouth of Fox river.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a separate Territorial Government for that section of the present Territory of Wisconsin which lies west of the Mississippi river and north of the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act of Congress for laying off certain towns in Wisconsin, approved July 2d, 1836, as to conform in its provisions to the amendment to the act entitled "An act authorizing the laying off a town on Bean river, in the State of Illinois, and for other purposes, approved 5th of February, 1829."

Mr. BENTON submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause a statement to be laid before the Senate, showing, as nearly as may be, the different appropriations which will leave unexpended balances on the 1st day of January next, the amount so left, the objects to which they are applicable, and the dates of the acts by which they were authorized.

Mr. RUGGLES submitted the following resolution, which was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to examine and report the extent of the loss sustained by the burning of the Patent Office, and to consider whether any, and what measures ought to be adopted to repair the loss, and to establish such evidences of property in patented inventions, as the destruction of the records and drawings may have rendered necessary for its security; to report by bill or otherwise.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the committee was appointed by the Chair, and consists of the following gentlemen: Messrs. RUGGLES, PRENTISS, STRANGE, PARKER, and BAYARD.

Mr. ROBBINS, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of Andrew Armstrong; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. SOUTHARD, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of certain officers of the United States sloop of war Boston; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. SOUTHARD gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for the enlistment of boys in the navy.

Mr. LINN, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of Sebastian Butcher, and the heirs of Bartholomew Butcher, Michael Butcher, and Peter Broom; which was read twice and referred.

Mr. LINN also, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize the Washington county Turnpike company in the State of Missouri, to construct a road through the public lands; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. HENDRICKS gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the East Florida and Perdido Railroad company to construct a railroad through the public lands.

Mr. CLAY, in pursuance of notice given, asked leave to bring in a bill to appropriate, for a limited time, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant lands to certain States.

Mr. C. said he would take this opportunity in making some explanation in relation to the provisions of the bill which he should now offer. The operation of the bill which had heretofore several times passed the Senate, and once the House, commenced on the last day of the year 1832, and it was to continue five years. It made a distribution of the net proceeds arising from the sales of the public lands among the several States, upon well known principles. By the passage of the deposit act of the last session, a large portion of the funds which were to be distributed by the land bill, have been differently appropriated, and have been deposited in the treasuries of the several States. He had not, therefore, thought it right, in the present condition of the Treasury, to give to the bill which he had drafted a retrospective character, which the former one possessed; but its operation was to commence on the last day of the present year, and continue to the last day of the year 1841. In that shape its duration would be precisely that of the several bills heretofore passed; and the motive he had for making its termination the last day of the year 1841, would be quite obvious to the whole Senate. It was because, at that time, the biennial reduction provided for by the compromise act of the 2d of March, 1833, ceases; and after that day, a reduction of one moiety of all the excesses of the duties beyond twenty per cent. is to be made. Now, that would present a state of things which might render it necessary for the Government to pause, and Congress to determine, whether there shall be a continuation of the distribution of the proceeds arising from the sales of the public lands among the several States, as provided for by the act, or whether the amount obtained from that source should be applied to the ordinary expenses of the Government.

In this respect, therefore, there was a material difference between the bill in his hand and that heretofore passed. The present bill made another provision, or rather he thought it proper to restore a provision which was in the original plan, as presented by himself to the Senate, for the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, by which, in the subsequent application of those proceeds by the Legislatures of the several States, they were restricted to national objects—of internal improvement, education, and colonization. He had thought that such a restriction upon the several States would relieve them from great embarrassment, in respect to controversies on questions which might arise as to the manner in which they were to dispose of the funds which might come into their hands. It was scarcely necessary for him to say that the fate of the bill depends upon the decision of the Senate. The bill (concluded Mr. C.) provides for the assignment to the new State of Arkansas her fair proportion of the funds to be divided, according to the principle on which the bill proceeds. It does not make a similar assignment to the State of Michigan, because the admission of that State is not yet complete. When that event shall happen, however, by one section of the bill, she shall be entitled to her proportion. In all other respects, except those particularly noticed, the bill is precisely in the shape in which the one passed at the last session.

The bill was then read twice, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WRIGHT, on leave, introduced a bill supplementary to the act to establish the United States Mint, and to regulate the coins of the United States; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. KING of Alabama gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the Pensacola and Perdido Railroad company to construct a railroad through the public lands.

On motion of Mr. KING of Alabama,

Ordered, That so much of the President's message as relates to commerce be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NICHOLAS, on leave, introduced a bill to confirm certain private land claims in Louisiana; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. MOORE, on leave, introduced a bill authorizing the relinquishment of the 16th sections granted for the use of schools, and the location of other lands in lieu thereof; which was twice read and referred.

On motion of Mr. WALKER,

Ordered, That so much of the President's message as relates to the public lands, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. BENTON,

Ordered, That so much of the President's message as relates to military affairs, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. BUCHANAN,

Ordered, That so much of the President's message as relates to foreign affairs, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion of Mr. WHITE,

Ordered, That so much of the President's message as relates to Indian affairs, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON,

Ordered, That so much of the President's message as relates to the Post Office and post roads, be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion of Mr. RIVES,

Ordered, That so much of the President's message as relates to naval affairs, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SPECIAL ORDER.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. EWING of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order designating the funds to be received in payment for the public lands; when

Mr. BENTON, who had the floor, rose and addressed the Senate in opposition to the resolution, and continued his speech until a late hour, when The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 19, 1836.

Messrs. ELMORE and RICHARDSON, members elect from the State of South Carolina, appeared, were qualified, and took their seats.

On motion of Mr. TALIAFERRO the House agreed to a resolution for going into the election of a Chaplain, on the part of the House, to-morrow.

On motion of Mr. CONNOR the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads had leave to sit during the sessions of the House, for the purpose of prosecuting the examination of witnesses in relation to the destruction of the Post Office building.

REDUCTION OF DUTIES.

The first business in order was the reference of a memorial presented on Monday last by Mr. ADAMS, from sundry citizens of Boston, praying for a repeal of the duties on foreign coal, which Mr. A. had moved to refer to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. PATTON had moved to refer the same to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ADAMS presumed that as the subject had been brought before the Committee on Manufactures by the vote of the House, on the reference of the President's message, that the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Patton) who had made the motion to refer the petition to the Committee of Ways and Means, would now withdraw it.

Mr. PATTON thought the subject was too closely connected with the revenue of the country, to be sent to any other committee than that of Ways and Means; therefore he could not think of withdrawing his motion.

Mr. CAMBRELENG expressed a hope that they would not consume much time upon this subject, especially after the debate which took place the other day. He then understood the House to come to the determination that both committees should take this subject under their consideration; the one as it regarded the revenue of the country, the other as it regarded its bearing upon the subject of protecting duties. It struck Mr. C. however, that they had better not depart, in this instance, from the former usage. At the last Congress, when a memorial, praying for the repeal of duty on foreign coal was presented, it was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Another, on the same subject, presented on Monday last, had a similar reference, and that committee now had the subject before them.

Moreover, there was a standing rule of the House which had not yet been rescinded, and probably never would be, which made it the duty of the committee on Ways and Means to report on the subject of the reduction of duties at every session, and it became the more necessary at this time, when there were upwards of $50,000,000 in the Treasury, that that committee should go into its examination. He had no doubt that committee would do so, not only under the standing rule of the House, but also under that part of the President's message having reference to it, and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. C. had no wish to interfere, in the slightest degree, with the duties of the Committee on Manufactures, from whom there would doubtless emanate a most able report, but he hoped the memorial would take the usual course, and go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. ADAMS said, if the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means had not intimated that it was the usual course to refer this subject to the Committee of Ways and Means, he should have said nothing more on the subject. Mr. A. considered the usual course to be to refer these subjects to the Committee on Manufactures, as well as the Committee of Ways and Means. He hoped the House would, according to principle, refer this subject to the Committee on Manufactures. At the same time he did not consider it very material whether it was sent to one committee or the other, because both committees would have the subject before them. But this was a question as to the protective duties of the country, and for the protection of domestic industry; and, therefore, every argument must be in favor of sending the subject to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. McKEON said that the city which he came from, was deeply interested in this question. At this very moment, while we were debating the question of protection, the poor were suffering from our policy of protection. He was anxious that this repeal should be made this session, and to whatever committee it should be sent, that we should have a report and a decision of this House. The city of New York had for years petitioned on this subject, and yet nothing has been done to relieve them from the oppressive tax. The subject had been referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; it likewise had been in the charge of the Committee on Manufactures; but yet, sir, nothing has been done. What I desire is, that it shall not be tossed about from committee to committee without any result being produced. The people, the suffering people, demand a decision. I am willing it should go to the Committee of Ways and Means. It properly belongs to that body. If the position assumed by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Adams) be correct, he would drag within the circle of his extended jurisdiction every subject connected with the tariff. The proposition of the gentleman will embrace the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to repeal the duty on bread stuffs; on every article on which a reduction is proposed to be made. It is a question of revenue. It is a question whether taxation on the necessities of life is to be continued. It is a question whether exclusive legislation for the benefit of the few, at the sacrifice of the rights and comforts of the many, shall be continued; and under that view, he wished it to go to the Committee of Ways and Means. We have millions overflowing our treasury, and it became that committee to inquire, not that on protecting manufactures, how our taxes were to be reduced. The poor of the country were on the one side, and those to be protected by legislation on the other; and for one, he should be found with the consumers, anxious to relieve them from this tax. He hoped the petition would be sent to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HARPER did not agree with those gentlemen who said it was a rare question of revenue. It was a question peculiarly belonging to the Committee on Manufactures, being one of industry, involving an immense capital and a vast amount of labor. It was but recently that a ready market had been found for coal, for in 1834 there were not less than 3000 tons which lay over, and why should this immense trade be sacrificed? They knew that if it went to the Committee of Ways and Means, they would have an unfavorable report.

Mr. GIDEON LEE said, he deemed it quite immaterial to which of the two committees the reference be made, (the Ways and Means or Manufactures;) both these committees will necessarily inquire into the subject. It is the general duty of the Ways and Means to inquire into this and all kindred questions affecting revenue, and the Committee on Manufactures has the question specially before it, on the reference of those passages of the President's message, relative to the "protective duties," and the recommendation to diminish the "duty on fuel," the subject matter of this petition, must, therefore, be discussed in both committees; but I rise chiefly to apologise to my own committee for the vote I shall give to send it to another committee.

I had the honor last session to offer a resolution for the repeal of the duty on coal, and moved its reference to the Committee of Ways and Means. I was overruled: the resolution was referred to the Committee on Manufactures, of which I am a member. They did me the courtesy to discuss it; and, as I remember, seven members voted unqualifiedly against it; one gave a qualified vote; and my own vote was the only clear affirmative. For consistency, therefore, with my motion of reference last year, and with the hope for a more favorable, more just, and more humane result, I shall vote to refer to the Committee of Ways and Means.

One word in reference to my constituents: they consume one and a half millions of dollars' worth of fuel annually, and at a cost of some two dollars per chaldron, by reason of this unreasonable tax, more than they ought in equity to pay.

Mr. REED contended that the appropriate reference was to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. CHAMBERS denied that it was a question for the consideration of the Committee of Ways and Means, since it was not a question of a reduction of duties, so far as revenue was concerned, but in reference to protection; as coal was, in the fullest sense of the term, an article coming under the head of manufactures.

Mr. DAVIS remarked that the western States had been laid aside by the continuance of this debate—a debate merely on the subject of reference; and he moved the further postponement of the consideration of the memorial till Monday next. Lost—72 to 89.

Mr. CAMBRELENG made some further remarks on the same subject, and referred to a memorial which had been sent to him for presentation from New York, signed by upwards of 8,000 citizens, praying for the repeal of this duty.

Mr. DENNY thought it very probable that a great part of the cry got up against the duty, arose from the lessees of the coal region in Nova Scotia, which was owned to a very large extent in New York. He was in favor of the reference to the Committee on Manufactures; and one great objection to the other reference, was the known sentiments of the gentleman (Mr. Cambreleng) at the head of that committee, and the wishes of his immediate constituents.

Mr. INGERSOLL advocated the same course.

Mr. BOON said, if this was a subject of protection, he would vote for its reference to the Committee on Manufactures; but this was the first time in his life he had ever heard that coal was a manufactured article. It was a monopoly which was peculiarly oppressive upon the community, as was evinced by the present high price of fuel in this and all the large eastern cities.

The question was then taken, and the result was—yeas 88, nays 124, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Adams, Chilton Allan, Heman Allen, Anthony, Ash, Ashley, Bailey, Beaumont, Black, Bond, Borden, Briggs, Buchanan, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chetwood, Childs, Corwin, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Denny, Evans, Everett, Fowler, Galbraith, Rice Garland, Granger, Grennell, Hilland Hall, Hard, Harlan, Harper, Samuel S. Harrison, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Howell, Hubley, Hunt, Ingersoll, William Jackson, James H. Johnson, Kennon, Laporte, Lawrence, Lincoln, Logan, Job Mann, Sampson Mason, McCarty, McComas, McKennan, Miller, Milligan, Muhlenberg, Parker, Dutee J. Pearce, Pearson, Pickens, Potts, Reed, Russell, Schenck, William B. Shepard, Slade, Sloane, Spangler, Storer, Sutherland, Taylor, Waddy Thompson, Turner, Underwood, Vinton, Wagener, Wardwell, Washington, Webster, White, Elisha Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, Young—88.

NAYS.—Messrs. Barton, Beale, Bean, Bell, Bockee, Boon, Bouldin, Bower, Boyd, Brown, Bunch, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Campbell, Carr, Carter, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, Nath. H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Deberry, Doubleday, Dunlap, Efner, Ellmore, Fairfield, French, Fry, Fuller, James Garland, Gillet, Glascock, Graham, Grantland, Griffin, Hailey, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hardin, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, Jabez Jackson, Jarvis, Jenifer, Joseph Johnson, Rich'd M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Love, Loyall, Lyon, Martin, William Mason, Moses Mason, Jr. Maury, May, McKay, McKeon, McKim, McLene, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Patton, Franklin Pierce, Pettigrew, Phelps, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Standefer, Taliaferro, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turrill, Vanderpoel, Ward, Weeks, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Wise—124.

So the motion to commit to the Committee on Manufactures was decided in the negative, and the motion to refer the memorial to the Committee of Ways and Means was agreed to.

Mr. CASEY moved a suspension of the rule, for the purpose of calling the States not called on Monday last for resolutions, which was agreed to.

TENNESSEE LAND BILL.

The House then took up the resolution offered by Mr. DUNLAP on Monday last, proposing to make the bill to amend the act authorizing the State of Tennessee to issue grants for land in certain cases, (called the "Tennessee land bill") the special order for Wednesday the 14th.

Mr. DUNLAP modified the resolution by substituting Wednesday the 21st.

Mr. VINTON expressed a hope, that after the past experience of its inconvenience, they would make no more special orders.

Mr. DUNLAP asked for the yeas and nays, but the House refused to order them, and the resolution was rejected.

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENTS.

Mr. STORER offered the following resolution: Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire what legal enactments are necessary by Congress, to prevent accidents on board of vessels navigating the waters of the United States by steam, and for the punishment of the commanders, pilots and engineers of such vessels, who may be guilty of wilful misconduct, or neglect in the navigation thereof.

Mr. HARRIS said, if he understood the English language at all, his resolution covered every possible case which might arise; at least he intended it to do so. He was aware that the Committee on the Judiciary might be the most appropriate standing committee of the House to which to refer the subject; but he was aware at the same time, that from the great mass of business before that committee, it perhaps would not be able to pay so much attention to the subject as a select committee would; and for that reason, and that alone, he had asked for a select committee. If the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio should be adopted, Mr. H.'s resolution would be nullified. He had no disposition to place himself in a more conspicuous position, but he thought the resolution he had submitted, would cover every case. He therefore hoped the gentleman would withdraw his resolution.

Mr. STORER only wished to bring the subject before the committee in some tangible form. He wished the examination to extend not only to the bursting of boilers of steamboats, but to accidents from racing, and all accidents from the carelessness of pilots. He then modified his resolution, so as to refer the subject to the select committee, instead of the Committee on the Judiciary, and, so modified, the resolution was agreed to.

WEST POINT ACADEMY.

Mr. HANNEGAN, from the Select Committee on the West Point Academy, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Select Committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the West Point Academy, be authorized, by themselves, or a sub-committee, to visit the Academy, for the purposes mentioned in the resolution under which they were appointed.

Mr. MASON of Ohio, asked for the yeas and nays, but they were not ordered.

Mr. PEARCE, of Rhode Island, said he should like to hear some special reasons for the adoption of this resolution. For himself, he was not aware of any information to be obtained at West Point which could not be procured in this city, at the proper departments.

Mr. HAWES replied that, at the first meeting of the committee, they unanimously decided upon the course proposed in the resolution just offered.

Mr. PEARCE was not satisfied with the explanation, for he wished to know the causes and the reasons for recommending that course.

Mr. LANE said, that, believing as he did that the institution at West Point was one of the most valuable, as well as one of the most democratic institutions in the country; and believing also, as he did, that if these gentlemen were to go they would return to that House perfectly satisfied with its management, he did trust that the resolution would be agreed to.

Mr. JARVIS remarked, that he thought they had had quite enough of travelling committees, and he hoped they would have no more of them. In order, then, not to take up more of the time of the House in a useless discussion, he moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. HAWES asked for the yeas and nays, but the House refused to order them, and the motion to lay on the table prevailed by a vote of 87 to 54.

Mr. DAVIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That all petitions, memorials, remonstrances, or other papers, which may be offered during the present session, in any manner relating to the abolition of slavery, or the slave trade, in the District of Columbia, or any of the Territories of the United States, shall on presentation be laid upon the table, without reading, without being ordered to be printed, and without debate.

Mr. REED did hope this resolution would not be agreed to, for he thought it better to allow these memorials to take the usual course. It was better for the purpose of allaying the excitement on this subject; better for the North as well as for the South.

Mr. CALHOUN, of Mass. moved to lay the resolution on the table; which was agreed to without a count.

Mr. REYNOLDS, of Illinois, submitted the following:

Resolved, That a Select Committee be appointed to take into consideration the subject of establishing commercial hospitals on the western waters.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, inquired if this subject had not been already referred to the standing Committee on Commerce; and if they had not at this time the matter under consideration, the better course would be to send this resolution to that committee.

Mr. REYNOLDS remarked, that he could scarcely expect to succeed against the motion made by his friend from Ohio, (Mr. Whittlesey.)

[Mr. WHITTLESEY stated, that he made no motion, but only suggested as above.]

Mr. R. said, that this was a subject of great importance to the majority of the people of the west, and on that consideration he moved the resolution, and hoped it would pass.

The Committee on Commerce were all taken from the Atlantic States, and of course were not as fully acquainted with the facts and necessities of the people, as those who live in the west.

The Committee on Commerce, it was true, had this subject before them; but nothing was done on the subject. He hoped something would be done this session. Hospitals in proper places in the west, would do great service to a very worthy class of citizens.

Mr. GILLET replied that a bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce at the last session, embracing the object contemplated in the resolution, but had not been acted upon.

After a few words from Messrs. REYNOLDS, LANE, BRIGGS and VINTON, on motion of the last gentleman, the resolution was referred to the same committee which had the bill in charge, viz: the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, by a vote of 73 yeas, noes not counted.

Mr. WHITE of Florida submitted the following resolution; which, according to the rule lies over for one day.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House the causes which have prevented the 9th article of the treaty between Spain and the United States, of the 22d February, 1819, and the two acts of Congress passed in relation thereto; and whether, in his opinion, any further legislation be necessary to carry the same into effect.

Mr. WHITE of Florida submitted the following resolution; which lies over one day.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to this House the report of the Naval Commissioners, who have recently been engaged in the examination of the navy yard at Pensacola, and the report of Commodore Stewart on the same subject.

Mr. WHITE of Florida submitted the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of giving the right of way through the public lands for the railroads proposed to be made in Florida, by the East Florida Railroad Company, the Pensacola and Perdido Railroad Company, and the Brunswick and Florida Railroad Company; and the right of way to the St. Andrews and Chippola Canal Company, to make a canal or railroad through the public lands.

Mr. THOMSON of Ohio submitted the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the compensation of the District Judge for the District of Ohio.

Mr. ASHLEY submitted the following resolution, which was read and rejected:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to the State of Missouri five hundred thousand acres of the public lands for the purposes of internal improvement.

Mr. HUNTSMAN submitted the following resolution, which by the rule lies over one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to this House the amount of duties collected upon salt, in the years 1834, 1835, and in the year 1836, as far as it can be estimated.

Mr. MARTIN submitted the following resolution, which was read and rejected:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of permitting entries to be made of forty acre tracts of the public lands, without any other restriction than that of requiring that the tract to be entered shall adjoin the improvement or plantation of the applicant.

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri submitted the following resolution, which was rejected:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing upon a footing with other public lands liable to be sold at public sale, such public lands as have been reserved as salt springs, and saline and mineral lands.

On motion of Mr. TALIAFERRO,

Resolved, That this House will proceed, at two o'clock to-morrow, the 20th instant, to execute the joint resolution of the two Houses for the election of Chaplain.

Mr. BELL submitted the following resolution, which, by the rule, lies over one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to this House copies of all orders issued to Governors of States or Territories, or to officers in the army, authorizing a call for volunteers or militia men, either for the protection of the southwestern frontier, for the prevention or suppression of Indian hostilities within the last eighteen months; also, copies of all orders explanatory of, or countermanding any original order; also, the number of such troops, which at any time or times within said period, presented themselves equipped for the service under said calls; and the States and Territories to which they belonged; also, the number received into the public service, the dates of such reception, and the several places of rendezvous; also, the terms of service of such troops so received into the public service, and the terms during which they actually served; also, the whole number of troops, whether volunteers, militiamen, mounted dragoons, or troops belonging to the regular army, which have been employed in suppressing the hostilities of the Creek Indians within the same period of time; and also the greatest number so employed at one time.

On motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio,

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting a pension to Levi Johnston, for wounds received while in the military service of the United States.

On motion of Mr. KENNON,

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Barnesville, by the way of Senecaville and Cumberland, to Chandlersville, Muskingum county, Ohio; also, a post route from Senecaville, by the way of Burson's Mills, to the Batesville Post Office, in Guernsey county, Ohio.

Mr. LANE submitted the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of confining the future sales of the public lands to actual and bona fide settlers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Louisiana submitted the following resolution, which, according to the rule, lies over one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to this House the number of claims to lands in the State of Louisiana, confirmed under different acts of Congress, and the number of those acquired from the United States by purchase; the number of patents issued for the said claims, and the time which will probably elapse before the whole of the patents due therefor can issue under present arrangements.

Mr. LEWIS submitted the following resolutions, which were agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of compensating H. W. Russell for money advanced in purchasing forage for troops and volunteers at Tallassee, in Alabama, in or about the month of May, 1835.

Be it further resolved, That said committee inquire into the expediency of compensating Wiley Harbin of Tallassee, for provisions, subsistence, and forage furnished certain volunteers from the 4th of May, 1836, to the 22d of same month; and also for a horse belonging to said Harbin, killed in the military service of the United States.

On motion of Mr. MAY,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

BY BLAIR & RIVES.

—WEEKLY—

PRICE $1 PER SESSION.

24TH CONG.....2D SESS.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1836.

VOLUME 4.....No. 3.

instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the construction of a harbor at the mouth of the Little Calumet river, at Lake Michigan.

On motion of Mr. CLAIBORNE of Miss.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing ports of entry at Natchez, Grand Gulf, and Vicksburg, in the State of Mississippi.

On motion of Mr. CARR,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing an armory at the falls of the Ohio river, in the State of Indiana.

On motion of Mr. CASEY,

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making further provision by law, for the more efficient prosecution of the work upon the National road in Illinois.

On motion of Mr. HAMER,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing an arsenal as a place of depot for the public arms at Columbus, or elsewhere, in the State of Ohio.

On motion of Mr. BOON,

Resolved, That the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, showing the operations of that office for the years 1835 and 1836, be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. McCARTY,

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the several acts for the construction and continuation of the Cumberland road, so as to authorize the further construction thereof throughout the State of Indiana, to be let out by contracts in sections, upon notice, to the lowest bidder; and of authorizing the immediate grading and bridging of the unfinished parts thereof through said State; and that said committee further inquire into the expediency of an additional appropriation for the further construction and completion of said road.

On motion of Mr. CHAPMAN,

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of ceding to the State of Alabama the unsold lands in the Huntsville land district in that State, together with the proceeds of such of said lands as have been sold since the first day of January, 1836, to be applied to the improvement of the Tennessee river, at the Muscle and Colbert Shoals, upon the plan adopted, and in progress, under the management of the Board of Canal Commissioners.

Mr. LYON submitted the following resolution, which was read and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands inquire into the present situation of the title to the four reserved sections of land within the district of country allotted to the Tombeckbee Association of French Emigrants, for the cultivation of the vine and olive; and into the expediency of making provision, by law, for perfecting the title to such of the allottees as may have fulfilled, as required by their contract, the conditions of settlement and cultivation on any portion of said four sections, and tendered the purchase money within the time required by law; and of making some final disposition of any remainder of said four sections.

Mr. CARTER submitted the following resolutions; which were read, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of connecting the Tennessee waters with the Coosa river, by a canal or railroad, commencing at some point on the Hiwassee river, in East Tennessee.

Resolved, further, That the said committee be instructed to inquire also into the propriety of continuing the improvements heretofore commenced by the United States at the Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama, up the Tennessee and Holston rivers to King's Post, by an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CARTER also submitted the following resolution, which was rejected:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the propriety of relinquishing the title of the United States to the remaining remnant of the public lands in the State of Tennessee, to the said State, for the promotion of the improvements of the Tennessee and Holston rivers, and such other improvements as said State may deem proper.

Mr. CUSHMAN submitted the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the declaration of James Harrold, alias James Harrod, deceased, a soldier of the revolution, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, with instructions to inquire into the expediency of making an allowance to the heirs of said James Harrold, deceased, for his revolutionary services.

On motion of Mr. GILLET,

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing Russell Atwater, of Norfolk, in the State of New York, an invalid pension from the time he was wounded, until the time he was placed upon the roll of invalid pensioners.

On motion of Mr. REED,

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be directed to inquire into the justice and expediency of making further allowance and pay to Ezekiel Jones, Commander of one of the Revenue Cutters of the United States, for services rendered in Florida, during the past year.

On motion of Mr. HEMAN ALLEN,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the law passed on the 4th day of July, 1836, entitled "An act granting half pay to widows or orphans, when their husbands and fathers have died of wounds received in the military service of the United States, in certain cases, and for other purposes," as to extend the provisions, contained in the third section of said act, to the widows of those who may have died, or shall die subsequent to the passing thereof.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Wisconsin, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on the Territories be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act establishing the Territorial Government of Wisconsin, as to authorize the appointment of two additional attorneys; and that the committee also inquire into the expediency of authorizing, by further amendment of said act, the extension of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, in cases where the sum in controversy shall not exceed one hundred dollars.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Wisconsin it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making appropriations in lands and in money, for the construction of roads in the Territory of Wisconsin, from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi river, through the lead mines of the United States, for a road from the northern boundary line of Missouri, through the counties of Des Moines and Du Buque, for the completion of the road leading from Chicago, Illinois, through the counties of Milwaukee and Brown, to Fort Howard at Green Bay.

Mr. JONES of Wisconsin, submitted the following resolution, which was rejected:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of appropriating money for holding treaties with, and the purchase of the lands belonging to, the Sacs, Fox, Sioux, and Winnebago Indians, in Wisconsin Territory, and so provide for their removal west of the Mississippi river.

Mr. JONES of Wisconsin submitted the following resolution, which was rejected:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making appropriations for the completion of the road leading from Fort Dearborn, at Chicago, Illinois, through the counties of Milwaukee and Brown, in Wisconsin Territory, to Fort Howard, at Green Bay; for the opening of roads from Lake Michigan, in Milwaukee county, to the Mississippi river; and from the northern boundary line of Missouri, within the county of Des Moines, through the county of Du Buque, to Prairie du Chien and Fort Crawford.

Mr. JONES of Wisconsin, submitted the following resolution, which was rejected:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of appropriating, for the purposes of constructing roads and bridges in the Territory of Wisconsin, in money, in value at this time of all the rent lead received at the United States lead mines, on the Upper Mississippi river, which money shall be expended for the above purposes under the direction of the Government and Legislative Assembly of said Territory.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin, submitted the following resolution, which was read and rejected:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act of Congress for laying off certain towns in Wisconsin, approved July 2, 1836, as to conform in its provisions to the amendment to an act, entitled "An act authorizing the laying off a town on Bean river, in the State of Illinois, and for other purposes, approved the 5th day of February, 1829."

On motion of Mr. JONES of Wisconsin,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Territories be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a separate Territorial Government for that section of the present Territory of Wisconsin, which lies west of the Mississippi river and north of the State of Missouri.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Wisconsin,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of improving harbors and constructing light houses on the coast of Lake Michigan, in the counties of Milwaukee and Brown, in Wisconsin Territory; and that the said committee also inquire into the expediency of constructing a pier and beacon light at the head of Green Bay, and of placing buoys in the channel of Green Bay, to the mouth of Fox river.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Messrs. PARKS, EVANS, FAIRFIELD, MASON, and Hall, of Maine.

Messrs. BURNS, CUSHMAN, and BEAN, of New Hampshire.

[Mr. BEAN presented the petition of Simeon Smith, asking a pension for revolutionary services.

The petition of Hannah Gordon, asking a pension for the services of her husband, William Gordon.]

Messrs. BRIGGS, LAWRENCE, LINCOLN, BORDEN, REED, ABAMS, CALHOUN, and CUSHING of Massachusetts.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island.

Messrs. INGHAM and HALEY of Connecticut.

[Mr. INGHAM presented the following: Petition of John Bushop, a revolutionary soldier, asking for a pension—referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions; of Cynthia Ruggles, and others, asking for an exclusive property in a new and useful invention—referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; of Elihu Sanford, asking compensation for services rendered in the revolutionary war—referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims; of Alexander Phelps, an invalid pensioner, asking for an increase of pension—referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions; of the inhabitants of Connecticut, asking appropriations to erect spindles, &c. in the harbors of Killingsworth and Greenwich, and also for the improvement of the harbor of West Brook, in that State; of William Culver—referred to the Committee on Commerce; of Gordon Robbins, asking remuneration for the loss of his vessel, which was destroyed by the enemy during the late war; also of the ship owners, and of the New London Company; praying that a light boat, with increased tonnage, be established on Bartlett's Reef—referred to the Committee on Commerce.]

Messrs. EVERETT and ALLEN of Vermont.
Messrs. GILLET, WARDWELL, CAMBRELENG, TURRILL, WARD, TAYLOR, BOCKEE, HUNTINGTON, and LOVE of New York.

[Among the petitions presented by Mr. CAMBRELENG was a memorial from about eight thousand inhabitants of the city of New York, praying for a repeal of the duty on coal. Mr. C. remarked that they were believed to be generally men in poor circumstances, and the petition was chiefly from the upper wards, got up without the aid of "foreign agencies."]

On motion of Mr. McKENNAN,
The House adjourned.

IN SENATE, TUESDAY, DEC. 20, 1836.

Petitions were presented by Messrs. WRIGHT, KENT, PARKER, LINN, BAYARD, TOMLINSON, ROBBINS, RIVES, KING of Alabama, and WALL.

Mr. WEBSTER submitted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury communicate to the Senate the latest statement made at, or for, the Treasury of the condition of the deposit banks, exhibiting, among other particulars, the names and places of all deposit banks appointed since the 23d June last, their capitals, and the amounts of public moneys actually transferred or ordered to be transferred to those banks respectively.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury communicate to the Senate a detailed statement of all transfers of public moneys ordered since the 23d of June last, for the purpose of executing the act of that date for regulating the deposits of the public moneys, showing the dates and amounts of such transfers, from what place to what place, from what bank to what bank, and the times allowed for such transfers respectively; also a similar statement of all transfers other than such as were made in execution of the aforesaid act.

Mr. WEBSTER said, the gentleman (Mr. Benton) who yesterday addressed the Senate, read statements, obtained at the Treasury, from which it would appear that certain banks had enlarged their discounts since the date of the Treasury order of the 11th of July. That fact was not new or surprising to him, (Mr. Webster.) He believed it had been understood generally that such was the case; but the question was, what banks found themselves obliged to enlarge their discounts? Were they the banks of the United States generally? banks in the principal commercial places? or a majority of them? He understood the case to be far otherwise; that the banks, in regard to which the statements were produced, were deposit banks, or some of them. They constituted but a small proportion of all the banks in the United States, and the proportion, some 60 or 70 to a thousand. He understood that one of the prominent objections to the Treasury order, and against the manner of executing the deposit law, was, that the Secretary of the Treasury had proceeded to execute the deposit law, and that large sums of money had been drawn from some of the banks; that in such situations the transfers did not meet the general purposes of business; and that these large sums of money were drawn from other places where they were very much wanted at the time. He had asked for the information with a view to see how that matter was. Certainly among the prominent objections, both as regards the deposit act and the order of July last, were, that trans-ferees had been made where not wanted, and not made to those banks where money was wanted. In those places to which transfers had been made, and not wanted, the banks were chargeable with interest beyond a certain amount, and it was their natural desire, therefore, to put the money out upon loans to any one that would take it; for otherwise the deposit would be a heavy charge to them.

The first resolution might be answered without any delay, and lead to the public good; and as to the second, he did not suppose that any great time would be necessary to prepare an answer to it.

Mr. WRIGHT inquired whether the honorable Senator (Mr. Webster) meant to ask for any more than the last statement rendered at the Treasury Department?

Mr. WEBSTER replied, that it was not his desire that the inquiry should go back and call for a voluminous amount of matter; he only wished to have the last statement received.

Mr. WRIGHT having made no objection,

The resolutions were accordingly agreed to.

Mr. MORRIS submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary inquire into the expediency of giving the consent of the United States, that each and every tract of land which has heretofore been, or hereafter may be, sold by Congress, be liable to taxation by State authority; and that the several State Legislatures in whose States any such lands are situated, be at liberty to repeal any law or ordinance passed by such State, in pursuance of any act of Congress, by which such State is prohibited from laying any tax upon lands sold by the United States for the term of five years from and after the date of such sale.

Mr. WRIGHT gave notice, that he would on to-morrow ask leave to bring in a bill in addition to the act entitled an act to provide more effectually for the settlement of accounts between the United States and the receivers of the public moneys; also, a bill anticipating the payment of the remaining instalments of the indemnity due American citizens under the French treaty.

Mr. HENDRICKS, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize the East Florida Railroad company to construct a railroad through the public lands; which was read twice and referred.

Mr. LINN, on leave, introduced a bill to provide for the legal adjudication and settlement of claims to lands therein mentioned; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. KING of Alabama, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize the Pensacola and Perdido Railroad and Canal company to cut a canal and construct a railroad through the public lands; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. SOUTHARD, on leave, introduced a bill to provide for the enlistment of boys in the navy, and to extend the term for the enlistment of seamen; which was twice read and referred.

The resolutions submitted on Thursday by Messrs. TAILMADGE and MOORE, and the resolutions submitted yesterday by Messrs. ROBINSON, NILES, NICHOLAS, WALKER, EWING of Ohio, LINN, and BENTON, were severally considered and adopted.

Mr. SEVIER submitted documents in support of the claim of Benjamin Murphy; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NILES arose and remarked, that he had a motion to submit, with the view of taking the sense of the Senate, on a question which concerned a committee whose duties and rights he was perhaps bound to look to, and which he apprehended was of no small importance to the country. The Senate, yesterday, on motion of the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Calhoun,) referred so much of the President's message as relates to a reduction of duties to the wants of the Government, to the Committee on Finance. He did not object to this motion, although he had supposed that the reference which had previously been made, was sufficiently definite. In one view of the question, it was undoubtedly one of finance, and he did not object to its going to that committee; but he did object to the argument of the Senator from South Carolina, or the ground on which he rested his motion—that the reduction of the revenue was purely a question of finance. If this was correct, then the Committee on Manufactures had nothing to do with any question of reduction or repeal of duties, even upon articles belonging confessedly to the protected class. The protective principle, then, is to be repudiated and excluded from your revenue laws. This was a question of too great magnitude, and too intimately connected with the great interests of the country, and the sensibilities of the people, to be discussed on the motion he had to submit. It was sufficient for his purpose that this principle was not yet repudiated. Surely the Senator from South Carolina need not be informed that the act of 1833, commonly called the compromise act, in the passage of which he took so prominent a part, distinctly recognises this principle; the protective principle, indeed, forms the very basis of that act. In any attempt to reduce the revenue, let it come from what committee it might, he apprehended that the principal difficulty—and it would be one of no small magnitude and delicacy—would be found to arise from the domestic interests affected, or which may be supposed to be affected, by the reduction. He had no wish to claim this responsible and delicate duty for the Committee on Manufactures; he only wished to know what the duties of that committee are, and whether they had any thing to do with this subject. On this question he wished to have the sense of the Senate, and for that purpose he would submit a distinct motion:

Mr. N. moved, that so much of the President's message as relates to a reduction of protective duties, and that part which relates to a repeal of the duties on provisions and fuel, be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. CALHOUN thought the motion was not in order. The part of the President's message, he said, alluded to by the gentleman, was distinctly referred yesterday to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NILES then moved to modify his motion, and confine it to so much of the President's message as related to a repeal of the duties on provisions and fuel.

Mr. CALHOUN replied, that that was the very part of the message which he yesterday moved to refer. He thought that the wording of his motion was sufficiently plain to include both the reduction and repeal of duties. He was aware that whatever committee was charged with the subject, would have an arduous and delicate task to perform; but he thought the Finance Committee more appropriately fitted for the task than any other committee of that House. There were on any two gentlemen representing together the entire aggregate interest of the northern manufacturers. In the next place, there was the Senator from Louisiana, (Mr. Nicholas,) who represented the great sugar interest of the south; and then there was the Senator from Missouri, who represented the lead interest. He saw the difficulties to be encountered, and regretted them; but he still thought that the Committee on Finance was the most appropriate one to consider the subject. His motion, he repeated, comprehended both the reduction and repeal of duties.

On motion of Mr. EWING of Ohio, the motion was laid on the table.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the special order of the day, which was the resolution submitted by Mr. EWING of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order, designating the funds to be received in payment for the public lands; when

Mr. BENTON read some documents, which he accompanied with a few remarks, in continuation of his speech of yesterday.

Mr. CRITTENDEN rose and addressed the Senate at considerable length, but in so low a tone of voice, as to be almost totally inaudible to the reporter in his opening remarks. He was understood to advert to the speech of the honorable Senator from Missouri, (Mr. Benton,) delivered yesterday, and say that he, (Mr. B.) had taken occasion then to rebuke gentlemen for the course they had thought proper to take at the last session of Congress, in regard to the distribution of the surplus revenue. For his (Mr. Crittenden) part, he was quite willing, in common with others, to bear his share of the blame, for the connection he had had with that bill, if any blame could fairly be charged. He remembered well that the Senate appropriated thirty-eight millions of dollars; and now it was complained of, because many bills, involving appropriations, were not then disposed of entirely. It was made a subject of great rebuke and reprehension before the whole community, that Senators did not appropriate much more money. He would repeat, that so far as concerned himself, he was willing to state in the face of the whole country, the part he took on the occasion alluded to. He felt the proud consciousness of having done his duty, and took to himself the merit of being instrumental in getting a bill passed which would be beneficial in its effects to the whole community. So much, then, for that subject. The more immediate one for consideration, was the Treasury order, issued on the 11th of July last; and in what he purposed to say, he should be as brief as possible.

The treasury order had been defended with all the zeal and all the ability which invariably characterized the gentleman (Mr. Benton.) And he candidly confessed, that he could readily excuse the something more than ordinary zeal and fervor displayed by the honorable Senator. He thought that by the aid of circumstances, pregnant with circumstantial evidence, that he could see the true and genuine paternity of this measure, and he should dissent from the gentleman as to the materiality of some things of which he had spoken.

Mr. C. next adverted to the resolution which the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Benton,) submitted for the consideration of the Senate on the 25th of April last, relative to the expediency of passing a law, making gold and silver only a tender in payment for the public lands. That resolution (continued Mr. Crittenden) was, on the motion of Mr. Ewing, after debate thereon, laid upon the table; and in that inglorious repose it remained. With the general consent of the Senate, this measure was permitted to sleep, and receive a sort of silent and most unequivocal go-by. It appeared to him, so far as he could judge from what was indicated in the Senate, that it had but very few advocates. However, no sooner had the Senate adjourned as a body, than this measure was brought forward, and furnished the materials for the Treasury order, to which was annexed a preamble, in which its objects were set forth—that it was to protect settlers, &c. and the universal popular denunciation was raised against squatters. The resolution, rejected in April, he repeated, was made the ground-work of the Treasury order in July. Here, then, was an attempt to supply legislative authority by Executive authority. The gentleman from Missouri called upon the genius and spirit of the country for its support. He (Mr. Crittenden) would ask, whether the order in question was in its terms according to the genius and the spirit and constitution of the country? Were a few individuals to determine questions of policy involved in the measure—of its effects upon the currency, trade, and commerce of the land—of the great questions affecting their constituents, far and wide? Were they not questions for Congress, and for general legislation? And here, in the present instance, it would seem, the Executive had undertaken the province of doing that which the Legislature, in their wisdom, had neglected to do! So, that Senators had been tardy in doing their work, and what they had left undone, the Executive was to fix it! Now, according to the argument of the Senator from Missouri, notwithstanding no legislative action had been had on the subject, the President was perfectly justified in issuing the order.

He (Mr. C.) objected not only to what had been done, but also to the manner, not concurring with the gentleman in the "how." He thought that the manner of the proceeding, if not contrary to the spirit of the constitution, was certainly contrary to the genius of the people, derogatory to the legislative authority, their judgment, and their power.

At the time the Treasury order was issued, was there (he asked) any change in the condition and circumstances of the country? None that he had heard of. He objected to the order, and it should be rescinded. Growing out of the circumstances which he had stated, and its tendency to encroach upon the power of the Senate, and to increase the power of the Executive, he would reject it. There were other objections, infinitely greater than those he had named. The first was, to that part of the order in which a discrimination was attempted to be made between purchasers of the public lands, in respect to receiving payment for them. And, the second objection he entertained was, as to the discrimination between the classes of debtors for public land; and all other public debtors. Here, then, was a personal distinction made, predicated upon the place of residence of the purchaser. Now, was it consistent with the equality, the immunity, and the right which guards the people of this Union, in whatsoever part of it they may live. The public lands, being a common property, how happened it, he desired to know, that residents of the State of Illinois, or Ohio, or Indiana, have greater personal right or personal pretensions than himself or any other Senator? Where was this superior right or title? Where, then, was found the right to demand payment in the terms of the Treasury order? No where. But it was said that the discrimination made here was of a character with that which had been made in different acts providing by preference for settlers on the public lands, and giving them a preference of the lands.

Supposing (and certainly he was not disposed to contest it) that it be conceded, as the gentleman argued, that Congress had a right to discriminate between settlers on the public lands, yielding them advantages as to the terms of purchase, &c. how far did he advance to the conclusion that because Congress had the power to do this, the Executive had the power? From the argument that had been advanced, it would seem to be assumed that because there existed legislative power, there must be Executive power also.

But whoever heard of an Executive fixing the price of the public lands? Or, what was equivalent to it, decreasing in what currency they should be paid for, &c. Mr. C. knew not in what sense of the word this could be regarded as an Executive power. He contended that the order was illegal, and beyond the competency and power of the President. Upon what principle could a man justify himself in saying to a debtor for land, "You must pay me in gold and silver;" and to an importer, "You shall pay me in paper?" Was there equality, equity, and justice, in this? He conceived there was not; and he was the more opposed to the discrimination and distinction in this instance, because it was prejudicial to the interests of the West, and favorable to the Atlantic cities, where the commerce is, and the revenue arising from the customs is collected, and that in a less valuable medium of payment. Was it just? Was it right?

Mr. C. went on to show what he deemed would be the consequences and operations of the Treasury order at the west, if it were continued longer in operation. He maintained, that all the specie collected at the Receivers' offices for lands, would necessarily, and as a matter of course, find its way back to the north and east, from whence it would be again carried back to the west. Specie might, and would be, collected at the west, and return to the Atlantic seaboard. He argued that the effects of the order worked injuriously on the people of the western States, and said that they were indignant on account of the discrimination made between them and people living in other parts of the country. He had not entertained the idea that the effects of the order would have been so severely felt as they have, for he thought there would be no great difficulty in transporting specie to the west from the great cities of the north, by means of the numerous railroads now in operation. But he understood that there was a much better scheme in operation. Supposing a man in the city of Washington intended to go west to purchase land; why, before going, he would take a draft to the Washington bank, and present it. He would then be asked what kind of money he wanted; whether specie or not. "Oh, yes, I want specie." Then, a little keg is taken out, and wheeled from the bank to the Treasury. This fact, he, (Mr. Crittenden,) had been informed by a gentleman upon whose word he could rely with the utmost confidence. Well, this little keg had been so frequently backwards and forwards on the same errand, that it had become the ridicule of the people in the Treasury Department. It had been rolled to and fro so often, a distance of sixty yards, that upon a calculation at the Treasury, it had travelled eleven hundred and odd miles.

Mr. C. observed, that he did not feel himself competent to decide what had produced the pecuniary difficulties, said to exist in the commercial parts of the country. Whether or not, they were attributable to the Treasury order, he could not say; but it was certainly true, that throughout a great portion of the west, the consequences were attributed to the document in question. The gentleman from Missouri supposed it had not produced the effects; then he, (Mr. C.) would ask what had? He wished to know what were the effects it had produced. Had the order increased the amount of specie in the country? Had it increased the quantity in circulation. If it had not been productive of the evil attributed to it, where was the good that had accrued? That good, he would say, remained undiscovered.

Mr. C. contended that no matter how often, or in what manner, money was removed from the places whence it was derived in the course of business, it would always return to them, and therefore it was only to embarrass the people of the west by throwing specie among them. An artificial course might be given to money, but no good could grow out of it; and none could be deluded by the order.

But (said Mr. C.) it was the distribution bill, according to the gentleman, which had furnished the basis for all these evils; though he had no doubt but that in the manner of executing it these evils had been greatly aggravated. He had no doubt but that it was perfectly in the power of the officers of the Government so to have distributed this money, under the deposit law of the last session, as to have avoided all derangement, and to have given a permanent prosperity, instead of a temporary pressure, on the pecuniary affairs of the country. But all these considerations had been left out of view; and they had undertaken, like common porters or common carriers, to transport money across the country for no good purpose whatever. We, in Kentucky, (said Mr. C.) had rather, by forty or fifty thousand dollars, that they had given us our portion of two millions in New York, because we would have sold it in Kentucky, and received the money for it there, with a premium of one or two per cent. The State would have gained by this mode of distribution, the country would have been made prosperous by it, and no complaint of pressure or embarrassment would have been heard. But, instead of this salutary operation, one mischievous and dangerous has been followed. The gentleman spoke much of a panic. A little starveling panic had had the honor of dying by the hand of an honorable Senator. Was this all the comfort that was to be given to a complaining commercial community. There were other gentlemen on that floor who understood that part of the subject better than he did, and to them he committed it; but if there was any truth in what he had heard, there was an extraordinary pressure pervading the whole commercial community from Boston to New Orleans. What had caused this pressure? Was it your little starveling panic that had done all this, or was it the Treasury order? The gentleman loved the Treasury order well, but the pressure produced by it was to be called a panic.

All is well, cries the gentleman, the country is happy and prosperous; there was nothing but a little panic to complain of. Now this term panic had furnished its full contribution to many a ponderous and patriotic speech; it had pointed many a sentence, and had been found quite useful when argument was wanting. When distress pervades the whole country, and no remedy can be found, then the easy and compendious mode of relief is, to cry "panic," "panic," and by this sort of Senatorial remedy the country is to be satisfied. Does your statesmanship (said Mr. C.) go no further than this? When suffering comes, will you silence the voice of complaint by crying "panic, panic," that this panic has been gotten up by the artifice of the enemies of General Jackson. I know, said Mr. C. that you cannot consider yourself as having performed your duty to your country, if you limit your duties to the exercise of your lungs in crying "panic, panic." The gentleman enlarged on the insecurity of the notes furnished by these one thousand banks, and contended that the Treasury order had had the effect to restrain their issues. To this worthless currency the gentleman was opposed, and (said Mr. C.) so are we all. But the gentleman supposed that they were not all so. He supposed that there was a party in this country, whose origin he traced with the skill of a political genealogist up to the days of Alexander Hamilton, that hated gold and silver, and loved a paper currency. I assure the gentleman, (said Mr. C.) that I am not one of those who hate gold and silver. These "rascal counters" I have a great affection for. The gentleman had done his political opponents great injustice, for the haters of gold and silver were a class of politicians not to be found. Mr. C. here took a review of the course of the two parties opposed to each other on the question of rechartering the Bank of the United States, and contended that those in favor of the charter were the real friends of gold and silver, because their object was to sustain an institution having a currency based on specie, and possessing the power to restrain the excessive issues of the spurious and unsound currency of which the gentleman from Missouri complained. On the other hand, he contended that those who had successfully opposed the recharter of the bank were to be justly chargeable with all the evils which had resulted from the excessive increase of bank paper in the absence of that salutary restraining power; and he said that all the predictions of the friends of the bank in relation to the alarming increase of irresponsible banks, had been more than accomplished.

The President (said Mr. C.) thought the order was right, and therefore Congress must think so. Now, he was sure this was logic which Senators would not believe in. If the executive head of a Government were blind, then, as a matter of course, according to the argument which had been advanced, so were the legislators of a country. He was sure that this was a doctrine in which Senators could not believe. With regard to gold and silver, about which so much had been said, he would merely say, for the satisfaction of the Senator from Missouri, that he agreed with him to a great extent; and gladly would he assist him in correcting many of the evils of which he complained, as connected with the circulation of bank paper; but he (Mr. C.) feared that the evil was beyond their reach, as they had no control over the States which issued so much paper; and whatever arguments might be made here, or elsewhere, against the present system of banking, would avail nothing. As we have now no banking system, the national bank being put down, the country must be considered as it is. Now, if the Treasury order was issued to correct the evils arising from the defective state of the currency, and it had not had the desired effect, but, on the contrary, to derange it the more, would it be right, or just, to continue the order in force? He should oppose it, because it was only calculated to increase the disorder of the currency, rather than to remedy it.

Mr. C. concluded by saying, that he saw no occasion for using the language which the gentleman from Missouri had done, indicative of the gratitude and thanks that were due to the Executive for the course he had adopted in causing the order to be issued. He (Mr. C.) was willing to respect the Executive in proportion to the fidelity and wisdom he had shown in the discharge of his duty, but there was no necessity for treating him as a sort of demi-god.

The gentleman from Missouri had concluded his able and elaborate argument with an expression of his regret that he could not bring to his aid more talent and genius in defence of the Treasury order.

[Here Mr. Benton said, "No, no! not so."]

After making two or three further observations, not distinctly heard, Mr. C. resumed his seat.

Mr. BENTON explained that what he said was, that there was a deplorable want of genius in the second panic which was attempted to be got up; that it was nothing but a copy of the old one; not because the thing was done, but because of the "manner" in which it had been done. He complained that the structure of this drama was precisely the same as the old one. The author of it in Philadelphia had not had genius enough to vary the incidents; it was only a servile copy of the old drama—a little panic to be got up now on account of the Treasury order! and the language that was now used was precisely that of 1834: that the repeal of the Treasury order would restore confidence to the country in twenty-four hours, and relief in twenty-four days. Exactly the language that was made use of in 1834, with respect to the removal of the deposits.

Mr. CRITTENDEN received the explanation as satisfactory; he had misunderstood the gentleman. And then, on motion of Mr. WEBSTER, The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

TUESDAY, December 20, 1836.

The SPEAKER, on leave, presented the following executive communications:

1. A communication from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the names of such officers as have not rendered their accounts within the year, or have balances unaccounted for in the year preceding the 30th of September, 1836. Also, a statement of the balances remaining unsettled in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury prior to the 30th of September last; which, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

2. A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report from the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia on the subject of the explosion of steam boilers; which, on motion of Mr. HANNEGAN, was, with the accompanying documents, referred to the select committee on that subject.

On motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, the rules were suspended for the purpose, and the bill to provide for the payment for horses and other property lost and destroyed in the military service of the United States, was taken up on its third reading.

Mr. MANN of New York, wished to inquire if the provisions of this bill were intended to cover all property lost from the declaration of independence down to the present time. It was not unknown to the House that a large number of claims had heretofore been presented at the proper Department, which could not be passed because of the want of proper evidence in the case. He desired to know whether, by the provisions of this bill, all those old claims which had been rejected by the Third Auditor would again be revived. He doubted not but the principle of the bill might be correct, but if the provisions of it were not specific, he must vote against it.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio observed that when the bill was reported by the Committee of Claims its provisions did not go further back than the year 1822. It would be recollected, however, that the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Hardin) had moved an amendment in Committee of the Whole, which extended the provisions thereof back to the year 1810; which amendment was agreed to in committee, and subsequently concurred in by the House. As to the other inquiry of the gentleman, he had only to say that it was not designed by the Committee of Claims, that any of the cases alluded to by him should be revived.

Mr. MANN observed, that since he had heard the explanation of the gentleman from Ohio, he was satisfied that the bill would not embrace the old claims he had alluded to; therefore he was willing to yield it his entire support.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

WEST POINT ACADEMY.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island, moved a reconsideration of the vote of yesterday, laying on the table the following resolution reported by Mr. HANNEGAN, from the Select Committee on the West Point Academy.

Resolved, That the Select Committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the West Point Academy, be authorized, by themselves, or a sub-committee, to visit the Academy, for the purposes mentioned in the resolution under which they were appointed.

The motion lies over.

NORTHWEST INDIANS.

Mr. BELL also moved a reconsideration of the vote of the House on yesterday, rejecting the following resolution, submitted by Mr. JONES of Wisconsin:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of appropriating money for holding treaties with, and the purchase of the lands belonging to, the Sacs, Fox, Sioux, and Winnebago Indians, in Wisconsin Territory, and to provide for their removal west of the Mississippi river.

This motion also lies over.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Messrs. CHAPIN, BOCKEE, MCKEON, CHILDS, CAMBRELENG, MANN, RUSSELL, DOUBLEDAY, SEYMOUR, HAZELTINE, LAY, and GIDEON LEE of New York.

[Mr. SEYMOUR presented a memorial of Charles Leet, praying for the passage of an act, authorizing the granting of a patent to him for two certain quarter sections of land, in the Territory of Wisconsin, and purchased by him of the original occupant.]

[Mr. MCKEON presented the petitions of inhabitants of the city of New York, praying for a repeal of the duty on coal; also, of Eli Darling of Brooklyn, praying for relief; of P. Green, praying compensation for injury received while defending United States mail; of importers of New York, praying for repeal of duty on diamonds.]

[Mr. GIDEON LEE presented the petition of Hannah Hoyt, widow of Samuel Hoyt, of the revolutionary army, praying for a pension.

Also, the petition of Nathaniel Holmes, of the revolutionary army, praying for a pension and for bounty land.]

[Mr. RUSSELL presented a memorial from the commandants of steamboats and vessels, and others interested in the navigation of Lake Champlain, praying an appropriation to improve and extend the harbor at White Hall, in the State of New York; which, on motion of Mr. R. was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. R. also presented the memorial of David Carmell, a soldier in the revolution, praying an allowance of a pension intermediate the original presentation of his claim, and its final allowance.]

[Mr. CHAPIN moved that the petition of William Wickham, asking remuneration for property destroyed by the enemy during the late war, be taken from the files of the House and referred to the Committee on Claims; agreed to.

[Mr. GIDEON LEE subsequently presented the petition of George Adams, for commutation pay.]

Messrs. PARKER and SCHENCK, of New Jersey.

Messrs. ANTHONY, MUHLENBERG, HIES-TER, HARRISON, INGERSOLL, WAGENER, PIERSON, DENNY, POTTS, and SUTHERLAND, of Pennsylvania.

Messrs. TURNER, PEARCE, HOWARD, MCKIM, JENIFER, and WASHINGTON, of Maryland.

Messrs. ROBERTSON, BOULDIN, GARLAND, JOHNSON, LOYALL, LUCAS, JONES, WISE, MORGAN, and TALLIAFERRO of Virginia.

[Mr. LOYALL presented the petition of Henrietta Morfit, widow of Henry Morfit, praying for a pension; petition of commanders of light vessels stationed in the Chesapeake bay, praying for an increase of compensation.]

Messrs. MONTGOMERY, A. H. SHEPPERD, and W. B. SHEPARD of North Carolina.

[Among the petitions, was one presented by Mr. W. B. SHEPARD from certain citizens of North Carolina on the subject of the surplus revenue, and intimating his intention to address the House on the subject of its contents, it was ordered to lie over, under the rule.]

Messrs. PINCKNEY and THOMPSON of South Carolina.

[Mr. PINCKNEY presented a memorial, very numerously signed, of the merchants and mechanics of Charleston, South Carolina, praying the establishment of a navy yard and dry dock at that place.]

On motion of Mr. P. the memorial was read, laid on the table, and ordered, with the signatures, to be printed.]

Messrs. HAYNES, OWENS, CLEVELAND, and GLASCOCK of Georgia.

[Mr. GLASCOCK presented the petition of John Riley, of Augusta, Ga. praying compensation for losses during the Creek war; and the petition of H. H. Tarver, for losses during the Florida war—referred to the Committee of Claims; and also the petition of Wm. J. Tarver, on the culture of silk—referred to the Committee on Agriculture.]

[Mr. CLEVELAND presented the petition of William York, of Georgia, praying to be placed on the pension roll; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions: Also, the petition of James Wood, praying compensation for revolutionary services rendered by Edward Wood; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims: Also, presented a memorial of Matthew St. Clair Clarke, agent for and on behalf of the State of Georgia, praying to be paid the amount of a final settlement certificate issued by John Pierce, Paymaster General and Commissioner of Army Accounts, on the 18th May, 1785, to the State of Georgia, for $123,283 70, for payments made by that State to her officers of the revolutionary army on continental establishment for the commutation of their half pay, and for other pay due said officers, together with interest thereon now due.]

[Mr. HAYNES presented the petition of John McKinne, asking compensation for securing a certain debt due to the United States.]

Messrs. R. M. JOHNSON, HARLAN, CHAMBERS, FRENCH, CALHOON, UNDERWOOD, and WILLIAMS, of Kentucky.

[Mr. HARLAN presented the petition of Mary O'Bannon, asking compensation for the services of her husband in the war of the revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. Also, the petition of James Chenoweth and others, heirs of Richard Chenoweth, deceased, for compensation in building a fort at the falls of Ohio, in 1781; which was referred to the same committee.]

On motion of Mr. HARLAN, the petition and papers in the case of Thomas Burford, on file, be again referred to the Committee of Claims.

Messrs. DUNLAP, SHIELDS, CARTER, HUNTSMAN, and the SPEAKER, of Tennessee.

[Mr. SHIELDS moved that the papers in the case of Major William Smith, of Tennessee, now on file among the papers of this House, in which he prays an increase of pension for revolutionary services, be again referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

Messrs. WHITTESEY, SLOANE, THOMSON, JONES, PATTERSON, STORER, BOND, MASON, SPANGLER, HOWELL, and McLENE, of Ohio.

[Mr. PATTERSON presented a petition praying for a beacon light on Cedar Point, at Sandusky bay, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:]

Also, petitions for the improvement of the harbor of Huron run, and for the improvement of Sandusky bay. Also, for the improvement of the mouth of Sandusky river; and for the improvement of the harbor of Port Clinton, on Portage river; all of which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of John Morrel, which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Joseph Wilson, for services during the war with the Indians, subsequent to the Revolution; referred to the Committee of Claims.

Also, a petition for a post route from Tiffin to Risdon, in the State of Ohio.

Also, a petition for a post route from Mansfield, in Richland county, to Greenwich, in Huron county, Ohio.]

Messrs. GARLAND and JOHNSON, of Louisiana.

Messrs. DAVIS, GARR, and McCARTY, of Indiana.

Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi.

[Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi presented the petition of Robert Robson and son, of Tallahatchie, Mississippi, praying for a pre-emption under peculiar circumstances; which he asked leave to refer to the Committee on Public Lands.]

Messrs. CASEY, MAY, and REYNOLDS of Illinois.

[Mr. MAY presented the petition of the Rev. Philander Chase, asking for a donation of land to aid him in founding a college.]

Also, the petition of a number of citizens of Hancock county, praying for the establishment of a post route from Pittsfield via Columbus, Houston and Carthage, Illinois, to Burlington, in the Territory of Wisconsin.]

[Mr. CASEY presented the petition of sundry citizens of Lawrence county, in the State of Illinois, praying that a certain township of land lying partly in that county, and heretofore reported as a drowned township, may be surveyed and brought into market, and that the right of pre-emption be granted to the settlers thereon; which, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.]

Messrs. LAWLER, LEWIS, MARTIN, LYON, and CHAPMAN, of Alabama.

Messrs. HARRISON and ASHLEY of Missouri.

Mr. WHITE of Florida.

Mr. JONES of Wisconsin.

On motion of Mr. PARKER, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a light house or beacon on Robin's reef, in the bay of New York.

On motion of Mr. TURNER, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the propriety of allowing to the heirs of Edward Pannell, the amount due on a certificate signed by Lord Berkeley, Assistant Deputy Quartermaster General of the Army of the United States in the war of the Revolution; his papers now on the files of the House.

On motion of Mr. RUCHANAN, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Bryant's, on the Cumberland road, in Fayette county, Pa. to Brandonville, in the State of Virginia.

Mr. McKENNA submitted the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Ramsay's ford, in Alleghany county, through Cecil township, to Hickory, in Washington county, Pa.

Mr. HESTER submitted the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of freeing from postage all letters and communications carried by the mails, relating to the common schools and the common school systems of the different States.

On motion of Mr. SEYMOUR, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of restoring to the pension list the names of Isaac Austin and William Andrews, of the State of New York, soldiers of the revolution.

On motion of Mr. PIERSON, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of passing a law allowing to the heirs-at-law and legal representatives of Hugh Means, deceased, an ensign in the war of the revolution, the amount of commutation pay due to said Ensign Hugh Means, deceased.

On motion of Mr. HARPER, it was Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to inquire what loss has been sustained by the destruction of the Patent Office by the late fire; what measures are necessary to restore the records, drawings, and models, and for their safe-keeping in future; and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

On motion of Mr. CLAIBORNE, of Mississippi, Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing all such persons as were actually residing on, or cultivating any portion of, the public land, and who were prevented from obtaining their pre-emptions under the act of 1834, and previously, by a failure or delays in surveying the public lands, a right to enter one quarter section, to include their residence or improvements; or where such lands have been subsequently floated upon or sold, a right to enter one quarter section, and one additional eighth, as a compensation for their improvements, to be located in the same district where such improvements or residence may have been had.

On motion of Mr. ASHLEY, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act of the last session of Congress, for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Riddick, as to confine the confirmation of the tract of land therein mentioned to the section originally located and claimed by the said Riddick, and upon which his improvements were made.

On motion of Mr. TALIAFERRO, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the propriety of allowing to the heirs of the widow of Captain John Spotswood the seven years' half pay provided by law for such officers of the revolutionary army as should die by reason of wounds received in battle.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, it was Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an allowance to Elijah Milan for a horse lost in the service of the United States.

On motion of Mr. MAY, it was

Resolved, That the petitions now upon the files of the House, presented by him at the last session, from the 3d Congressional district in the State of Illinois, be recommitted to the same committee to which they were then referred.

On motion of Mr. WHITE of Florida, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for opening a steamboat canal from the Mississippi river to Pensacola Bay.

On motion of Mr. WHITE of Florida, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a new collection district at St. Josephs, and of erecting a light house at Cape St. Blas, near the entrance to St. Josephs Bay.

On motion of Mr. JENIFER, it was Resolved, That the memorials and accompanying papers from citizens of Prince Georges county, Maryland, and of the District of Columbia, praying that the bridges across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac river, be made free of toll; also similar memorials praying that the turnpike road within the District line be made free of toll, be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. HARLAN,

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of paying to Samuel G. Tillett, of Kentucky, the amount of a draft drawn by William Stirman as a teacher of the Choctaw Indians west of the Mississippi river.

On motion of Mr. DOUBLEDAY, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting arrears of pension to John Ellis of the county of Cayuga and State of New York.

Mr. HENDERSON submitted the following resolution, which, by the rule lies over one day.

Resolved, That 5,000 copies of the Senate document No. 333, entitled Report of a Geological Reconnaissance made in 1833, from the seat of Government, by the way of Green Bay and the Wisconsin Territory, to the Coteau De Prairie, by G. W. Featherstonhaugh, United States Geologist, be printed for the use of the members of this House.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the propriety of granting a pension to James Jack, of Tyler county, Virginia.

On motion of Mr. HUNTSMAN, it was Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a district federal court at Jackson, in the western district of Tennessee, to be holden by the district judge for the said State.

On motion of Mr. C. JOHNSON of Tennessee, it was

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of paying to Col. Joseph Brown the balance claimed by him to be due for the property lost in the Seminole campaign by the following persons, to wit: Hugh McBride, Hugh Long, James Taylor, John Fussell, David Ridge, Isaac Patterson, Jacob Ellison, John Stephens, and Samuel Walker, and transferred by them to the said Joseph Brown, and now on file in the Third Auditor's Office.

On motion of Mr. LOYALL, it was

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire into the equity and expediency of allowing to the only surviving heir or legal representative of the late John K. Latimer, compensation for the destruction by the British ships, lying in Lynhaven bay, of the schooner Comet, whilst employed in transporting the United States mail from Hampton to Norfolk, during the late war with Great Britain.

On motion of Mr. GARLAND of Va. it was

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Postmaster General to pay to Elisha Jackson of Virginia, the amount of three drafts drawn on the 29th day of December, 1834, by William Smith Sewall, late mail contractor, in favor of said Jackson, one for $237, payable the 1st day of August, 1835, another for $237, payable on the 1st of November, 1835, and another for $239, payable the 1st day of February, 1836; which were duly accepted by the Treasurer of the Department, and have been protested for non-payment.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM, it was Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing single gold dollars to be made at the Mints of the United States.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Virginia, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of restoring the names of John Davis and John Cottrell of the State of Virginia, on the pension list.

On motion of Mr. HOLSEY, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry at the city of Macon, in Georgia.

On motion of Mr. S. WILLIAMS of Ky. it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the propriety of passing a law reinstating Solomon Preisset as a pensioner.

On motion of Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be directed to inquire into the expediency of extending the post route from Sautersville to Sherman's Store, in the State of South Carolina.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN.

In execution of the order adopted on yesterday, the House proceeded to ballot for the election of a Chaplain for the House for the present session.

Mr. LEONARD nominated the Rev. O. C. Comstock.

Mr. TALIAFERRO nominated the Rev. Henry Slicer.

Mr. KENNON nominated the Rev. Elias Harrison.

Mr. LANE nominated the Rev. Thomas B. Balch.

Mr. GALBRAITH nominated the Rev. N. R. Snowden.

Mr. ASHLEY nominated the Rev. Mason Noble.

Mr. BOCKEE nominated the Rev. J. I. Elliott.

The result of the ballots was as follows:

	1st.	2d.	3d.
Comstock	72	93	103
Slicer	32	64	89
Noble	26	16	4
Elliott	10	2
Balch	11	7
Snowden	14	3
Harrison	18	5
Scattering	7	4
Blanks	6	5

Whole number 196 199 203
Necessary to a choice 99 100 102

So the Rev. OLIVER C. COMSTOCK, having received a majority of all the votes, was duly elected Chaplain to the House.

On motion,

The House then adjourned.

SELECT COMMITTEE.—The following gentlemen were appointed a Select Committee to examine into the causes of accidents on board of steam vessels navigating the waters of the United States:

Mr. HANNEGAN of Indiana.

HARDIN of Kentucky.

HOLSEY of Georgia.

THOMPSON of South Carolina.

GILLET of New York.

BORDEN of Massachusetts.

JOHNSON of Tennessee.

GARLAND of Louisiana.

SPANGLER of Ohio.

IN SENATE,

WEDNESDAY, December 21, 1836.

Mr. RUGGLES presented the credentials of the Hon. JUDAH DANA, elected a Senator from the State of Maine, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. ETHER SHAPLEY; after which, the oath to support the constitution of the United States was administered to Mr. Dana by the Vice President, and he took his seat.

A message was received from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Postmaster General, on the subject of the late destruction of the Post Office by fire, and recommending the passage of such laws and appropriations as may be necessary to provide a safe and permanent deposit for the records and papers of the department.

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON,

The message and documents were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The CHAIR communicated a report from the Treasury Department, in reply to the resolution of the Senate of the 20th inst. on the subject of the statements of the deposit banks. Laid on the table.

The CHAIR also communicated a report from the War Department, giving the information called for by the resolution of the Senate of the 14th April last.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT,

The petition and papers of the administrator of Michael Hogan, on the files of the last session, were again referred to the Committee on Claims.

Petitions were presented by Messrs. SEVIER, KENT, TOMLINSON, and WALL.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported, without amendment, the bill for the relief of William East.

Mr. TIPTON, from the same committee, reported, without amendment, the bill for the relief of Samuel Miller.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. FRANKLIN, their Clerk, stating that in pursuance of the joint resolution for the appointment of two Chaplains for Congress of different religious denominations, the House had elected on their part the Rev. Oliver C. Comstock, of the Baptist persuasion.

Mr. BENTON submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate what amount in gold and silver has been received at each of the land offices since the Treasury order of July 11th took effect; also, to inform the Senate of the amount of receipts or certificates given by the Treasurer of the United States for payments to him on account of public lands, and the amount and date of each certificate or receipt, and the name of the payer.

Mr. WALL submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Library Committee be instructed to inquire whether it be practicable, from the books now in the possession of Congress, to furnish each of the committee rooms of the Senate with a complete copy of the laws of the United States, the Journals of both Houses, the documents, reports, and other papers and compilations and digests published under the authority, and at the expense of Congress, and if not, to inquire and report what will be the expense of furnishing them.

Mr. WRIGHT submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to transmit to the Senate at the earliest convenient day, an abstract from the returns of the State banks on file in his office, showing, 1st. The amount of discounts; 2d. The amount of public deposits; 3d. The amount of specie; 4th. The amount of bills or notes in circulation of each of those banks making returns to the department, as shown by each return received from the first day of July last to the present time.

Mr. CALHOUN, in pursuance of notice given, asked leave to introduce a bill to extend the provisions of certain sections of the deposit act of 23d June, 1836, to the money that may be in the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1836.

Mr. C. said that he would take that opportunity of expressing it as his opinion, that there would be a considerable surplus at the end of the year, allowing for ample appropriations to meet the wants of the Government. He was not prepared to say exactly what the amount would be. The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury had been laid on his desk, but he had not had time to look into it. However, he had so far satisfied himself of the fact generally as to be able to say, that at the end of the ensuing year, after making provision for liberal appropriations, as he had before stated, there would be little short of eight millions, perhaps nearly twice that amount, of surplus money in the Treasury. He was aware that the Secretary of the Treasury took a very different view of the subject, but he (Mr. C.) felt that there was but little hazard in saying that the Secretary was mistaken. He was aware that, formerly, such assertions had been made without giving to the subject a proper examination. He knew that so uncertain, so conjectural, so erroneous, had been the reports from the Treasury Department for the last two or three years, that he hazarded little in making the assertion that the Secretary was mistaken in his calculation. That he might not be thought to do injustice to the Secretary, he would state what were the two estimates of receipts made by that officer the preceding year, and also what are the estimates for this year. [Here Mr. C. read various estimates of receipts and expenditures of the Government for the last two years, and commented on the calculations made by the Secretary of the Treasury, as to the probable amount of the balances or surpluses that would remain over all the expenditures. He contended that the Secretary had committed some of the most monstrous and extravagant errors, in calculation, that could be found any where. He said this in no spirit of unkindness, but with mortification.]

Well, (continued Mr. C.) the Secretary had profited in some degree by what was said last year, and is now nearer the truth in his calculations, but is still far from it. He had ventured to give his opinion, that there was a probability that a part of the money which was paid to some of the States, to the amount of two or three millions, will have to be refunded. Now, a word upon that point. He even throws out that idea upon an income of twenty-four millions of dollars. He (Mr. Calhoun) should like to see an Administration and Secretary of the Treasury demanding of the States to refund a part of the surplus. No; there would be no such demand. And he would go further, and say that that Administration must be wanting in foresight, prudence, and economy, should it ever ask for the money, except in the event of a war. He conceived it desirable to avoid resorting to taxes in such a contingency. Those who were here in 1812, could testify to the disadvantages and inconvenience under which the country then labored on account of the want of funds, and would not fail to perceive what advantages there were in having this money to resort to, in the event of a foreign war. Assuming, then, that there would be a surplus of eight millions of dollars at the close of the next year, the question recurred, what was to be done with it? It was not his intention to argue the question at this time, as it would open the full merits of the question, and would be premature, at this particular juncture. He proposed to take a more limited view, and to say what he conceived to be the point, the real issue, as the facts now stood. He contended that there would be an unavoidable surplus in the Treasury; that it ought not to be left there, nor in the deposit banks; and that it ought to be deposited with the States, not only as the safer place, but as the most just depository, that they may have the use of the money, instead of the deposit banks. Let it be remembered, that that was the great principle which laid the foundation of the passage of an act of the highest importance at the last session; an act, let him say, that would distinguish the twenty-fourth Congress. That was an act which had received the almost unanimous voice of the whole country in its favor; and he might add, of foreign countries too. It had inspired new hopes and new expectations amongst us. It had been a matter of wonder to European nations—a thing peculiar in our institutions, and as showing the genius of our Government.

He thought it perfectly apparent to every one that there ought not to be a surplus, if it could be avoided; and that, at all events, as the money belonged to the people, no Government had a right to withhold it from them. What, then, he would inquire, was the true issue? What was the point at which we have arrived? Could we, under all the circumstances of the case, reduce the revenue according to the wants of the Government? Was it practicable? he meant in the enlarged practical sense of that word. Could we make a reduction without incurring greater injury, greater losses to the country, than any it had yet sustained? The Secretary of the Treasury entertained the opinion that we could. He (Mr. Calhoun) hoped his opinion might prove correct. He should heartily rejoice at it.

He had moved, the other day, that that part of the President's message which relates to a reduction of the revenue be referred to the Committee on Finance, as the appropriate committee, and because there was a majority of its members hostile to the deposit law. The majority of that committee would doubtless do every thing in their power to make a reduction, in order to avoid what they considered so great a calamity as depositing the public money with the States. If they could not do it, we might pronounce the thing impracticable. If the committee agree, he might pledge himself that they would not agree to a reduction.

There was one point that the committee might have no fear of, and that was, that in the reduction they might propose, it would not be considered, at least, on the side of the south, as a breach of the compromise act. The people of the south had a deep interest in that act, as well as their northern brethren. For himself he was free to confess that he had made no pledge, nor plighted his faith, against touching that act. He foresaw, when the act was about to pass, that there would be a surplus; he knew it would be unavoidable. He knew it was impossible to reduce the revenue, all at once, without overthrowing the manufacturing establishments. And let him say he had ever been their friend and not their foe. It was a disaster to be avoided. The reduction was not made so fast as he thought it might have been; not so fast by a year or two. He said at that time, and in a prophetic spirit, that there were some who were so much opposed to the compromise that they would rather collect the revenue at the point of the bayonet than agree to it. When the surplus was to be distributed at the last session, he rose in his place, and called upon the stenographers in the gallery, and begged them to take down his words, which were, and he pronounced them in his place, that he voted for that act as he had voted for the other act; that there was no plighted faith; no pledge on my part, and no obligation or consideration, more than in the other act.

Well, then, he was at liberty to select his position, and did select it. The people of the staple States, he could not do otherwise than admit, had derived an incalculable benefit from the compromise act, and were continuing to do so.

He, as a representative of the southern States, one who took an active part on that occasion, claimed those advantages derivable from the act in common with others. The act had already reduced the income of the Government prodigiously.

Mr. C. went on to speak of the various reductions which, in 1832 and 1833, were made in the tariff, and then added, that the people of the South now feel its vivifying effects, as every man knew. Well, the duties were to be still further reduced, so that the revenue should be brought down to the legitimate wants of the Government. Southern men were a little too honest, if not too proud, to claim all the advantages, on their part, and withhold them from others, as respected the compromise act. The North was desirous that the duties should be gradually taken off, in order that the great manufacturing establishments should not be subjected to fluctuations. The course which the South was to pursue was to follow, and not to lead. Having defended his position, he would address a word to the manufacturing interests; he was sure, if they would hear his voice, which was not unkind to them, and those who represented them on this floor, it was his humble opinion (and he spoke it with deference to that entertained by others who were more intimately interested than himself) it would be a wise act as regards the policy, the great interest of the country, that the reduction of duties in 1841 and 1842 should be made.

He believed that the manufacturers would be gainers by it. The markets should be kept simply supplied, and the merchant this year feeling that there was going to be a great reduction the next year, would only order for the year, so that there would be an unsupplied market, and the consequence would be, that the manufacturers would stand the chance without any difficulty whatever. He thought the northern manufacturers possessed that capacity, that ingenuity, and that skill, which would fully enable them to meet boldly the competition of foreign industry.

With regard to the committee, he could not but express his hope that they would accelerate their action. He would be glad to follow, rather than to precede them. If this had been a long instead of a short session, he would, for the present, postpone any action on the subject. However, as the Senate had but two months to sit, no time was to be lost, for there was a heavy, dead surplus remaining in the Treasury, or rather the deposit banks. It was impossible to devise a more complete scheme to corrupt the morals of the community than a surplus.

He trusted that the provisions of the bill would be fairly and impartially examined by the select committee, to whom he proposed to refer it. He entertained the wish that they would follow the noble example they had set on the occasion of the compromise act, and let party feeling be sacrificed on the altar of the country.

Mr. CLAY observed that he was extremely unwilling to interrupt the progress of the debate on the subject of the Treasury order, which it was expected would be continued to day; but he felt himself called on, after what he had heard, to say a word or two on the subject of the act of March, 1833, called the compromise act. Considering all the circumstances under which that act passed, the reception which it met with in that body—the passage almost by acclamation in another body—the reception which it met with throughout the whole country, and the repeated declarations of the Chief Magistrate; considering the condition of the manufacturing interest, its prosperity—considering all these circumstances, he said, that there was something like national faith committed to preserve that act inviolate. He did not say that it was incompetent for Congress to repeal the act; but he should think it a violation of public faith to make any essential change of a measure which had produced such salutary effects. It certainly must have been foreseen at the time the act was passed that there would be a surplus if the expenditures of the Government were kept within any reasonable limits. But what was the remedy proposed? It would be remembered that he had introduced the land bill as a remedy against the evils of an overflowing Treasury, and had advocated its adoption on that ground. The land bill was passed, and if it had not met with the President's veto they would have had none of the difficulties of an excess of revenue to contend with. A much greater amount would have been distributed to the States than they will receive under the deposit act of the last session, and the necessity for further legislation on the subject would have been avoided. That remedy, he said, would have operated most beneficially, without disturbing, in the slightest degree, the compromise act under which every great interest of the country had prospered, and the Southern interest not more so than the great interests of the North and West. He thought it his duty to say this much in reference to the course he had prescribed for himself, which was rigid adherence, in good faith, to the pledge contained in the compromise act. He was aware of the pressure that threatened the manufacturing interest, and that there was a majority in favor of a great reduction of the duties, particularly on some favored articles; but if this majority should succeed, he must say that they must do so without his concurrence, and with his deepest regrets.

Mr. WALKER here moved to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CALHOUN observed that it was a parliamentary rule not to refer a measure to a committee that was hostile to it. He hoped that the reference would not be made, and that the Senate would, in a spirit of liberality as well as courtesy, suffer the bill to take the ordinary course, without reference, or at least to send it to a select committee.

Mr. WALKER said that he hoped the bill of the Senator from South Carolina would be referred to the Committee on Finance, to which this subject appropriately belonged. The bill is, in substance, a renewal and continuation of the deposit bill of the last session; and this great and important measure is asked to be acted upon definitely, in a few days, without any previous examination by committee of this body. The gentleman tells that, according to his estimate, there will be a probable surplus in the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1838, of eight millions of dollars. The estimate of the honorable Senator (Mr. W. said he wished to be subjected to the examination of the Committee on Finance; but assuming it to be correct under the existing laws, shall we continue to tax the people beyond the wants of the Government, and so legislate as to collect during the succeeding year a surplus of eight millions? The gentleman from South Carolina has made a portion of his eulogy on the deposit bill of the last session, that it would prevent the monopoly of the public lands by speculators, and reserve them for the honest settlers and cultivators. The deposit bill has produced no such effect; (said Mr. W.) the report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that, during but three-fourths of the present year, more than twenty millions of dollars has been received for the public lands, being nearly six millions more than was received from the same source during the whole of the preceding year, and more than double the amount paid into the Treasury for the public lands during any year previous to 1835. Facts, then, against the gentleman's position, that the deposit bill has arrested speculations in the public lands.

on the contrary, they are increasing with alarming rapidity, and, if Congress does not interfere, in a few years nearly our entire public domain will have passed into the hands of American and European capitalists, who will control the sale and occupancy of this great domain.

Whilst our existing laws continue in force, there is nothing illegal, and Mr. W. said, in his opinion, nothing improper in the entry by any one of such public lands as are unoccupied by any settler, yet Mr. W. said, he thought the existing laws ought to be changed, so as to prevent the entry of the public lands, except for the purposes of settlement and cultivation. Whilst, then, Mr. W. said, he could not join the Senator from South Carolina, in his general denunciations on this subject, he deeply regretted that whilst that Senator denounced speculators, his every vote at the last session was in their favor, and against the settler. He voted, said Mr. W. against pre-emptions to settlers under any past or prospective law, against confining to cultivators the sales of the public lands, and in favor of continuing in force the existing system, by which our noble domain will soon pass into the hands of speculators. Sir, if the Senator from South Carolina will vote to carry into effect the recommendation of the President, to limit to cultivators the sales of the public lands, there will be no surplus. The surplus arises from the sales to speculators of the public lands, amounting during the present year to about twenty-four millions of dollars. Now, by the estimate made last year by the Senator from Ohio, (Mr. Ewing,) eight millions only were required to supply the settlers and cultivators with public lands. This estimate was much too high; but deduct this eight millions, which would furnish a supply to settlers, from the twenty-four millions received this year by sales to speculators, and it will make a difference of sixteen millions, which is just double the probable surplus estimated by the Senator from South Carolina. If, then, the Senator from South Carolina votes to continue the existing system, he votes to create a surplus—he votes to tax the people for an unnecessary revenue—he votes to extract from the people more money than is required for the wants of the Government—he votes to perpetuate the surplus system, the system of unnecessary taxation, as a part of the settled policy of the Government; for if we will not meet the question now, when will we be prepared to meet it? If we will not now reduce the revenue, will we ever reduce it? We were told last year as an argument in favor of the deposit bill by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, (Mr. Webster,) that it was a single operation. Mr. W. reminded the Senate that one of his objections then urged against the deposit bill, was that this single operation would serve as a fatal example for future distributions, until the surplus system was incorporated as a part of the settled policy of the country. These predictions, Mr. W. said, may be fulfilled, if we adopt the bill of the Senator from South Carolina, and distribute an estimated surplus of next year, instead of reducing the revenue. Mr. W. said when he introduced last year a bill for confining the sales of the public lands to settlers and cultivators, and desired its reference to a select committee, the journals showed that the Senator from South Carolina opposed the motion, and insisted on referring the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, although that committee was not only opposed to the bill, but had, in principle, previously reported against it. And now, said Mr. W. the Senator from South Carolina seems to think it a want of courtesy in me to pursue the same course, adopted by that gentleman on a former occasion, by insisting on the reference of the bill to the regular standing committee. Mr. W. said he concurred with the Senator from South Carolina in opposing the violation of the compromise act of the second March, 1833, if the revenue could otherwise be reduced to the wants of the Government, economically administered. Mr. W. here turned to the journals of the Senate of last session, and read a resolution, then offered by him, calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to report at this session, what reduction of the tariff, consistently with the provisions of the sixth section of the compromise act, accompanied with limiting the sales of the public lands to actual settlers, would bring down the revenue to the wants of the Government. The resolution was not adopted; and now the information called for in that resolution is precisely what we desire. This sixth section of the compromise act, which Mr. Walker read, authorizing, in case of an "excess of revenue," the reduction or repeal of the duties on all articles paying a "less rate of duty than twenty per cent. ad valorem," was embraced in his (Mr. W.'s) inquiry; and these duties, if repealed, it was generally estimated, would reduce the annual revenue three millions of dollars, which would bring down the estimated surplus of the Senator from South Carolina to five millions, the very sum which that gentleman, at the last session, proposed should remain in the Treasury as an unexpended balance to meet emergencies. As then, by confining the sales to actual settlers, and if that is not sufficient, by repealing the duties on all unprotected articles, the revenue can be reduced to the wants of the Government, without violating the compromise bill, why create a surplus for distribution, by continuing the existing system? Mr. W. said, if we pass another deposit or distribution bill, the country ought to know it is because we refuse to reduce the revenue to the wants of the Government, when it can certainly be done without disturbing the compromise act of 1833. Let us not, then, seek shelter behind that act, in the determination to create a surplus revenue.

Mr. CALHOUN regretted that he had been misunderstood by the Senator from Mississippi. What he said was, that no administration having patriotism or sagacity, would be under the necessity of demanding this fund from the States; that it ought to be kept as a sacred fund for some great emergency, such as a war with a foreign power. He said not one word of its being a permanent donation, or of the propriety of continuing the distribution. The Senator from Mississippi charged him with the intention of creating a surplus for the purpose of distribution. He had said nothing to authorize this charge. He said distinctly, that he greatly preferred the reduction of duties, provided it could be made without causing greater evils than it was proposed to remedy. These were his ideas, and he regretted that they were misunderstood.

After what the President had said and done, the man who would vote to leave this money in the deposit banks, would vote in favor of the speculators, and to encourage frauds on the public lands. The money must not be left there; all experience was against it.

Mr. BUCHANAN observed, that the question then before the Senate was on referring this bill to the Committee on Finance. Without expressing any opinion as to the merits of the bill, he would say that he thought it was precisely one of those subjects which ought to receive the consideration of a committee. There were so many ramifications connected with this measure, and what it might be proper to do in relation to it, depended on so many important circumstances, that it ought to receive the investigation, and careful investigation, of a committee. In the first place, there were two contrary projects before the Senate for the distribution of the surplus revenue. One was that of the Senator from Kentucky, to distribute the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and the other was this bill of the Senator from South Carolina, to dispose of the money under the provisions of the deposit law of the last session. Now, both of these projects could not prevail, as there was but one fund to operate upon; and if the Senate should prefer the plan of the Senator from Kentucky, that of the Senator from South Carolina must be lost. But again, the President, in his message at the commencement of the session, recommended that the sales of the public lands should be confined to actual settlers.

On that subject (Mr. B. said) he had formed no opinions; he believed that he should be influenced very much by the wishes of the gentlemen coming from the new States. If that plan prevailed, the probability was that there would be no surplus to dispose of. He should like, therefore, to have a report from the Committee on Finance, upon their responsibility, estimating what would be in the Treasury, and from what sources, before he acted upon any of the various plans that had been proposed. While up, he would say one word as to the celebrated compromise act which had been just referred to. He should never forget the impressions made on his mind when the news of the passage of that act was first conveyed to him. At that time he was in a foreign land; and then the enemies of liberty in the old world were confidently proclaiming that our grand experiment of free Government was about to fail, and the Union of these States was about to be dissolved. It was then apprehended by many of our friends abroad, that our confederacy was about expiring, (though he knew that this was impossible;) but when he heard that the compromise bill had passed, and that the waves of jealousy and dissension had subsided, and that all was calm and prosperous at home, he experienced sensations which he had never felt before, and which it would be impossible to describe. After examining the bill, he would not say whether he should have sustained it or not, under the circumstances, had he then been a Senator; but the country had accepted it, and received the benefits of it, in the restoration of tranquillity. The agricultural and manufacturing interests had settled down under its operation, and believed that at length they had a basis on which they might rest, without being disturbed. The great Commonwealth which he had in part the honor to represent, was deeply interested not only in agriculture and manufactures, but another great interest had grown up, essentially connected with her general policy of internal improvement—he referred to the mining interest. His chief object in rising was to declare in advance, that unless his opinion should undergo a very great change, he would never vote to disturb this compromise in such a manner as injuriously to affect any of the great interests of the country. If the revenue can be reduced to the wants of the Government without affecting any of these interests, then, but not otherwise, he should support such a reduction.

There were so many considerations involved, and so much information which ought to be obtained before any final action could be had on this subject, that he hoped a reference of it might be made to the Committee on Finance, which he believed was the most appropriate committee. If the report of that committee should be adverse to the views of the Senator from South Carolina, no gentleman knew better how again to bring his bill before the Senate in opposition to their report.

Mr. WALKER said the Senator from South Carolina seemed to suppose that he, (Mr. W.) had charged him erroneously with legislating or desiring to legislate to create a surplus. Mr. W. said that he had stated that if there should be any surplus next year, it would be because we refused at this session to reduce the revenue to the wants of the Government. That bills which would thus reduce the revenue without violating the compromise act of 1833, had already been proposed and passed to a second reading in this body; and that if the Senator from South Carolina voted now, as he did at the last session, against similar bills, he would vote to create a surplus; and that if he would now vote for these bills, his project to distribute another surplus would be wholly unnecessary. The bill of the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Morris,) limiting to settlers the sales of the public lands, if passed, would reduce to nothing the estimated surplus of eight millions calculated by the Senator from South Carolina. And Mr. W. asked the friends of the manufacturing interest, when the revenue could thus be reduced to the wants of the Government, without disturbing the compromise act of 1833, whether it was not their true interest thus to reduce the revenue, rather than attempt the establishment of a surplus system which might produce a revulsion that would sweep away even the compromise protective duties of 1833?

Any party that sustains unnecessary taxation, that insists on collecting from the people more revenue than is required for the wants of the Government, cannot long enjoy public confidence; and as the extreme measure of 1828 produced a reaction which had well nigh prostrated the entire protective system, so the attempt now to create and perpetuate the surplus system may produce such a revulsion as will sweep away even the limited compromise protective duties of 1833. If the manufacturing interest unites itself with the surplus distributive policy, it will prove to that interest the embrace of death. If the manufacturing interest repose on the faith of the compromise act of 1833, let them not violate the provision of the sixth section of that act by substituting distribution for reduction. The moment we now legislate so as to create a surplus revenue, that moment the sixth section of the compromise act is violated, and the manufacturing interest can never ask to repose upon the faith of an act, one of the material provisions of which they will have contemned and disregarded.

Mr. CALHOUN would be very far from desiring one measure to be applied to a bill introduced by him, and another to a bill introduced by the Senator from Mississippi. There was no similarity, however, between the two cases. The bill introduced by the gentleman related to a subject for which one of the standing committees of that body—the Committee on Public Lands—was particularly constituted, and it therefore ought properly to have been sent to that committee, while the bill just introduced by him had no reference whatever to any particular committee—had never been in charge of the Committee on Finance, or any other of the standing committees, and consequently might, with great propriety, be referred to a special committee, or be acted on without reference. He did indulge the hope that a spirit of courtesy and liberality would prevail, and that his bill would not be sent to a committee that would report against it.

If the reference should be made to the Committee on Finance, he knew its fate; there would be no provision for the surplus of the present year, and it would be left in the deposit banks. He had carefully read the President's message, and it had excited suspicions that the design was to make a movement for a reduction of duties, but that the end was to leave the public funds in the deposit banks.

These suspicions (Mr. C. said) would be confirmed, if his bill should be set aside. Notwithstanding the President condemns the leaving of so large a sum of money in the hands of these banks; notwithstanding he condemns the spirit of speculation in the public lands, encouraged thereby, yet these things that he so much condemns will take place if the bill should be destroyed. He saw (Mr. C. said) how things would go if the motion prevailed. He announced it in advance. Nothing would be done; and the money would not be placed where it ought to be, in the hands of the people, from whom it came, but would accrue to the benefit of the deposit banks. He would make one pledge: if the Committee on Finance can make any adequate reduction of the revenue, he would withdraw his bill.

Mr. RIVES said that the grounds on which the gentleman from South Carolina had based his argument, convinced him (Mr. R.) that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Finance. The honorable Senator had entered into a calculation for the purpose of showing that there would be a considerable surplus next year, and he had also adverted to the compromise act of 1833, and expressed his wish that the duties might be further reduced, if that could be done without injury to the great manufacturing interests of the country. Now both these questions were clearly of a financial character, and therefore the more appropriate committee to which they should be sent was the Finance. With regard to the deposit bill, of which the gentleman had spoken, he (Mr. R.) would say that in voting for that bill his judgment had approved it at that time, and did so still. He considered it a measure arising from the fact that we had a large surplus in the Treasury, with no prospective probability of getting rid of it. It was for that reason that he had been induced to give the bill his support, which he would never regret, and which every day's observation confirmed him as calculated to promote the best interests of the country. What he now said, he did not wish to be considered ed as indicative of the course which he hereafter might think proper to pursue. In regard to the probability of there being such a surplus as the gentleman from South Carolina seems to suppose there will, he would say nothing. The Senator said that Congress was bound to prevent such surplus by reducing the revenue to the wants of the government. It was true the policy of adopting a tariff was one of that character which circumstances called for, which was forced upon us by the peculiar condition of the country; and it remained for Congress, in its wisdom, to say whether or not it should be upheld, and if so, whether there should be some modification made in the rate of duties.

He, (Mr. Rives,) begged leave to advert to an observation of the honorable Senator; which was, that if a majority of the Senate should refer his proposition to the Committee on Finance, he would undertake to be a prophet, and pronounce that the policy of that majority, and the result of the action of the committee, would be nothing but a deceitful demonstration upon the subject of a reduction of duties. He, (Mr. Rives,) would ask, how did the honorable Senator, (he did not pretend to give his precise words, for he saw that the gentleman dissented,) should a majority of the Senate give a different reference to his bill than he desired, arrive at the conclusion that there would be no reduction made, and that all that had been said on the subject, both by the President and Secretary of the Treasury, would turn out to be a delusion—a deceit? He (Mr. R.) was at a loss to conceive how the gentleman could reconcile the motion he had yesterday made, to refer that part of the message which relates to a reduction of the revenue to this very Committee on Finance, with the motion he had this day made in regard to this bill. He, (Mr. Rives,) thought that under every aspect, and particularly as the bill goes upon the supposition of the case that there will be a surplus, the proper reference for it was to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CALHOUN replied, that the two propositions were totally different. The first motion was the proper one, and he had made it, knowing that the Committee on Finance was favorable to the measure. Whilst, on the contrary, he knew that committee to be opposed to the principles of his bill, and therefore he did not wish to refer it to them. He was glad to hear the Senator from Virginia express himself as he had done with regard to the deposit bill of last session. His noble course on that occasion would ever do him honor.

If a reduction of duties could be made without producing injurious consequences, let it be made with all his heart. He infinitely preferred a reduction to deposit. He would not be the man to disturb the compromise act: it ought not to be touched without the common consent of all parties. He contended that the argument of the honorable Senator, with respect to the reference of this bill, would refer almost every thing to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RIVES observed that as the gentleman from South Carolina had admitted that he was only conditionally in favor of this project; that is, that he preferred a reduction of the revenue to it, and as questions relating to such reduction must be settled by the Committee on Finance, it would be perfectly in accordance with the parliamentary rule to refer the bill to that committee. As a good deal had been said in regard to the compromise act, he desired to say a single word on that subject.

If there were any means by which the revenue could be reduced to the wants of the country, without interfering with that act, he would not disturb it; but he considered it a paramount duty to regulate the revenue to the wants of the country, and he did not think the compromise act ought to interfere with it.

To the Editor of the Globe:

SIR: The report in your paper of this morning of the remarks made by me on the 21st instant, on the reference of Mr. Calhoun's bill to continue certain provisions of the deposit act of the last session, being, in several respects, materially and strikingly inaccurate, I beg that you will have the goodness to state that a correct version of them will be furnished at the earliest moment which the pressure of other duties shall allow me.

Very respectfully,

Your ob't servant,

W. C. RIVES.

Washington, Dec. 23, 1836.

The question was taken on the reference to the Committee on Finance, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buchanan, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, McKean, Niles, Page, Parker, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Walker, Wall—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Benton, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, Knight, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Webster, White, Wright—22.

The yeas and nays being equal, the Chair voted in the affirmative.

So the bill was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill from the House to provide payment for horses lost, and property destroyed in the service of the United States, was twice read, and referred.

The Senate then took up the special order, being the resolution of Mr. EWING of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order, relating to payments in the land offices; when

Mr. WEBSTER took the floor, and addressed the Senate in favor of the resolution, continuing his remarks to a late hour; when, without having concluded, he gave way to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BENTON then informally laid on the table the following, as a notice of a motion he intended to make before taking the question on the resolution.

To invest the committee to which the resolution shall be sent with authority to inquire into the effect and operation of the Treasury order of July 11th, upon the business of the country, and the banking institutions of the States; and into the conduct of banks in relation to that order; and into their attempts (if any) to withdraw specie from circulation, and to embarrass the exchanges and business of the country: the committee to summon witnesses before them, if any such are near at hand, and to conduct their inquiries at a distance by interrogatories.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 21, 1836.

TENNESSEE LAND BILL.

Mr. DUNLAP asked the consent of the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the "bill to amend the act to authorize the State of Tennessee to issue grants of land in certain cases," (commonly called the "Tennessee Land bill.") He would barely remark, that he hoped he should get the assent of the House to this motion, since the bill in question had received the favorable report of a committee of that House as long ago as the year 1825, and it had been before the House from that time to the present.

Mr. HARDIN objecting.

Mr. DUNLAP moved a suspension of the rule; but the motion was lost without a division.

SURPLUS REVENUE.

The first business then in order was a memorial presented on a former day by Mr. W. B. SHEPARD, from a number of citizens of the first Congressional District of North Carolina, praying for the passage of a law to provide for the future distribution of the surplus revenue of the United States for several years to come, on the principles of the act on the same subject, passed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. SHEPARD moved to refer the memorial to the Committee of Ways and Means, and addressed the House at length on the subject; when the memorial was so referred.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The following message was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his private Secretary, ANDREW JACKSON, Jr. Esq. which, on motion of Mr. SHIELDS, was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN: Herewith I transmit you a report of the Postmaster General, and recommend the passage of such laws, and the making of such appropriations, as may be necessary to carry into effect the measures adopted by him for resuming the business of the Department under his charge, and securing the public property in the old Post Office building.

It is understood that the building procured for the temporary use of the Department, is far from being fire-proof, and that the valuable books and papers secured from the recent conflagration, will there be exposed to similar dangers. I therefore feel it my duty to recommend an immediate appropriation for the construction of a fire-proof General Post Office, that the materials may be obtained within the present winter, and the building erected as rapidly as practicable.

ANDREW JACKSON.

December 20, 1836.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Dec. 20, 1836.

To the President of the United States:

SIR: On the morning of the 15th instant, I performed the painful duty of reporting to you orally, the destruction of the General Post Office building by fire, and received your instructions to inquire into the cause and extent of the calamity, for the purpose of enabling you to make a communication to Congress.

A few hours afterwards, I received through the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives, an official copy of a resolution adopted by that House, instructing the committee to institute a similar inquiry, and the chairman asked for such information as it was in my power to give. The investigation directed by you, was thus rendered unnecessary.

The corporation of the City of Washington, with honorable promptitude, offered the Department the use of the west wing of the City Hall, now occupied by the Mayor and Councils and their officers, and the officers of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company. The proprietors of the Medical College, also tendered the use of their building on E street; and offers were made of several other buildings in the central parts of the city. An examination was made of such as promised by their magnitude to afford sufficient room for the force employed in the Department, but none were found equal in the commodiousness of their interior structure and abundant room, to Fuller's hotel, opposite the buildings occupied by the Treasury Department, on Pennsylvania avenue. That building has been obtained on terms which the accompanying papers, marked (1) and (2,) will fully exhibit. The business of the Department will be immediately resumed in that building.

The agreement with Mr. Fuller will make necessary an immediate appropriation by Congress, and upon that body will devolve also the duty of providing for the payment of the rent, if they shall approve of the arrangement.

In the mean time, steps have been taken to secure all that is valuable in the ruins of the Post Office building, and to protect from the weather the walls of so much of it as was occupied by the General Post Office, which stand firm.

The Department has no fund at command out of which the services necessary in the accomplishment of these objects can be paid for, nor has it the means to replace the furniture which has been lost, and must be immediately obtained, to enable the clerks to proceed with their current business.

These facts I deem it my duty to report to you, that you may recommend to Congress such measures thereupon as you may deem expedient.

With the highest respect,

Your obt^s servant,

AMOS KENDALL.

Mr. SUTHERLAND asked the consent of the House to take up, for reference, a joint resolution from the Senate directing the publication of the annual statement of the navigation and commerce of the United States; which was objected to by Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina.

Mr. BELL made a request to the House that it would consent to receive reports from the committees at this time. He said he had one to make from the Committee on Indian Affairs of an important character, and had been waiting for an opportunity to present it to the House for several days. Objection was made; and Mr. B. did not press the motion, on the understanding that reports from committees would come up severally this morning.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Mr. EVANS of Maine.

Messrs. LAWRENCE and REED of Massachusetts.

Mr. SEYMOUR of New York.

Mr. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina.

Mr. HARDIN of Kentucky.

Mr. SPEAKER POLK of Tennessee.

Messrs. STORER and PATTERSON of Ohio.

[Mr. STORER presented the petition of Mrs. Martha Piat of Ohio, the only surviving daughter of Captain Joshua Huddy, who was executed while a prisoner of war, by the Tories, in 1782, praying the consideration of Congress in her behalf.]

Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois.

[Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois presented the memorial and petitions from the State of Illinois, praying the survey of the Kaskaskia, Cash, and Sabine rivers; and on his motion, they were referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.]

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri.

[Mr. HARRISON presented a petition of Albert Tison and Susan Labeaume, praying the confirmation of certain grants of land; of John Moore, praying the allowance of a claim against the General Government, as Commissary of Missouri militia; of James Allen, for a pension.]

Mr. YELL of Arkansas;

Mr. WHITE of Florida.

[Mr. JONES of Wisconsin, presented the petition of Henry Baird and others, who pray for a donation of their farms which they have occupied as teachers &c. in the Indian department of Wisconsin Territory; also, the petition of citizens of Erie, Pa. who pray for the construction of a harbor at Racine, at the mouth of Root river, Wisconsin Territory; the petition of John Hait, who, having advanced money during the late war to the United States, now for the first time asks remuneration in a donation of the tract of land which he occupies in Wisconsin Territory; a petition for the construction of roads in said Territory.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Tennessee submitted the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing George Martin, a citizen of the county of Benton, in the State of Tennessee, on the pension roll.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. BELL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill to regulate, in certain cases, the disposition of the proceeds of lands ceded by Indian tribes to the United States; which was read twice, committed, and made the order of the day for this day.

On motion of Mr. BELL, the House then went into Committee of the Whole on the foregoing bill—Mr. GARLAND of Va. in the chair, which was considered and reported to the House without amendment.

The SPEAKER having resumed the Chair, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

On motion of Mr. BELL, all the papers committed to the Committee on Indian Affairs, at the last session, in relation to directing an inquiry into the abuses and irregularities of the Indian Department, were recommitted to that committee.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported the following bills:

1. A bill making appropriations for the suppression of Indian hostilities.

2. A bill making appropriations for the payment of revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States for the year 1837.

3. A bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year 1837.

4. A bill making appropriations for the support of the army for the year 1837.

5. A bill making appropriations for certain fortifications of the United States for the year 1837.

6. A bill making appropriations for the current expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year 1837.

All the foregoing bills were severally read twice, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

On motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the "bill to exempt merchandise, imported under certain circumstances, from the operation of the act of the nineteenth of May, 1828, entitled 'An act in alteration of the several acts imposing duties on imports,'" and the same was recommended to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel Hixon, Sons, and others, which was read twice and committed.

THE MINT.

Mr. CAMBRELENG gave notice that he should, on to-morrow, ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the bill supplementary to the act entitled "An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States." He gave as a reason for so doing, the indispensable necessity of passing this bill at the commencement of the year.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of John Baptist Granger; which was read twice, and made the order of the day for Friday week.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Norman Holt; which was read twice, and, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, (after a slight verbal amendment, moved by Mr. HOWELL, was adopted,) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. LINCOLN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs of John Graham, late Receiver of the Public Moneys at Huntsville, Alabama, which was read twice and committed.

WEST POINT ACADEMY.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the motion made by Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island, on yesterday, to reconsider the vote of the House on Monday last, by which the following resolution was laid on the table:

Resolved, That the Select Committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the West Point Academy be authorized, by themselves, or a sub-committee, to visit the Academy, for the purpose mentioned in the resolution under which they were appointed.

Mr. WARD remarked that, inasmuch as a select committee had been appointed by the House, he was willing to accord to them what was their desire. It was their wish that they should have an opportunity of going, either in whole or by a sub-committee, to the institution referred to, for the purpose of procuring information, which they think will be important to the House and to the country. It was within the recollection of gentlemen that this question had been presented to the House for several years in succession, and on one occasion had been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee gave the subject the most deliberate attention, and presented a report to the House, which Mr. W. considered unanswerable. Other gentlemen, however, not being satisfied, brought the subject again before Congress, and a select committee was appointed to inquire not only into the alleged abuses of that institution, but also into the expediency of abolishing it altogether. The committee was raised, and made a report, which never had been printed by the House.

[Mr. W. observed that it was suggested by a gentleman near him that the difficulty might be obviated by moving to have that report printed.]

He repeated that inasmuch as the House had appointed this committee, which was, perhaps, to be regretted, and they had asked of the House the privilege of visiting the institution, he, for one, was entirely willing they should do so, because he was firmly of the opinion that however prejudiced they might have been heretofore, when they went to that institution, and got through with their examination, they would return differently impressed, and report to the House that they were entirely satisfied. It was with this view that he should now record his vote in favor of a reconsideration of the resolution; and when it came up for adoption or rejection, he would also then record his vote in its favor. It was well known that several years past the Executive had annually appointed a board of visitors to examine into the affairs of the West Point Academy, and it would also be recollected that however those visitors may have been prejudiced against the institution when they went there, that, with one single exception, there had not been a report against it.

Mr. W. said it was not his intention then to detain the House with an inquiry into the merits of the institution, but he wished to take that occasion to say, that one of the most distinguished officers of the army had made this declaration to him: "It is my opinion that the Military Academy at West Point is better calculated to keep alive the military spirit of the country than any other institution; and I should rather see the army disbanded, and have it made known to me that I must leave the service of the United States forever, than to see this institution go down, or its usefulness impaired in the slightest degree." But, continued Mr. W. the officers of the army, it is to be apprehended, will entertain the opinion that they were not the favorites of the Congress of the United States, because the tenure of their office had, of late, been rendered uncertain by the numerous efforts to alter the present organization of the army, by cutting off or dismissing a portion of the officers from the service. Besides, after having been led to believe that the bill brought forward during the last session of Congress, proposing to equalize and regulate the pay of the officers of the army and navy of the United States, would have passed in the shape in which it had been originally reported, how were they disappointed! Why, when they came to examine it, after it had become a law, they found it to be a bill to regulate the pay of the officers of the navy only.

The principle of equalizing the pay of the two services is both just and equitable, and its abandonment was a source of deep regret and mortification to the army. Such a bill would have been productive of much good, both to the officers of the two branches of service, and to the public; for their pay being equalized, they would have been better able to co-operate in their official duties, without difficulty, embarrassment, jealousy, or ill feeling. The various grades ought to be assimilated, and thus rendered equal in estimation. Surely it could not be the intention of the Government to reward the services of one arm of the national defence, and to neglect the other; or to exalt the one at the expense of the other; or to declare to the nation that the one was deemed more important, honorable, or its services more meritorious than the other. Such a distinction would be invidious, and he therefore trusted that as justice had been extended to the one, it would not be long withheld from the other; and that at no distant day they would be placed on an equal footing in every respect.

Mr. W. stated he was further impressed that it was time this question in relation to the institution at West Point, should be put at rest; for until it was, they must expect to have the business of the House delayed, as it was on the last night of the last session, in opposing the bill making appropriations for its expenses.

Mr. JARVIS then moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. VANDERPOEL said there seemed to be more attraction at the other end of the house than at this, and he would therefore move a call of the House, which was negatived.

Mr. VANDERPOEL then called for the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which were ordered, and were yeas 86; nays 77.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island, moved a suspension of the rule, for the purpose of submitting a resolution, in substance, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, whether any steps have been taken to recover of the Kingdom of Denmark the value of their prize ships captured by the squadron commanded by the chevalier John Paul Jones, in the year 1778, sent into the port of Bergen, Norway, a part of the Danish dominions, and valued by Dr. Benjamin Franklin at 50,000 pounds sterling; and unlawfully delivered up by the Danish officers to the British authorities; and whether any relinquishment of said claim has ever been made, and, if so, upon what consideration.

The House refused to suspend the rule by a vote of—yeas 67, noes not counted.

EXECUTIVE ADMINISTRATION.

The House then resumed the consideration of the resolution (submitted by Mr. WISE,) reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the "condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, the vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business in all of them, and the causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation," be referred to a select committee, to consist of nine members, with power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to inquire into the condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, into the manner in which the public business has been discharged in all of them, and into all causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which said departments, or their bureaus or offices, or any of their officers or agents of every description whatever, directly or indirectly connected with them in any manner, officially or unofficially, in duties pertaining to the public interest, have fulfilled or failed to accomplish the objects of their creation, or have violated their duties, or have injured and impaired the public service and interest; and that said committee, in its inquiries, may refer to such periods of time as to them may seem expedient and proper.

The question pending, was the following amendment, moved by Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island: Strike out all after the word "resolved," and insert the following:

"That so much of the President's message as is in the following words, to wit: 'Before concluding this paper, I think it is due to the various Executive Departments to bear testimony to their prosperous condition, and to the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted. It has been my aim to enforce in all of them a vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business; and it is gratifying to me to believe that there is no just cause of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation,' be referred to a select committee of nine members, with instructions to inquire into any specific causes of complaint which may be alleged against the integrity of the administration of any of the departments, or their bureaus, or the vigilance and fidelity with which their duties have been discharged, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers."

Mr. LANE, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the House at length, in reply to the remarks of Messrs. PEYTON, UNDERWOOD, and WISE.

As soon as Mr. L. had concluded, Mr. HOWELL obtained the floor, on whose motion,

The House adjourned.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE PATENT OFFICE.

The following gentlemen were appointed a select committee to inquire what loss has been sustained by the destruction of the Patent Office, and what measures are necessary to restore the records, drawings, models, &c.

Mr. HARPER of Pennsylvania,
PARKER of New Jersey,
TAYLOR of New York,
JACKSON of Massachusetts,
RICHARDSON of South Carolina.

IN SENATE,

THURSDAY, Dec. 22, 1836.

The following message was received from the President of the United States, on the subject of Texas, by Mr. JACKSON, his Secretary.

[Given in the proceedings of the House.]

The message having been read,

Mr. BUCHANAN moved that it be printed, and with the documents, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. After the committee should have examined the papers, Mr. B. said that they would make such a report to the Senate as might be necessary.

This motion was adopted, and 1500 extra copies were ordered to be printed.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Messrs. BROWN, RIVES, WALL, LINN, TOMLINSON, WALKER, NICHOLAS, KING of Alabama, KING of Georgia, and RUGGLES.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD,

Ordered, That so much of the President's message as relates to depredations on private property by the hostile Indians, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, without amendment, the bill in addition to the act for the better organization of the Courts of the United States for the district of Alabama.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported, with amendments, the bill to authorize the East Florida Railroad company to construct a railroad through the lands of the United States.

Mr. HENDRICKS gave notice that he would, to-morrow, ask leave to introduce a bill to purchase, on the part of the United States, the private stock in the Louisville and Portland canal.

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported without amendment the bill for the relief of the executrix of Richard W. Meade, deceased.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to which had been referred the petition of sundry hardware merchants on the subject, reported a bill to repeal the provisions in the 10th and 12th clauses of the tariff act of 1832; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the same committee, reported without amendment the bill to allow a drawback on cordage manufactured from imported hemp when exported.

Mr. HENDRICKS, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize certain internal improvements in Florida; which was read twice, and referred.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported without amendment, the bill to authorize Peter Warner of Indiana, to enter a certain half section of land.

Mr. WHITE, from the same committee, to which had been referred the papers of Benjamin Murphy, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. LINN, on leave, introduced a bill to continue in force the act for the final adjustment of private land claims in Missouri; which was read twice, and referred.

Mr. WRIGHT, on leave, introduced a bill in addition to the act to provide more effectually for the settlement of accounts between the United States and receivers of the public moneys; which was read twice, and referred.

Mr. WRIGHT, on leave, also introduced a bill anticipating the indemnity accruing to the citizens of the United States under the convention with France of the 4th July, 1831, and under the convention with the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies of the 4th October, 1832; which was read twice and referred.

Mr. SWIFT, on leave, introduced a bill to provide for the moral and religious instruction of the army, also, a bill to incorporate the Manual Labor School and Male Orphan Asylum Society in the city of Washington; which were severally twice read and referred.

Mr. NICHOLAS, on leave, introduced a bill to provide for the legal adjudication and settlement of claims to land under the grants to Baron Bastrop and the Marquis Maison Rouge, in Louisiana, and under certain grants in Arkansas; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. WALKER submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an additional appropriation for deepening the channel near the mouth of the Pascagoula river, in the State of Mississippi; and also of making an appropriation for a survey of the channel of the Pearl river, in the same State, near the mouth of said river, with a view to a removal of the obstructions in the same.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the District Judge of the United States for the State of Mississippi, and of changing the time of holding the sessions of said court.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for a survey of the harbor of the city of Natchez, with a view to the improvement of said harbor.

Mr. HENDRICKS submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the construction of the Cumberland road in the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the resolution, submitted by Mr. EWING of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order in relation to the payments at the United States land offices.

Mr. WEBSTER continued and concluded his speech, commenced yesterday, in favor of the resolution; after which

Mr. NILES addressed the Senate at some length in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. RIVES, then, after some remarks, offered an amendment to the resolution, which, not being considered in order, before the second reading,

On motion by Mr. HUBBARD, and by general consent, the resolution was read the second time, and

Mr. RIVES submitted the following amendment as a substitute for the resolution, which was ordered to be printed.

Resolved, That hereafter all sums of money accruing or becoming payable to the United States, whether for customs, public lands, taxes, debts, or otherwise, shall be collected and paid only in the legal currency of the United States, or in the notes of banks which are payable and paid on demand in the said legal currency, under the following restrictions and conditions in regard to such notes—that is, from and after the passage of this resolution, the notes of no bank which shall issue bills or notes of a less denomination than five dollars, shall be received in payment of the public dues; from and after the first day of July, 1839, the notes of no bank which shall issue bills or notes of a less denomination than ten dollars, shall be receivable; and from and after the 1st of July, 1841, the like prohibition shall be extended to the notes of all banks issuing bills or notes of a less denomination than twenty dollars; but the public debtors shall have the option of paying either in the said legal currency, or in the notes of banks of the description above mentioned, in good credit; provided, however, that no notes shall be taken in payment by the collectors or receivers, which the banks in which they are to be deposited shall not be willing to pass to the credit of the United States as cash.

The Senate then adjourned over to Monday

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
THURSDAY, December 22, 1836.
CUMBERLAND ROAD.

The first business in order was the resolutions of the State of Illinois, in relation to the locating of the National road in Illinois, so as to cause it to pass through Alton, presented on a former day by Mr. REYNOLDS of that State.

Mr. REYNOLDS addressed the House for some time in advocacy of the route proposed by way of Alton, and concluded by moving their reference to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri inquired of the gentleman from Illinois, if his motion to refer was intended also to embrace instructions to the committee to report a bill in pursuance of the resolutions presented; because, if so, Mr. H. wished to have an opportunity of replying to the gentleman.

Mr. REYNOLDS replied, that his motion did not embrace instructions.

The motion to refer was then agreed to.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Messrs. ADAMS and LAWRENCE of Massachusetts.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island.

Messrs. RUSSELL, WARDWELL, HARD, WARD, and HUNTINGTON, of New York.

Messrs. DENNY and INGERSOLL of Pennsylvania.

TEXAS.

The following message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his Private Secretary, ANDREW JACKSON, JR. Esq.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

During the last session information was given to Congress, by the Executive, that measures had been taken to ascertain "the political, military, and civil condition of Texas." I now submit, for your consideration, extracts from the report of the agent, who had been appointed to collect it, relative to the condition of that country.

No steps have been taken by the Executive towards the acknowledgment of the independence of Texas; and the whole subject would have been left without further remark, on the information now given to Congress, were it not that the two Houses, at their last session, acting separately, passed resolutions "that the independence of Texas ought to be acknowledged by the United States, whenever satisfactory information should be received that it had in successful operation a civil government capable of performing the duties and fulfilling the obligations of an independent power." This mark of interest in the question of the independence of Texas, and indication of the views of Congress, make it proper that I should, somewhat in detail, present the considerations that have governed the Executive in continuing to occupy the ground previously taken in the contest between Mexico and Texas.

The acknowledgment of a new State as independent, and entitled to a place in the family of nations, is at all times an act of great delicacy and responsibility; but more especially so, when such State has forcibly separated itself from another, of which it had formed an integral part, and which still claims dominion over it. A premature recognition, under these circumstances, if not looked upon as justifiable cause of war, is always liable to be regarded as a proof of an unfriendly spirit to one of the contending parties. All questions relative to the government of foreign nations, whether of the old or the new world, have been treated by the United States as questions of fact only, and our predecessors have cautiously abstained from deciding upon them, until the clearest evidence was in their possession, to enable them not only to decide correctly, but to shield their decisions from every unworthy imputation. In all the contests that have arisen out of the revolutions of France, out of the disputes relating to the crowns of Portugal and Spain, out of the revolutionary movements in those kingdoms, out of the separation of the American possessions of both from the European Governments, and out of the numerous and constantly occurring struggles for dominion in Spanish America, so wisely consistent with our just principles has been the action of our Government, that we have, under the most critical circumstances, avoided all censure, and encountered no other evil than that produced by a transient estrangement of good will in these against whom we have been, by force of evidence, compelled to decide.

It has thus been made known to the world that the uniform policy and practice of the United States is, to avoid all interference in disputes, which merely relate to the internal government of other nations, and eventually to recognise the authority of the prevailing party, without reference to our particular interests and views, or to the merits of the original controversy. Public opinion here is so firmly established and well understood in favor of this policy, that no serious disagreement has ever arisen among ourselves in relation to it, although brought under review in a variety of forms, and at periods when the minds of the people were greatly excited by the agitation of topics purely domestic in their character. Nor has any deliberate inquiry ever been instituted in Congress, or in any of our legislative bodies, as to whom belonged the power of originally recognising a new State; a power, the exercise of which is equivalent, under some circumstances, to a declaration of war; a power nowhere expressly delegated, and only granted in the constitution as it is necessarily involved in some of the great powers given to Congress; in that given to the President and Senate to form treaties with foreign powers, and to appoint ambassadors and other public ministers; and in that conferred upon the President to receive ministers from foreign nations.

In the preamble to the resolution of the House of Representatives, it is distinctly intimated, that the expediency of recognising the independence of Texas should be left to the decision of Congress. In this view, on the ground of expediency, I am disposed to concur; and do not, therefore, consider it necessary to express any opinion as to the strict constitutional right of the Executive, either apart from or in conjunction with the Senate, over the subject. It is to be presumed that on no future occasion will a dispute arise, as none has heretofore occurred, between the Executive and Legislature in the exercise of the power of recognition. It will always be considered consistent with the spirit of the constitution, and most safe, that it should be exercised when probably leading to war, with a previous understanding with that body by whom war can alone be declared, and by whom all the provisions for sustaining its perils, must be furnished. Its submission to Congress, which represents in one of its branches the States of this Union, and in the other the people of the United States, where there may be reasonable ground to apprehend so grave a consequence, would certainly afford the fullest satisfaction to our own country, and a perfect guaranty to all other nations, of the justice and prudence of the measures which might be adopted.

In making these suggestions, it is not my purpose to relieve myself from the responsibility of expressing my own opinions of the course the interests of our country prescribe, and its honor permits us to follow.

It is scarcely to be imagined that a question of this character could be presented in relation to which it would be more difficult for the United States to avoid exciting the suspicion and jealousy of other powers, and maintain their established character for fair and impartial dealing; but on this, as on every other trying occasion, safety is to be found in a rigid adherence to principle.

In the contest between Spain and her revolted colonies, we stood aloof, and waited, not only until the ability of the new States to protect themselves was fully established, but until the danger of their being again subjugated had entirely passed away. Then, and not till then, were they recognised. Such was our course in regard to Mexico herself. The same policy was observed in all the disputes growing out of the separation into distinct Governments of those Spanish American States, who began or carried on the contest with the parent country, united under one form of government. We acknowledged the separate independence of New Granada, of Venezuela, and of Ecuador, only after their independent existence was no longer a subject of dispute, or was actually acquiesced in by those with whom they had been previously united. It is true that, with regard to Texas, the civil authority of Mexico has been expelled, its invading army defeated, the Chief of the Republic himself captured, and all present power to control the newly organized Government of Texas annihilated within its confines. But, on the other hand, there is, in appearance at least, an immense disparity of physical force on the side of Mexico. The Mexican Republic, under another Executive, is rallying its forces under a new leader, and menacing a fresh invasion to recover its lost dominion. Upon the issue of this threatened invasion, the independence of Texas may be considered as suspended; and were there nothing peculiar in the relative situation of the United States and Texas, our acknowledgment of its independence at such a crisis could scarcely be regarded as consistent with that prudent reserve with which we have heretofore held ourselves bound to treat all similar questions. But there are circumstances in the relations of the two countries which require us to act, on this occasion, with even more than our wonted caution. Texas was once claimed as a part of our property; and there are those among our citizens who, always reluctant to abandon that claim, cannot but regard with solicitude the prospect of the re-union of the territory to this country. A large proportion of its civilized inhabitants are emigrants from the United States, speak the same language with ourselves, cherish the same principles, political and religious, and are bound to many of our citizens by ties of friendship and kindred blood; and more than all, it is known that the people of that country have instituted the same form of Government with our own, and have, since the close of your last session, openly resolved, on the acknowledgement by us of their independence, to seek for admission into the Union as one of the Federal States. This last circumstance is a matter of peculiar delicacy, and forces upon us considerations of the gravest character. The title of Texas to the territory she claims is identified with her independence. She asks us to acknowledge that title to the territory, with an avowed design to treat immediately of its transfer to the United States. It becomes us to beware of a too early movement, as it might subject us, however unjustly, to the imputation of seeking to establish the claim of our neighbors to a territory, with a view to its subsequent acquisition by ourselves. Prudence, therefore, seems to dictate that we should still stand aloof, and maintain our present attitude, if not until Mexico itself, or one of the great foreign powers, shall recognise the independence of the new Government, at least until the lapse of time or the course of events shall have proved, beyond cavil or dispute, the ability of the people of that country to maintain their separate sovereignty, and to uphold the Government constituted by them. Neither of the contending parties can justly complain of this course. By pursuing it, we are but carrying out the long established policy of our Government—a policy which has secured to us respect and influence abroad, and inspired confidence at home.

Having thus discharged my duty, by presenting, with simplicity and directness, the views which, after much reflection, I have been led to take of this important subject, I have only to add the expression of my confidence, that if Congress shall differ with me upon it, their judgment will be the result of dispassionate, prudent, and wise deliberation; with the assurance that, during the short time I shall continue connected with the Government, I shall promptly and cordially unite with you in such measures as may be deemed best fitted to increase the prosperity and perpetuate the peace of our favored country.

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21, 1836.

The message having been read—

Mr. HOWARD moved that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and be printed.

Mr. BRIGGS, on leave, moved that 10,000 extra copies be printed.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island moved 20,000, which Mr. Briggs accepted as a modification.

The motion to refer was agreed to nem. diss.

and the question recurring on the motion to print the extra copies—

Mr. PICKENS said he hoped that it would be distinctly understood, that a report would soon be had on this important subject. He had no objection to the reference of the subject to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, because he considered that committee as representing the dominant party—the party that now ruled the destinies of the country; and he hoped they would take the responsibility of making a report on this most important subject as soon as convenient.

Mr. WHITTLESEY opposed the printing of so large a number of copies, and went on to show that there was no use in it. He instanced the documents accompanying the President's message at the commencement of the session, of which the House had ordered 15,000 copies, and no more than five or six had, as yet, been laid on the table of each member, while they found the same information in every paper coming from their own districts. Such, he contended, would be the case with the present document. He was willing to print as much as possible for the information of the people, but not to support the printer; and would vote for the printing of 10,000 copies of the message, but no more.

Mr. PEARCE of R. I. said this was one of the most important documents ever presented to the country, whether viewed in a prospective or any other light, and the subject of which the people generally felt a most deep interest. It could not but be known that a great change had taken place throughout the Union on the Texan cause since the last session of Congress, and it would be seen that the surmises of the views of the Chief Magistrate had all turned out to be erroneous. He repelled the idea that the printing of 20,000 copies of this document was with the view of giving the printers a job, for that number would only give some one or two copies to each town.

Mr. HOAR agreed, on general principles, with the gentleman from Ohio, for, not unfrequently, had documents been ordered to be printed by that House which had no other effect than to render the paper on which it was printed less valuable than before. This, however, was not a document of that description, and he bestowed upon it the highest commendation. It was deserving of preservation, and ought to be printed in a form for that purpose. The number was by no means too large, and he would cheerfully have voted for a larger number than 20,000.

Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina had no objection to any number, but he could not help expressing his surprise at the extraordinary coincidence on all sides on the merits of a question involving so many interests, though he should not have been surprised if 100,000 extra copies had been proposed, or even its printing on satin. He hoped the subject would be postponed, and gave notice that, when the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations came in, he should address the House at length.

Mr. CRAIG was in favor of the larger number.

Mr. WHITTLESEY withdrew his opposition to the motion.

Mr. WISE should vote for the largest number, not because he was so decidedly of opinion that the message was what it should be, for he did not pretend to judge of it, as some gentlemen seemed to do, by instinct. This, however, he would say, that, notwithstanding it seemed to profess moderation, prudence, and wisdom, he hesitated not to say, that if, under these pretences, this Government proposed withholding its aid, and assistance, and countenance, from a people struggling for human rights and civil liberty, he was against it to tota coelo.

Mr. HOWARD expressed his concurrence with the gentleman from Massachusetts, who made the motion to print twenty thousand copies of this document. He considered there ought to be a large number printed for distribution among the people of the country. He also concurred in opinion with the gentleman from Virginia, that it was impossible, from hearing the message read, to form an opinion as to its merits. It asserted a principle most important, and required to be acted on with great deliberation; he was therefore in favor of distributing it to the people of the country, so that they might have an opportunity of forming an opinion thereon.

Mr. BOON observed, that circumstances very frequently altered cases. He was astonished to hear the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Whittlesey) object to the printing of this very important document. It would be recollected that a few sessions back, when a proposition was made to print a certain Post Office report, the printing of a solitary number of which would cost more than a thousand copies of this message, that gentlemen did not then object to printing large numbers of the document. Now, when an extra number of this document was wanted, gentlemen said it would be published in the newspapers. Mr. W. said, however, that it must be recollected that a large number of the tax payers of this country were not subscribers to newspapers; therefore it was necessary that extra numbers should be printed for distribution. He only regretted that the gentleman had not moved to print forty thousand.

The question was then taken on the motion to print 20,000 extra copies, which was agreed to.

Petitions and memorials were then further presented by Mr. TURNER of Maryland.

Mr. MORGAN of Virginia.

Mr. HAWKINS of North Carolina.

Messrs. CALHOON, UNDERWOOD, FRENCH, and WILLIAMS of Kentucky.

Mr. HUNTSMAN of Tennessee.

Messrs. BOON and DAVIS of Indiana.

Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi.

Mr. MAY of Illinois.

[Mr. MAY presented the petition of John Dowling, praying that an act may be passed enabling him to receive from the War Department the amount of pay due to Lieutenant Lewis Gale at the time of his death.]

Messrs. LEWIS and LYON, of Alabama.

Mr. HARRISON, of Missouri.

[Mr. HARRISON of Missouri presented the petition of Jonathan Boone, praying a change of entry.]

Also, of Robert Murray, for the same purpose.

Also, of numerous citizens of the State of Missouri, praying for a grant of lands for the purpose of making a road from the seat of Government in Missouri, by Little Rock, to the Mississippi river.]

Mr. WHITE of Florida, and Mr. ADAMS of Massachusetts.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of James L. Kennon; which was read twice and committed.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of William Glover; which was read twice and committed.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of John Fawcett; which was read twice and committed.

On motion of Mr. SEYMOUR,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from the village of Binghampton, in the county of Broome, and State of New York, through Windsor and Sanford, to the village of Deposit, in the county of Delaware, in said State.

On motion of Mr. BOCKER,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making provision, by law, for the satisfaction of military land warrants, issued by the United States in satisfaction of claims for bounty land for services during the revolutionary war.

On motion of Mr. HARD,

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing additional compensation to Joel Bysinger of New York, for the destruction of property in the late war, and for the use of buildings for the American army.

On motion of Mr. TURNER,

Resolved, That the several memorials and petitions now on file in this House, praying for an appropriation to be made for the removal of obstructions in the bay below the port of Havre de Grace, Maryland, near Specucie island, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CAMBRELENG asked the consent of the House to take up the "Mint Bill." He hoped the request would be assented to, for it was highly important that the bill should be passed by the first of the year, inasmuch as it was proposed to take effect from and after the first day of January next, and this was the last day of the present week on which it could be acted on.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina objecting,

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved a suspension of the rule for the purpose, which motion prevailed by a vote of 89 to 37.

On motion of the same gentleman, the House then went into Committee of the whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MUELLERBERG in the chair, and took up the bill, the title of which is as follows: "An act establishing a mint, and regulating the coins of the United States."

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved the substitute heretofore reported, which was the same in substance as the bill reported last year, with a few verbal alterations.

The bill, as amended, having been read, and some further verbal amendments agreed to, on motion Mr. CAMBRELENG, after some explanatory remarks from that gentleman in relation to the copper coin—

Mr. ADAMS remarked, that this was a bill of too much importance to be hurried through. Moreover he had had no opportunity of giving it a private examination, and to the best of his belief it had not been laid on the tables of the members. He also adverted to the change introduced by depreciating the copper coin.

Mr. CAMBRELENG explained that the bill was before the House last session, and the amended bill had been laid on the tables of members ten days since. Mr. C. also explained the matter about copper coin, by showing that the loss was very immaterial, and that upon silver none at all, only that its weight would be diminished by lessening the alloy.

Mr. ADAMS could not consent to move a step on this bill without having had an opportunity of examining it, and he should therefore move that the committee rise; lost—ayes 65, noes 65; the Chair voting in the negative, the noes were 66.

Mr. JARVIS stated that there would be no change whatever in the value of the dollar, because there was to be the same amount of pure silver in the new dollar which was contained in the old dollar.

Mr. INGERSOLL considered the reduction of the weight of the copper coin very small, only 14½ per cent.; an alteration scarcely adapted to the augmented price of copper. The gentleman from Massachusetts was entirely right as to the original weight of the copper coin; but, in consequence of the augmented price of copper, changes had been made from time to time, which alterations he considered very immaterial, unless this coin was to be made a legal tender. In relation to the silver coin, there was no alteration at all, the amount of pure silver being the same in the proposed dollar as in the old dollar. He also stated that the standard of value would not be fractional, as heretofore, which, if not an improvement, was at least a simplification. The bill also provided for the better security of the public property, by requiring the officers to give greater security than heretofore; and provided for a general director of the institution, whose business it should be to supervise the whole operations of this important institution. The bill also provided greater facility in returning coin for bullion to individuals who deposited bullion for coinage. Mr. I. then moved to strike out the provision that copper coins should be a legal tender, according to their nominal value; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS then moved to strike out the section which related to the copper coins, so as to leave them at their present standard; and made some remarks in support of the motion, and in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He believed that the mint might now go on in coining copper, and at the same time be making a very considerable profit. He saw no necessity for this reduction, and hoped it would not be made.

Mr. McKIM stated that he was largely engaged in the copper business, and knew the value of it. He considered the reduction necessary to prevent the copper coin from being melted up.

Mr. INGERSOLL suggested that it would be better to alter the standard contained in the bill than to strike out the section altogether.

Mr. HARPER then moved to strike out 140, and insert 168 grains.

After some further remarks by Mr. GILLET, the motion of Mr. HARPER was disagreed to.

On motion of Mr. BRIGGS, the committee then rose and reported progress; and, on motion of the same gentleman,

The House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

FRIDAY, December 23, 1836.

CUMBERLAND ROAD.

Mr. ASHLEY asked leave of the House to make a few remarks in relation to himself personally.

Objection being made;

Mr. A. would barely remark that it was only with reference to his absence from the House yesterday when a matter of great importance to his State and constituents was before the House. He alluded to the resolutions presented by a gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Reynolds) from the Legislature of that State, on the location of the National road in Missouri and Illinois. He wished to make known that when that subject came properly before the House, he should be prepared to show the absurdity of the plan proposed in the resolutions. Inasmuch as objections had been made to his addressing the House, he should content himself with avowing his intention of meeting those resolutions, or any thing else on that subject, whenever they came up to receive the action of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY asked the consent of the House to make a motion that when the House adjourn this day, it adjourn over to Tuesday next; but it was objected to, and Mr. A. did not press the motion.

Petitions and memorials were then presented by Mr. WHITTLESEY of Connecticut.

Messrs. RUSSELL and GILLET of New York.

[Mr. RUSSELL presented the petition of Stephen Freeman, the committee of the estate and person of Elijah Freeman, a lunatic pensioner on the roll of revolutionary pensioners of the New York Agency, praying payment for arrears of pension, from the 4th March, 1820, hitherto; which, on motion of Mr. R. was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

Mr. BEAUMONT of Pennsylvania.

[On motion of Mr. HORTON of Va. the petition of the heirs of Col. Wm. Edmondson, and David Edmondson, now on the files of the House, was referred to a select committee.]

Mr. W. B. SHEPARD of North Carolina.

Mr. LUKELEA of Tennessee.

Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois.

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri.

[Mr. HARRISON of Missouri moved that the petition of the heirs of Daniel Boon, which was referred during last session to a select committee, be referred to the select committee to which was referred the petition of the heirs of Col. Wm. Edmondson, which was done.]

[Mr. LAWRENCE of Massachusetts presented the memorial of the Boston Marine Society, for an appropriation for the erection of a light-house on Nauset beach, Cape Cod; also, the memorial of the same society, for an appropriation for the erection of buoys and spindles in Boston harbor.]

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill granting a pension to Olive Grover; read twice and committed.

Mr. COLES, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill to carry into effect the resolution of Congress for erecting a monument to the memory of General Wooster; read twice and committed.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of James H. Ryan; read twice and committed.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of H. Taylor; read twice and committed.

Mr. STORER, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of William York; read twice and committed.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported the following bills:

1. A bill for the relief of Abraham Woodhull;
2. A bill for the relief of James A. Williams;
3. A bill for the relief of John Hollingswood;
4. A bill for the relief of William J. Phelps;
5. A bill for the relief of William Walker; all which bills were severally read twice and committed.

[Mr. FAR, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Christian Mattia.]

NORTHWESTERN INDIANS.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the motion made on a former day by Mr. BELL, to reconsider the vote of the House rejecting the following resolution, submitted by Mr. JONES of Wisconsin, on the 20th instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of appropriating money for holding treaties with, and the purchase of the lands belonging to, the Sacs, Fox, Sioux, and Winnebago Indians, in Wisconsin Territory, and to provide for their removal west of the Mississippi river.

Mr. BELL remarked that he had since ascertained that it would be expedient to hold treaties with some of the Indians referred to; and, as it was a mere question of inquiry into the expediency of making the proposed appropriation, he had made the motion to reconsider, and hoped it would be concurred in by the House.

The motion of Mr. BELL was agreed to, and the question recurring on the adoption of the resolution—

Mr. GARLAND of La. observed that if it was to be the policy of the Government to go on concentrating the numerous tribes of Indians now within the limits of all the States, on the borders of Louisiana and Arkansas, he must enter his protest against it. He hoped the House would now give an expression of its opinion on this subject, and not carry out this policy any further.

Mr. BELL thought it would be the best policy of the Government to remove many of the tribes of Indians west of the Mississippi; but as to what point was a question yet to be considered. He hoped, however, that the gentleman from Louisiana would waive his objection to this resolution, as it was one merely directing an inquiry to be made.

Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana replied, that it was impossible to determine what course would be pursued by the Committee on Indian Affairs. If it was so that the policy of the Government was not to be changed in relation to the removal of the Indian tribes west of the Mississippi, he was not disposed to have a report of the Committee on Indian Affairs in its favor, because there was no gentleman in that House who did not know the difficulty of resisting the report of a committee. He hoped gentlemen would meet this question at the threshold, and not permit the numerous Indian tribes to be located on the borders of one or two of the southwestern States.

Mr. ASHLEY said, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and a representative from a State as deeply interested as any other, he wished to say a few words. He said there was a large number of the Indian tribes already on the west of the Mississippi, and, upon reflection, he considered it better that they were there than not; because the Government could better protect them and keep them in subjection when they were in one body, than when they were divided up among the States. Besides this, when they were in one neighborhood they were as one family, and were not subject to the same dissensions which pervaded the tribes when settled apart. He would also much prefer, in time of war, to have them all in one body, and strike against the whole, than have to hunt them up when scattered over the different States. He concluded, by expressing the hope that the subject might go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and there be disposed of.

Mr. GARLAND of Virginia hoped that the question, as to the policy of removing the Indians, would not now be discussed, on a mere question to refer a subject to the Committee on Indian Affairs. This policy had been pursued for twenty years, and now the gentleman from Louisiana asked the House to go into the whole subject again, upon a mere resolution of reference. He considered the policy entirely proper, and alluded to recent difficulties in Alabama and Florida, as an evidence of its expediency. He said, that since the Government had adopted this policy, we never had any difficulty with the Indians on our western frontier, and pointed to the difficulties which the Government had frequently had with the Indian tribes within the borders of the States. He concurred entirely with the gentleman from Missouri, (Mr. Ashley,) that it was more safe to concentrate the Indians at one point; that gentleman's argument was conclusive and irrefutable, that the Government of the United States could more easily suppress any hostile intention, and repel any sudden measures of the Indians. He hoped the committee would be permitted to make the proposed inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri was not opposed to the resolution on general grounds, and referred to a letter in the Missouri Republican, received by him this morning, stating that treaties with the Sacs and Foxes had been already concluded; and, if this information were correct, the resolution under consideration was perhaps not altogether necessary. He, however, should not oppose it.

Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana had no desire to provoke a discussion at that time, nor was he opposed to carrying any stipulations of every treaty already made with Indian tribes into effect; but he was hostile to the further continuance of the policy of the Government in reference to making new treaties.

Mr. GARLAND of Virginia repeated his opinion, before expressed, that it was safer, both for the white population and the Indians also, that the latter should be concentrated together than sparsely scattered about over a large extent of country. He deemed the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. Ashley) of great weight.

Mr. DAVIS was decidedly of opinion that this resolution ought to be adopted, and the proposed inquiry given in charge of the Committee on Indian Affairs. He adverted to the unfortunate example there existed at this time in the State from whence he came, (Indiana,) of Indians living in the very heart of white settlements. There was, at this moment, a tribe of the Miamis occupying a reservation of thirty miles square, exercising all the control and power of an independent and sovereign nation, surrounded on every side by a large population of whites. In this view of the subject alone, if in no other, it presented itself as a question deserving of deep and immediate inquiry.

In a moral point of view it was not less important. He knew from his own experience, that wherever these locations existed, the Indians were notoriously in the habit of imbibing all the bad passions, propensities, and practices of the whites, without acquiring any of their good qualities.

There was another reason, arising out of motives of economy, rendering the inquiry proposed expedient at this time. The Indians, after the whites had become long settled among them, began to entertain an extravagant notion of the value of their lands; and the Indians at this time, in Indiana, were holding up their reservation at from one to ten dollars an acre; and thousands upon thousands had been already expended by the General Government in fruitless efforts to make treaties with them.

Mr. D. then adverted to the immense tide of emigration now rolling on towards the Wisconsin Territory, and the inconveniences and evils that would hereafter ensue from the commingling of the whites and the reds. He agreed with the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Garland) that it would be much more easy to protect the Indians, and our own frontier too, when they were concentrated and confined within a definite line, even of some two or three hundred miles in extent, than when they were, as now, scattered over thousands of miles. If all the Indians were removed west of the Mississippi, the law had provided them ample protection; and in every point of view, whether from motives of expediency, morality, economy to the Government, and the welfare of all parties, measures ought to be adopted with the least possible delay for purchasing all the Indian reservations in the different States.

Mr. PARKER inquired if gentlemen believed that legislation was necessary, because of the tardiness of the President to execute the laws enacted for making treaties with the Indian tribes? If legislation was necessary to spur the President on in this matter, he was very much mistaken in his character.

Mr. DAVIS explained, that the President did not want legislation to spur him on, but he wanted the means of removing those Indians; an appropriation was necessary before the President could do any thing.

Mr. PARKER observed that there was money appropriated for holding treaties with those Indians; and it looked to him like an instruction to the President to be forcing this measure. Besides this, the Indians had set a price on their lands, and if this resolution was passed, it would lead them to believe that the Government was anxious to get their lands, consequently they would raise the price. He hoped the subject would be left as it was.

The resolution was then agreed to—ayes 99, noes not counted.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE.

The following resolution, submitted on a former day by Mr. CHAPIN, was taken up, considered, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if he shall deem it consistent with the public interests, to communicate to this House all information he may have obtained in relation to the bequest of James Smithson, late of London, deceased, to found an institution at Washington for the diffusion of knowledge among men, since the appointment of an agent under the act of Congress of the last session.

NAVAL OFFICERS.

The following resolution, submitted on a former day by Mr. JARVIS, was taken up, considered, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish this House with the names of the officers of the navy, who, have, during the year 1836, received orders for service, and who have asked to be excused, together with the reasons offered by them for such indulgence.

TARIFF.

The next resolution in order was the one submitted by Mr. FRY on the 20th instant, as amended by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be instructed to inquire into the expediency of immediately abolishing the duty on foreign grain and bread stuffs of all kinds.

The question pending was the amendment of Mr. ADAMS to embrace a repeal of the duties on "foreign coals, salt, and iron."

Mr. FRY addressed the House as follows:

Mr. Speaker: When I had the honor, a few days ago, to submit a resolution to inquire into the expediency of immediately abolishing the duty upon foreign breadstuffs, I did it under no other apprehensions than that the wants of the community, arising out of the present scarcity of breadstuffs, earnestly called for a measure of the kind. Such were my convictions of the propriety of the inquiry, that at the time I was not very anxious as to what committee the subject should be referred; yet it did seem to me, upon reflection, that giving the subject into the hands of the Committee on Agriculture was like giving a cause for trial into the hands of one of the parties interested in its decision.

As adopting a principle, I should say that when the wants of the community, (which in some places at this time amount very nearly to distress,) become the subject of legislation. All questions of interest, of policy, or of compromise, should be made to fall before it. The interests of the country, or the policy of the country, in relation to matters and things in general, are in the ordinary course of things, the proper subjects for legislative action. But when cases of actual want and suffering among a portion of the country present themselves, I feel it my duty, as one of the Representatives of the people, to consider those wants, and, if possible, to supply them, even at the risk of interest or policy. I did thus far not anticipate the opposition to the reference of the resolution which it met; but as the House seen proper to give a preference to the Committee on Agriculture, because in the opinion of gentlemen the resolution was calculated materially to affect the agricultural interest, I hope the House, with equal candor, will reject the amendments proposed, and let the subject go to its appropriate committee free and apart, and unincumbered with any other matters not strictly within the province of the duties of that committee.

Sir, when a member offers a proposition, the result of deep-felt conviction that the wants of the country, or a very large portion of the country, call for it; or when a member in his place offers a resolution instructing the Committee of Ways and Means to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the duty on bread stuffs, and it pleaded that the Committee on Agriculture is the only proper tribunal for the investigation of that subject, and the House show a disposition to concur in that opinion, and gentlemen afterwards propose amendments by taking into the account subjects entirely unconnected with the duties of that committee, what does it intimate: what are we to infer? To me it appears as intended to defeat the proposition and prevent its being referred at all.

I am therefore opposed to the amendment, because I believe it intended ultimately to smother and defeat the inquiry, and any action from being had upon the subject; and, sir, is not the subject one that calls for the action of this House? does not every gentleman upon this floor know well that there is a state of want, if not general, at many places, which must soon amount to actual suffering. Has not the price of bread stuffs doubled itself within no long period, while the price of labor, or the means of the consumer to obtain his bread, have advanced in nothing like the same ratio? I know this to be the case in some large districts of a populous and industrious part of the country. I know the prices of grain are enormously high—in some instances, because the farmers have none to sell; and in some instances, because they are keeping it for a still higher price; while the honest but poor laborer and mechanic, with their families, who have it not, and whose means of obtaining it have not increased in a ratio any way proportioned to the increase in the price of bread stuffs, are left to suffer the consequences. If this were the case in but a single district, ought we not to inquire, and inquire speedily, if there be no relief, or some mitigation for those who unfortunately become the victims of such a state of things? There is in that part of the country which I represent—and it is a part of the country which, for industry and economy, is not exceeded by any in this Union—there is almost a general want, an absolute scarcity, of bread stuffs, which bears exceedingly hard upon the poorer class of our people. Farmers who heretofore have annually sold considerable quantities of grain, have this year, in consequence of the great and almost entire failure of the crops, scarcely sufficient for their own use; yet, perhaps, in a majority of cases, they have sufficient for their own immediate consumption. But, then, a very large, interesting, and useful portion of our people, our laborers and mechanics, upon whose, and from whose, labor all the real wealth of the country is derived, and upon whom, and to whom, we have to look as the defenders of the country in time of peril or invasion. This class of our population are without this necessary of life; and from the circumstance that the prices of labor are not proportioned to that of bread stuffs, they are not only without it, but without the means of obtaining it.

No man in this House, nor no man in this country, without actual experience, knows what it is to be poor. (There are people, who, by extravagance and prodigality in their habits of life, even with a liberal income, are poor; I do not mean them.) I mean those who have large families to maintain, frequently overtaken by sickness, either from the want of the necessities of life, or other causes; who have high rents to pay, high prices for fuel, food, and clothing, and for the support of which the poor man is entirely dependent upon his labor. Such are poor people; and I say, I repeat, no man in this House or in this country, who has been raised and brought up in easy or affluent circumstances, can form the remotest idea of the actual condition and frequent (though often silent) suffering of this valuable portion of our community. Valuable, I say, because it is their labor which produces and constitutes the wealth of the country. It is their labor which sustains and supports your Government; your tariff systems, your banks, and your thousand other corporate and chartered privileged orders that monopolize, feed and fatten upon the sweat and toil of this great artery in the body politic.

Sir, I have passed the abyss. But I do know from sad and impressive experience, what it is to be poor; and I can sympathize and feel, and I do feel, for the sufferings and privations of those who are thus situated; and I would sacrifice almost any interest, any policy, and any compromise, to administer as far as in my power to the wants of that unfortunate class of my countrymen.

And what excuse, what justification, can a member of this House plead, in refusing to contribute his mite to alleviate the condition of these people as much as in his power? Why endeavor to defeat the inquiry? what can be the object of enlarging the duties of the Committee on Agriculture, by giving them jurisdiction over the whole tariff system, as proposed by the amendments? none other than to smother the inquiry. Rather may the people of the country, upon whom the present high price of breadstuffs bears insufferably hard, be left in their present situation, deplorable as it is, than we will consent to take down the present duties; for fear, if once commenced, the injury might extend itself into the whole system of indirect taxation that now is, and has been, since its commencement, grinding the honest, industrious laborer and mechanic down to a level with the slave, upon the mere pretence of collecting money for the support of the Government, when the Government does not need it.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his late report to this House, by a calculation and estimate upon the future revenue of the country, the force of which, I confess, has not struck me with the utmost severity, predicts that, ere long, the revenue will not be sufficient for the expenses of the Government, and this may be one reason why members are opposed to any modification of the present tariff. But if the inquiry is proposed to extend no further than breadstuffs, as contemplated by this resolution, which have never yet produced any revenue, and which is the most essential necessary of life, the system cannot be affected, nor the revenue impaired, while the wants of the country may be greatly relieved. Again, sir, when such a state of things arrives, as that the revenue of the country will not support the Government, it will be good time to inquire whether the expenses of the Government conform to an amount necessary to the permanency and well-being of a plain republican Government. Sir, according to any calculation that I have ever made upon the subject, I think the expenses of the Government (not on account of their amount, but on account of preserving that ancient republican simplicity which has hitherto characterized it) are far, very far, beyond what they ought to be, and, perhaps, double what they would be, if the people supported the Government by direct taxation. I do not wish to be understood as favoring a plan of direct taxation. I use the words merely to show, or rather to convey the idea or opinion of the difference, which a different mode of collecting revenue might make to the tax payer.

But, sir, if there be more expenses incurred than should be, is there no remedy? Certainly. But where? It is beyond the reach or control of Executive vigilance, and cannot be chargeable to the Executive account. But, sir, the remedy is here, in this House; and here, only. Here it is that offices are created. Here it is that salaries are created, and allowed, and extended, from time to time, until they became exorbitant; just as if we had to legislate exclusively for the benefit of the officers of the Government, without any regard to the situation or condition of those whom we more immediately represent; here it is, that all moneys are appropriated; and here it is in this House alone, that a remedy is to be found; and if the people will avail themselves of it, it is in their power. The people, in selecting their representatives in their national and State councils, should send more farmers, and fewer professional men; more mechanics, and fewer overgrown capitalists. I make the suggestion with perfect deference to the feelings of every gentleman present. But gentlemen will agree with me, that the different classes of the community are never represented according to their respective federal numbers, and which in a Government where we know of no distinctions, there are entitled to be.

But many people entertain an idea that, unless a man can make a speech, he is not qualified for a seat in their councils. Let me say to them, that I have not a doubt upon my mind that many of as good and industrious men, and no doubt as able as any in this House, do not pretend to make speeches; they will not waste time. A wholesome discussion is not to be condemned, but I would draw a material distinction between discussion and making speeches. But enough of this.

When I offered the resolution, under consideration gentlemen very earnestly, and I doubt not very honestly, asked me why are you not a farmer, and do not you represent an agricultural district and interest? Certainly I am, and if I represent any interest at all, it is the agricultural interest. But will any gentleman demonstrate to me that the farmer has any interest at stake in the existing tariff of duties upon foreign imports? Why gentlemen tell me there is a duty of about twenty-five cents on a bushel of wheat? Well, suppose there is: the foreign wheat, upon an average, is not worth by twenty-five cents as much as our own. I show this in a measure, from a paper handed me by a gentleman. This shows that during the three quarters of the present year the amount imported at New York was 164,000 bushels, valued at $137,000 dollars, making about eighty-four cents a bushel: could our wheat have been purchased at the same price during the same period? No. Again, the importation of wheat, or of any grain, is a mere nominal thing, unless a time, like the present, of great scarcity, there is none imported, and to show that, I will mention that for the year 1835, the importation at New York, (and which constitutes the great part of the importation) was 2,718 bushels, producing an item of 659 dollars in the revenue derived from imposts, amounting in the whole to about twenty millions. Then, sir, how is the object of the resolution to affect the farming interest? The tariff system is of no earthly advantage to the farmer, because foreign grain cannot by the existing tariff be brought into competition with his; and if we only import at times of extreme scarcity, when farmers have little or none to sell, it constitutes an unnecessary tax upon the consumer, without any adequate benefit to the farming interest. Sir, the farming interest is not protected; the small duty upon his wheat was in the beginning a mere cheat, to gull him into the support of the whole system—a perfect humbug; so far as the interests of the farmer can compare to the other protected interests; and if you had as many practical farmers here as you ought to have, they would tell you so. But in another view, if the existing duty upon foreign wheat were an advantage to the farmer, I should still press this inquiry. The farmer at this time, who has the article of breadstuffs to sell, realizes at least double the usual or ordinary prices for his goods—could he not better take twenty-five cents less than double price for his grain, than the poor consumer can pay such high prices as at present? Surely he could, and would still get an extraordinary price for his grain, while the consumer would be very much relieved.

Sir, gentlemen say I go against the farming interest. This word interest seems to be the germ from which sprang, in a measure, this whole system of protection. Sir, to elucidate my opinion, I fancy to myself that a number of gentlemen meet here; the one wishes to embark in the manufacturing of cottons, another of woollens, another of iron, another has a bed of stone coal, &c. and they enter into an agreement that for their mutual benefit, and to make those interests permanent and valuable, they must be protected from competition. As among the parties concerned there may be nothing wrong, for the advance paid by the one upon the interest of the other, is repaid by his having the same bounty accruing upon his interest. But these gentlemen constitute but a very small portion of the community, and the great mass of the people, the laborers and mechanics, have no interests to protect, and consequently all the profits arising out of those different protected interests, are paid by the mass of the community. The whole system is upheld and supported by those industrious poor, who have no interest to protect. But some will say, if the wealthy portion of the community prosper, the poor man will prosper too. The argument will not hold good: look around at your manufacturer of cottons or woollens, your manufacturer of iron, your coal merchants, and in nineteen out of twenty cases, you will find they have realized fortunes, while the poor operatives have, nineteen in twenty cases, not increased a dollar, yet these fortunes are the result of their labors. Other gentlemen say a repeal of the duty could not avail the community any thing, because before an act could be brought into operation, another and a more fruitful harvest may supply the present scarcity.

Sir, I am informed, and I rely upon the information, that large quantities of bread stuffs are hoarded up, and stored away, in the store-houses of heartless and soulless speculators in some of the large cities, who are holding back to the last extremity, in order that they may extort from the poor and the needy to the utmost farthing. Sir, repeal the duty upon foreign breadstuffs, and you will compel them to sell.

That such a state of things exist especially among the poorer classes of people as I have mentioned, there can be no doubt; and that the repeal of the duty upon their breadstuffs would relieve them, to some extent, I have no doubt. I think I may safely calculate that if the present duty was taken down, the reduction in the barrel of flour would be one dollar and fifty cents, which would be material to consumers. The President has very properly and very feelingly referred to the subject in his message; and I feel very anxious that the House should act upon the matter.

With regard to the subject of a repeal or modification of the duty upon coal, another necessary of life, second only to breadstuffs, upon the preliminary vote taken a few days ago, referring the subject to a committee, I differed with my colleagues (I believe with a single exception) for whose opinions and experience in matters of legislation, I entertain the highest respect, because I believed the Committee on Manufactures were in a measure pledged to report against any modification. Now I will only add, at this time, if the Committee of Ways and Means report a bill making such a reduction, as will in some measure relieve the situation of the consumers, without embarrassing the mining business, as compared with the manufacturing and other interests, I will vote for it; otherwise not.

I wish, upon the whole, to legislate for the common benefit and general welfare of the community at large, and not exclusively for individual interests. Gentlemen may compromise themselves rights and advantages over the mass of the community which they have no right to do. I hold the people of this country equally free, and all

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

BY BLAIR & RIVES.

—WEEKLY—

PRICE $1 PER SESSION.

24TH CONG.....2D SESS.

MONDAY, JANUARY 2, 1837.

VOLUME 4.....No. 4.

equally entitled to the benefits of our legislation. I heard a gentleman, who is engaged in mining business, a few days ago, say that he had sent an agent to Europe to obtain one thousand workmen, and send them here; and that he should soon despatch another agent, authorized to employ another thousand men. These gentlemen miners and others, parties to the benefits of the tariff system, are opposed to any reduction of the duties upon their respective interests, while they are importing the refuse, perhaps, of European laborers by the one thousand men, to the great detriment of the laboring classes here, free of duty. Sir, I am prepared to revise the system, to bring the revenue down as far as practicable; such a course I think necessary, as well to avoid accruing surpluses in the Treasury as to make the benefits of legislation equal to all.

These names of "home industry" and "Pennsylvania interests" are too often but "tinkling cymbals." I feel as much a Pennsylvanian as any other man. But I cannot consent to make the interests of Pennsylvania capitalists, alone, the interests of the State. Sir, the people of Pennsylvania were, at the last session of the Legislature, saddled with a "United States Bank," (against the existence of which they had repeatedly decided,) under the garb of Pennsylvania interests; and whatever can or may be done to advance the general interest and welfare, as well of Pennsylvania as any other State, shall, so long as I have a seat here, be my constant aim. I am done. I hope the House will let the inquiry go to the committee free of amendment, and let them report. If they deem best, let it be but temporary; let the duty be taken off for a limited time; any thing that will in some measure relieve the present exigency; and if they think differently, and can satisfy the country that the duty upon breadstuffs ought not be repealed, I shall be satisfied, conscious that I have done my duty.

As soon as Mr. FRY had concluded, Mr. WHITTLESEY called for the orders of the day.

Mr. OWENS made an ineffectual attempt to submit a resolution.

Mr. MANN of N. Y. moved a suspension of the rules for the purpose of submitting a motion that when the House adjourn to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio asked for the yeas and nays, but the House refused to order them, and the rules were suspended by a vote of 117 to 45.

Mr. MANN then made his motion, and

Mr. ANTHONY moved to amend it, by inserting "Tuesday," but it was rejected by a vote of 20 to 122.

The motion of Mr. MANN was agreed to—ayes 96, noes 95.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the balances existing and due to that bureau for more than three years, prior to September, 1835; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Also, a communication from the Commissioner of the Public Buildings, transmitting a report of the manner in which the appropriations of the last year for public buildings and grounds have been applied, which took the same direction as the foregoing.

The House then passed to the

PRIVATE ORDERS.

The bill for the relief of Norman Holt was read a third time, and passed.

The bill for the relief of Robert Allison, a lieutenant in the revolutionary army, and the bill for the relief of the representatives of Col. Anthony White, were postponed to Friday next.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. McKENNAN in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the following bills:

1. A bill for the relief of the representatives of Tristram Coffin; which was considered, amended, and laid aside.

2. A bill for the relief of the representatives of Capt. John Winston, on which the committee came to no resolution.

The committee then rose and reported, and the House concurred in the amendment to the first bill, viz: to strike out the enacting clause of the first section, which is tantamount to a rejection of the bill.

On motion,

The House then adjourned over till Monday.

IN SENATE,

MONDAY, Dec. 26, 1836.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the Treasury Department, containing certain statements of the deposit banks, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 21st instant, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed:

Also a letter from the War Department, enclosing the annual report from the Commissioner of Pensions, made in pursuance of the act of May, 1830. Referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

Also, the annual report of the Commissioner of the Public Buildings, containing a statement of expenditures under the appropriations of the last year: laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LINN presented a petition, signed by several half-breeds of the Sac and Fox tribes of Indians, praying that the lands reserved for them by treaty, may be annexed to the State of Missouri, and that the sale of lots in the towns of Madison and Burlington be suspended for the present, as they believe them to be situated on their reservations: referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. LINN also presented the memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, for a port of entry at the town of Independence, in that State, and for a drawback of duties on goods re-exported to Mexico. Also, for the establishment of a land office at the town of Liberty, in Missouri: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of the heirs of James Russ, which was referred to the Committee on Claims; also, the memorial of sundry inhabitants of the northern part of the State of New York, praying for an appropriation for the erection of a breakwater on Lake Champlain: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McKEAN presented the petition of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, praying for an appropriation for the erection of a custom-house at that city: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GRUNDY presented the memorial of Com. James Barron, of the United States Navy, praying to be compensated for his invention of a new system of signals for the navy: referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ROBINSON presented the petitions of Thomas Trumbull and Michael Thornton, praying for the correction of erroneous entries of certain lands: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of sundry citizens of the city of Philadelphia, praying for an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the building of a new custom-house at that city: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUCHANAN also presented a memorial from sundry citizens of the same city, praying that the rates of postage may be reduced by law: referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion of Mr. KING of Georgia, the memorial of the Legislature of Georgia, praying for the adjustment of certain accounts, on the files of the last session, was again referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WALL presented the petition of Mari Scudder, Martha A. Lloyd, and Elizabeth Johnston, the children and heirs of Colonel Philip Johnston, for compensation for his Revolutionary services.

Mr. W. remarked: On presenting this petition, I feel that I should not discharge the duty which I have undertaken for the respectable petitioners, nor do justice to the State which I have the honor, in part, to represent, if I did not avail myself of the occasion to make known to you the merits and services of one of her most gallant and patriotic sons. Colonel Philip Johnston, the father of the petitioners, was among the first of her sons which the devoted patriotism of New Jersey offered on the altar of American independence. Never, sir, was there a more pure and noble sacrifice made on that altar.

At the declaration of independence, Philip Johnston was a lieutenant colonel in the New Jersey militia; he had been appointed to that rank by an ordinance of the Provincial Congress of New Jersey, on the 14th of June, 1776, providing for raising by voluntary enlistment 3,300 militia, to reinforce the army at New York. This ordinance was passed in pursuance of the resolution of the Continental Congress of the 3d of the same month. On the 1st of August following, he was promoted to the colonelcy of his regiment in the brigade under General Heard, destined to form part of the flying camp, then assembling, for the defence of New York. It was then well known that the enemy, with a powerful fleet and a well disciplined and appointed army, was menacing New York. This was, indeed, "the time that tried men's souls." The timid sought safety in retirement, and the wavering were dismayed.

At this moment, the earnest and soul-stirring appeals of the Father of his Country to the patriotism and bravery of Americans, roused the patriotic spirit of the sons of New Jersey;

"And from the sods of grove and glen

Rose ranks of lion-hearted men,

To battle to the death."

The reputation of Colonel Johnston for patriotism, bravery, and talents, enabled him speedily to enlist his regiment, and at its head he marched to defend his "bleeding and insulted country." He was then in the vigor of manhood, in the possession of a moderate competency, and the prospects of the future bright before him. These, and all the endearments of the domestic circle, a young and beloved wife, and three daughters of tender years, he left at the call of his country.

The morning of the 27th of August, 1776, found Colonel Johnston at the head of his gallant regiment, on the battle ground of Long Island, resolved, in the language of his illustrious commander-in-chief, "to conquer or to die." He fought near the side, and under the eye, of his immediate commander, General Sullivan. It was a post of danger as well as of honor, and demanded both courage and conduct. Never did any officer more gallantly fulfil the expectations of his country, or more gloriously earn a title to the blessings and praises of his countrymen. He fell at the head of his regiment by a wound in his breast, while bravely struggling to turn the fortunes of that disastrous day. He died for his country, and under its banner, fighting for the general defence, and to secure the blessings of freedom for his whole country.

Yes, sir, he died in the cause and service of America, for the liberty and rights of all, and left to his countrymen an estimable legacy: the example of his pure patriotism—his devoted courage—his chivalrous gallantry, and his glorious death. Who can calculate the extent, the influence, and the value of that example upon the fortunes of our country, at that gloomy and trying period, when even "Hope was sinking in dismay?" Well, sir, may New Jersey glory in the example of such a son. It marshalled the way to those "heroic deeds" which have immortalized our revolutionary sires.

"Tis to the virtues of such men man owes
His portion in the good that Heaven bestows;
And when recording History displays
Feats of renown, though wrought in ancient days,
Tells of a few stout hearts who fought and died
Where duty placed them, by their country's side;
The man that is not moved by what he reads,
That takes not fire at their heroic deeds,
Unworthy of the blessings of the brave,
Is base in kind, and born to be a slave."

Sir, no monument has been erected, by the gratitude of his country, to the memory of Colonel Johnston—no recorded honors thicken around his tomb—no history displays his "feats of renown," for unfortunately for his memory, the revolutionary history of New Jersey is yet to be written. His fame rests in the memory of his few surviving gallant companions in arms, or happily may be faintly recorded among the memorials of frail and decaying memory in the pension office. One memorial of the "heroic deeds" of Colonel Johnston, gathered from the only whig newspaper of the day, that circulated in New Jersey, blotted with the tears of his widowed wife and fatherless daughters, has been treasured up by their affection, and is annexed to their petition. With your permission Mr. President, I will read it: "We hear that in the late action on Long Island, Colonel Philip Johnston of New Jersey, behaved with remarkable intrepidity and fortitude. By the well directed fire from his battalion, the enemy was several times repulsed, and lanes were made through them, until he received a ball in his breast, which put an end to the life of as brave an officer as ever commanded a battalion. Gen. Sullivan, who was close to him when he fell, says that no man could behave with more firmness during the whole action. As he sacrificed his life in defence of the invaded rights of his country, his memory must be dear to every American who is not insensible to the sufferings of his injured country, and as long as the same uncorrupted spirit of liberty which led him to the field shall continue to actuate the sons of freemen in America."

Mr. President, the tree of American liberty was nourished by the blood of such heroes.

But, Sir, when the husband and the father, at the call of his country, steps from the circle of domestic endearments, a patriot and a hero, it is the safety and protection of his wife and children that nerves his arm and animates his exertions in the hour of battle; and if he falls, his last prayer is for his country—and his last earthly consolation is, that his death commits them to its gratitude and protection.

This obligation, which springs from the grave of heroism, is sanctioned by the purest and noblest feelings of our nature, and the highest dictates of policy, and creates a debt which descends upon all who inherit the blessings thus acquired.

If, sir, the claim of the petitioners had no other foundation than this, it would, in my humble judgment, be irresistible. But it does not rest on this alone: it is supported by the plighted, and, I am sorry to say, the unredeemed faith of their country.

To say nothing, sir, at present of the pledge fairly to be implied from the addresses of General Washington calling the militia to arms, and animating them to battle, that the country would provide for their wives and children, this pledge was distinctly made to Colonel Johnston and his companions in arms. On the 3d of June, 1776, Congress resolved that 13,800 militia should be employed to reinforce the army at New York, and that New Jersey be requested to furnish 3,300 of their militia to complete that number, to be engaged until the 1st of December, unless sooner discharged by order of Congress. This was to form the flying camp destined for the defence of New York. On the 5th of June, 1776, Congress resolved that the flying camp be placed under the command of such continental general officer, as the commander-in-chief should direct. That the militia when in service be regularly paid and victualled in the same manner as the contimental troops. General Mercer was appointed to the command of the flying camp, thus formed, on the 20th July, 1776. The Convention of New Jersey was requested by Congress to raise for the flying camp, under Gen. Mercer, three battalions of militia, in addition to the five formerly desired by Congress, and send the same with all possible despatch to the flying camp; and that they should be officered, paid and provided as directed by the former resolutions for forming the flying camp.

Thus, sir, it is plain, that the detachment of New Jersey militia required to form the flying camp, for the defence of New York, was called out by the Continental Congress, and for the general defence of the country; and was placed in the service of the United States under the command of continental officers, and on the same footing in all respects as continental troops. In fact, the battalion commanded by Colonel Johnston was enlisted under a resolution of Congress, placed under its control, received into its service, commanded by its officers, and entitled to all the benefits and advantages, immediate and prospective, which resulted from that situation. So it was considered by the Convention of New Jersey, in the several ordinances which they passed to raise the men required to reinforce the army at New York.

In the last ordinance passed by the Convention of New Jersey on the 11th August, 1776, to carry into effect the resolutions of Congress, to which I have referred, the preamble recites: "The Convention, viewing with serious concern the present alarming situation of this and her sister States—that on a prudent use of the present means depends their lives, their liberty and happiness, think it their indispensable duty to put their militia on such a footing that the whole force may be most advantageously exerted." For that purpose, the whole militia were divided in two divisions; and one half was immediately detached to join the flying camp at New York.

After the appropriate details, that ordinance concludes in a strain of patriotic eloquence unknown to the rolls of statutes, and which I cannot deny myself the pleasure of recalling to the recollection of our country. It breathes the pure spirit of "Seventy-six."

"And whereas, the principles of equity and humanity require that a proper compensation and provision should be made for the families of all such as may be killed or wounded in the service, the Convention pledge the faith of this State that an adequate provision for the purpose aforesaid shall be made.

"In this interesting situation, viewing on the one hand an active, inveterate, and implacable enemy, increasing fast in strength, receiving large reinforcements, and industriously preparing to strike some decisive blow; on the other a considerable part of the inhabitants supinely slumbering on the brink of ruin, moved with affecting apprehension, the Convention think it incumbent upon them to warn their constituents of their impending danger. On you, our friends and brethren, it depends this day to determine, whether your wives, your children, and millions of your descendants yet unborn, shall wear the galling, ignominious yoke of slavery, or nobly inherit the generous, the inestimable blessings of freedom. The alternative is before you. Can you hesitate in your choice? Can you doubt which to prefer? Say; will you be slaves? Will you toil and labor, and glean together a little property, merely that it may be at the disposal of a relentless and rapacious conqueror? Will you, of choice, become hewers of wood and drawers of water? Impossible. You cannot be so amazingly degenerate as to lick the hand that is raised to shed your blood. Nature and nature's God have made you free. Liberty is the birthright of Americans—the gift of Heaven, and the instant it is forced from you, you take leave of every thing valuable on earth; your happiness or misery, virtuous independence, or disgraceful servitude, hang trembling in the balances. Happily, we know that we can anticipate your virtuous choice.

"With confident satisfaction we are assured that not a moment will delay your important decision; that you cannot feel hesitation whether you will tamely and degenerately bend your necks to the irretrievable wretchedness of slavery, or, by your instant and animated exertions, enjoy the fair inheritance of heaven born freedom, and transmit it unimpaired to posterity."

It was under this animated and eloquent appeal to his patriotism, and solemn pledge that a proper compensation and provision should be made for his family, that Colonel Johnston marched to the field of his death and renown.

That pledge, sir, was never redeemed by the State of New Jersey; and that pledge devolved upon the United States, and was solemnly assumed by them when they assumed the revolutionary debt and obligations of the several States. It rests upon the equity and humanity of those who are now enjoying the fair inheritance of freedom which Colonel Johnston died to obtain. In addition to all this, the claim of the petitioners is also sustained by the equity, if not the express letter, of various resolutions of Congress. I refer particularly to those of the 15th May and 26th September, 1778; the 24th August, 1780, and the 26th May, 1781. It is likewise sanctioned by several laws of Congress, making compensation for revolutionary services in analogous cases, which I forbear to detain you by enumerating.

Strong as the claim of the petitioners is upon its own merits, there is another consideration which, sir, I feel bound to press upon your attention. It appears that one of the petitioners is the wife of Joseph Scudder, Esq. His youth was devoted to the service of his country, in one of the bureaux established by the revolutionary Congress. He is the surviving son of Col. N. Scudder, one of that illustrious band of revolutionary patriots and heroes who devoted himself to the service of his country, both in the cabinet and in the field, and was alike distinguished for his wisdom as a statesman, and bravery as a soldier—among the first in his native State to espouse the cause of American independence, he was, from its declaration until his death, honored with a seat either in the councils of his native State, or in Congress. But he did not avail himself of the exemption which his civil employments conferred to relieve him from military duty.

At an early period of the revolutionary war, Col. Scudder was honored with the command of a regiment of militia of his native county, then peculiarly exposed to the invasion of the enemy. In the hour of danger he was always to be found at its head, bravely defending his native soil. But it was not his fate there to fall in all "the pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war." He was killed on the 16th October, 1781, near Black Point, in the county of Monmouth, while bravely leading such of his fellow soldiers as could be collected on a sudden alarm, to repel a predatory excursion of the enemy. The honors of war was the only public tribute paid to his memory; and to this day his children have neither asked nor received any thing from the bounty of their country, as a compensation for their irretrievable loss.

Thus, sir, by a happy coincidence, this petition presents before you the daughter of the first militia colonel of New Jersey, and the son of the last who fell in achieving our glorious independence. Never did death confer greater honor upon children. If it cannot disarm poverty of its miseries, it ennobles it.

The children of Col. Johnston, now aged, infirm, and, it gives me pain to add, poor, are compelled to ask of their country the redemption of that pledge, solemnly made to their father, to relieve them from the severe pressure of misfortunes which have resulted from neither crime nor vice. Their father fell on the first battle field, where the star-spangled banner was unfurled, in defence of American independence; that glorious prize for which he fought and died, which animated his exertions, and nerved his arm, when that banner waved fitfully over the field of his death and his country's misfortunes, has been obtained by his country. The star-spangled banner now waves in triumph "over the land of the free and the home of the brave;" the pride and protection of a great, prosperous, and happy nation.

The petitioners now submit their case to the equity, the humanity, and plighted faith of their country.

Mr. W. concluded by moving that the petition be read, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. WALKER presented the petition of Joseph Nilier, praying confirmation of title to a tract of land, which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Petitions were further presented by Messrs. DAVIS, ROBINSON, and TOMLINSON.

The following resolutions were submitted, and lie on the table one day.

By Mr. MOORE,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making a suitable appropriation in aid of the improvement of the navigation of Tennessee river, now in progress at the Muscle and Colbert shoals.

By Mr. HENDRICKS,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry and delivery at Michigan city.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an additional appropriation for the construction of a breakwater at Michigan city.

By Mr. LINN,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of surrendering to the State of Missouri that portion of the public lands situated in the counties of Cape Girardeau, Scott, New Madrid, Stoddard, and Wayne, which have been reported by the deputy surveyor to the Surveyor General as not worth the expense of survey; which surrender shall be on condition that all moneys, arising from the sale of said lands, be expended under the direction of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, for the purposes of draining, preventing inundation, making canals, and removing obstructions to the navigation of such water courses as make their way through said lands.

By Mr. CALHOUN,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the Senate, as early as practicable, after the first of January next, the amount of the exports for the year ending the 31st inst. ascertained and estimated, and distinguishing between the domestic and foreign; and the portion of the latter that is free and dutiable; the amount of the imports for the same period, estimated and ascertained, distinguishing in like manner the free and dutiable; the amount of duties accrued in the same period, ascertained and estimated, stating the portion paid into the Treasury during the year, and the amount outstanding at the end of the year; also, the amount of money that will be received in the year from the sales of lands, ascertained and estimated, distinguishing the receipts of each quarter; and, also, the amount of public money in the Treasury at the end of the year, ascertained and estimated, and distinguishing what stands to the credit of the Treasurer from what stands to that of the disbursing officers.

By Mr. BLACK,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing to be erected at Jackson, in the State of Mississippi, a suitable building for the accommodation of the District Court of the United States for that State.

By Mr. KING, of Alabama,

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorising the Gainsville and Narkee a Railroad company to construct a railroad through the lands of the United States.

By Mr. SEVIER,

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making the necessary appropriations for the completion of the military road from Little Rock to Fort Gibson, and the road from Little Rock to Fort Towson, and the road from Little Rock to Columbia.

Mr. BENTON laid on the table a resolution to expunge from the journal of the Senate the resolution of March, 1834, censuring the conduct of the President, for removing the deposits from the Bank of the United States, &c. which was ordered to be printed. [The resolution is in the same words with the one on the same subject introduced by Mr. BENTON at the last session.]

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported without amendment, the bill for the payment of a debt due to the heirs of Antoine Peltier, and the bill for the relief of the heirs of Nicholas Lachance; and reported with amendments the bill supplementary to the act to amend the judicial system of the United States.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the Solicitor of the Treasury, containing a report on the accounts of Stockton and Stokes; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, reported, without amendment, the bill anticipating the payment of the indemnity due to the citizens of the United States under the French and Neapolitan treaties.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the same committee, reported, without amendment, the bill to extend the provisions of the deposit act of the last session, to the money that may be in the Treasury on the 1st January, 1838; and said, that when the bill should come up, he was instructed by the committee to move for its indefinite postponement.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the same committee, to which a petition on the subject had been referred, reported a bill for the relief of William H. Robertson and Samuel H. Barron; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which various petitions on the subject had been referred, reported the following bills, which were severally read, and ordered to a second reading:

A bill for the relief of the heirs of William Cogswell.

A bill for the relief of Isaac Bronson;

A bill for the relief of James McCrary.

A bill for the relief of the heirs of Moses Elba; and

A bill for the relief of the heirs of Frederick Simons.

Mr. BROWN, from the same committee, reported, without amendment, the bill for the relief of the heirs of Samuel Y. Keene.

Mr. NILES, from the same committee, made an unfavorable report on the petition of the heirs of James Kirkpatrick.

Mr. RIVES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, without amendment, the bill to provide for the enlistment of boys in the Navy, and to extend the terms of the enlistment of seamen.

Mr. HENDRICKS, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize the purchase, on the part of the United States, of the private stock in the Louisville and Portland Canal; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. BUCHANAN, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise the claim of the United States in the Allegheny Bank of Pennsylvania; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. BUCHANAN gave notice that he would, to-morrow, ask leave to bring in a bill to continue in force, for a longer period, the several acts for the relief of the insolvent debtors of the United States.

Mr. KING of Georgia, on leave, introduced a bill for the completion of the improvement of certain rivers and roads in Florida; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. BENTON, on leave, introduced a bill to increase the compensation of the senior clerk employed in the office of the Adjutant General; which was twice read and referred.

The resolution of Mr. EWING to rescind the Treasury order in relation to the payments at the United States land offices, came up as the special order; when

Mr. HUBBARD, who had the floor, gave way to Mr. TIPTON, who moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business; which motion was carried, and when the doors were opened, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, MONDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1836.

Mr. W. C. DAWSON, member elect from the State of Georgia, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Messrs. JARVIS, PARKS, and SMITH, of Maine.

[Mr. SMITH presented the petitions of Wm. Gore, Amariah Goodwin, and Isaac Hilton.]

Mr. CUSHMAN of New Hampshire.

Mr. LAWRENCE of Massachusetts.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ADAMS presented the petition of a certain John Page and twenty-six other citizens of Silver Lake, Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, praying for the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia, which petition Mr. A. moved to refer to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. PICKENS then rose, and asked for the decision of the Chair on the resolution of the House, adopted at the last session of Congress, in reference to memorials of this character.

The CHAIR said he had looked into former precedents, and his impression was, that the resolution of the last session of Congress expired with the session, and was only operative during that session.

Mr. PICKENS said, if that was the decision of the Chair, he should object to the motion of reference made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. He could not consent to refer any petitions of that character to a standing committee of the House, and he therefore objected to it at once; and upon the objection he asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PARKS moved to lay the petition on the table.

Mr. CUSHMAN asked for the yeas and nays on that motion, which were ordered, and were—yeas 116, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chilton Allan, Anthony, Ash, Bean, Beaumont, Bell, Black, Boon, Boyd, Brown, Bunch, Cambaleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, G. Chambers, J. Chambers, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, Chetwood, Cleveland Coles, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Deberry, Doubleday, Dunlap, Efner, Elmore, Fairfield, French, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, Gillet, Graham, Haley, J. Hall, Hannegan, Harlan, A. G. Harrison, Haynes, Holsey, Howell, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, Gideon Lee, Luke Lee, Leonard, Logan, Loyal, Lucas, Abijah Mann, Martin, William Mason, Moses Mason, Maury, McKay, McKeon, McKim, McLene, Miller, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Franklin Pierce, Duce J. Pearce, Phelps, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Schenck, Seymour, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn-Sickles, Spangler, Standefer, Talarferro, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Towns, Turrill, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Ward, Washington, Webster, White, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, Yell, and Young—116.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, H. Allen, Bailey, Beale, Borden, Bouldin, Briggs, W. B. Calhoun, Childs, N. H. Claiborne, Cushing, Darlington, Dawson, Denney, Everett, Gaenger, Hard, Hardin, Harper, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Hunt, W. Jackson, James Lane, Lawrence, McKennan, Parker, Pearson, Reed, Russell, Storer, Vinton, and Elisha Whittlesey—36.

So the petition was laid on the table.

When the name of Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina was called, that gentleman rose and inquired, whether, if he voted to lay this petition, it would imply that the petition had been received.

The SPEAKER replied, that it would.

Mr. THOMPSON then asked to be excused from voting; which was assented to.

After the roll had been called through, Mr. GARLAND of Va. asked leave to vote; objection being made, Mr. G. stated that if he had been in the Hall at the time, he would have voted against receiving the petition in any shape or form.

Mr. DAVIS moved a suspension of the rules for the purpose of taking up the following resolution submitted by him some days ago:

Resolved, That all petitions, memorials, remonstrances, or other papers which may be offered during the present session, in any manner relating to the abolition of slavery or the slave trade in the District of Columbia, or any of the Territories of the United States, shall, on presentation, be laid upon the table without reading, without being ordered to be printed, and without debate.

Mr. OWENS asked for the yeas and nays, but, on taking the count, no quorum voting.

Mr. ANTHONY remarked, that as gentlemen were so anxious to meet this day, he would move a call of the House, so that it might be seen who were present and who absent.

The call was ordered by a vote of 77 to 65, and 170 members having answered to their names, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, of Ohio, the further proceedings in the call were dispensed with, and the House refused to order the yeas and nays on the motion of Mr. DAVIS, which motion was rejected without a count.

The call for petitions and memorials then proceeded, and they were presented by Messrs. CUSHING, and REED of Mass.

Messrs. HALEY and WHITTLESEY of Connecticut.

Messrs. LEONARD, CAMBRELENG, McKEON; CHAPIN, MANN, YOUNG, LANSING, and GILLET, of New York.

[Mr. McKim presented a petition praying for the erection of a light house on Robins's Reef; also a petition of inspectors of customs of port of New York.]

[Mr. GILLET presented a memorial from sundry citizens residing in the northern part of the State of New York, praying an appropriation for the construction of a breakwater at Port Kent, on Lake Champlain; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.]

[Mr. CHAPIN presented the petition of the heirs of Joseph Fay, a lieutenant in the army of the revolution, asking commutation pay.]

[Mr. LEONARD of New York, presented the petition of Thomas Park, praying compensation for private property sold for the use of the Government during the revolutionary war; referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey.

Messrs. BEAUMONT and HARPER of Pennsylvania.

Messrs. McKIM, THOMAS, and WASHINGTON, of Maryland.

[Mr. McKim presented the following memorials: The memorial of a number of merchants of Baltimore, praying for the repeal of the 10th and 12th sections of the act passed July 14, 1832.

The memorial of James Tongue, praying remuneration for a tobacco warehouse, burnt by the British forces during the late war with Great Britain.

The memorial of W. L. Young, praying compensation for services rendered in the Surveying Department on the seaboard.]

Messrs. COLES and MORGAN of Virginia.

Mr. A. H. SHEPPERD of North Carolina.

Messrs. BOYD, HARLAN, C. ALLAN, and WILLIAMS of Kentucky.

[Mr. HARLAN presented a petition from sundry citizens of Kentucky, praying for pecuniary aid and Governmental patronage to the American Colonization Society.]

Messrs. WHITTLESEY, CHANEY, and WEBSTER of Ohio.

Messrs. HUNTSMAN, CARTER, and DUNLAP of Tennessee.

Messrs. CARR, HANNEGAN, and DAVIS, of Indiana.

[Mr. HANNEGAN presented the petition of William B. Cole, praying that a grant of land in the Grand Prairie may be reserved to him, for the purpose of making an experiment in rearing timber; referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.]

[Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of Thomas Holder.]

Mr. REYNOLDS, of Illinois.

Mr. YELL, of Arkansas.

[Mr. Y. presented the petition of Charles Caldwell, of Arkansas, praying the right of pre-emption: referred to the Committee on Public Lands, &c.]

Mr. WHITE of Florida.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, from the Committee of Claims, made sundry unfavorable reports.

Mr. LAWLER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Amelia Leach; which was read twice and committed.

TARIFF.

The House then resumed the consideration of the resolution offered by Mr. FRY on the 20th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be instructed to inquire into the expediency of immediately abolishing the duty on foreign grain and breadstuffs of all kinds.

The question pending was the amendment of Mr. ADAMS, to embrace a repeal of the duties on "foreign coals, salt, and iron;" and the amendment moved thereto by Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina, to include "sugar."

Mr. ANTHONY, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the House at some length in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Louisiana then moved to lay the resolution on the table; which was agreed to without a division.

The followed resolutions, offered on a former day, were taken up and adopted:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Louisiana,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to this House the number of claims to lands in the State of Louisiana, confirmed under different acts of Congress, and the number of those acquired from the United States by purchase; the number of patents issued for the said claims, and the time which will probably elapse before the whole of the patents due therefor can issue under present arrangements.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to lay before this House a statement of the various sums paid to the new States respectively, out of the five per cent. upon the nett proceeds of the sales of the public lands within their respective limits; and likewise copies of the reports made by said States, or their agents, respectively, in relation to the objects to which the said sums have been appropriated, and the manner of its application.

By Mr. CHAMBERS, of Kentucky,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to this House the amount of revenue due to the United States, the payment of which has been suspended under the act for the relief of the sufferers by the fire in the city of New York, passed at the last session of Congress; and that, in doing so, he state the proportions of the amount which has been suspended under the first and second sections of the said act, and what amount of the sums suspended under the said sections has been paid.

The following resolution, offered on a former day by Mr. PARKER, was taken up:

Resolved, That 5000 copies of the Receipts and Expenditures of the United States for the year 1835, be printed for the use of this House.

Mr. ADAMS was opposed to the resolution, unless the mover should give some good reason for its propriety.

Mr. PARKER considered that this document ought to be published by the House to be disseminated among the people, because it was a document showing the disbursements of the public moneys which was raised from year to year, from customs, public lands, &c.; and the fact that it never found its way into the newspapers, was an additional reason why it should be published and distributed among the people.

The resolution was rejected—yeas 52, noes 84.

CREEK WAR.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. BELL on the 19th instant, was then taken up and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to this House copies of all orders issued to Governors of States or Territories, or to officers in the army, authorizing a call for volunteers or militia men, either for the protection of the southwestern frontier, for the prevention or suppression of Indian hostilities within the last eighteen months; also, copies of all orders explanatory of, or countermanding, any original order; also, the number of such troops, which at any time or times within said period, presented themselves equipped for the service under said calls, and the States and Territories to which they belonged; also, the number received into the public service, the dates of such reception, and the several places of rendezvous; also, the terms of service of such troops so received into the public service, and the terms during which they actually served; also, the whole number of troops, whether volunteers, militiamen, mounted dragoons, or troops belonging to the regular army, which have been employed in suppressing the hostilities of the Creek Indians within the same period of time; and also the greatest number so employed at one time.

AMOUNT OF DUTIES.

The following resolution, offered by Mr. HUNTSMAN on the same day, was taken up:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to this House the amount of duties collected upon salt in the years 1834, 1835, and in the year 1836, as far as it can be estimated.

Mr. McKIM moved to add the words "and coal" after the word "salt," which Mr. HUNTSMAN accepted as a modification.

Mr. McKAY suggested a further modification, so as to embrace a call for the whole amount of duties received upon every article of foreign imports for the last four years. Mr. McK. moved as a substitute the following:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury cause to be prepared for the use of this House, as soon as convenient, a tabular statement, showing the nett amount of revenue receivable from customs for the last four years, distinguishing the amount received in each year.

Mr. CAMBRELENG hoped the gentleman from Tennessee would accept this as a modification, for it was of vast importance at this time to have the inquiry extended.

Mr. HUNTSMAN accepted the substitute as a modification.

Mr. PICKENS inquired of the gentleman from North Carolina if he meant the "gross" or "nett" revenue.

Mr. McKAY replied, the "nett."

Mr. PICKENS remarked that it would be scarcely possible to procure such a return.

Mr. McKAY, by consent of the original mover, modified the resolution by retaining both words, "nett and gross."

Mr. GILLET said he would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, to ask only for the gross amount of revenue on such articles, as far as it can be given. As far as the great classes of articles were concerned, it would be easily complied with. The nett revenue upon the aggregate of articles could be, he presumed, soon given. But it would be impossible to furnish, with accuracy, the nett revenue on each article in detail. It would be easy to furnish the amount of revenue at a single port, and the expenses of collection, and the amount of drawback thereon, but he knew of no way in which a correct apportionment of the former could be made upon the various articles imported there. A cargo may consist of a hundred different articles, paying different rates of duties. He would ask how the charges upon the revenue could be apportioned upon each? It might be done so as to approximate to the truth, but nothing more. The drawbacks paid had been stated as charges upon the collection of revenue from the customs, and had led many gentlemen into error, and induced them to believe that the expenses of collection were far greater than they were in fact. The drawback of duties, in fact, forms no part of the expenses of collection.

Mr. CAMBRELENG thought the gentleman from South Carolina and his own colleague had misapprehended what was meant by the term "nett" revenue. The nett revenue was the difference between the amount of the gross revenue upon the whole article of imports from abroad and that of the drawbacks upon the same article; and one statement could be furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury as well as the other. It had nothing to do with the expenses of collection.

Mr. GILLET said, he thought his colleague was in error on this subject. It seemed to him that the nett revenue was the amount received over and above all expenses of collection. This, he thought, was the ordinary acceptation of the expression. He believed his memory did not mislead him, when he stated that this was the understanding of it at the Treasury. He recollected, that in a document communicated to this House, relating to the compensation of custom-house officers, it had been so understood. The nett revenue stated in that document was the balance, after deducting the expenses of collection and drawbacks. The latter, he thought, in fact, formed no part of the expenses, though heretofore so stated. He would suggest that the resolution be so altered, as to require the gross revenue, and the amount of drawback on each article. This would give what all wanted. All agree in the object of obtaining the information. Unless we put it in this shape, we could not expect to have the resolution answered sufficiently early to be of any service to us this session. By this resolution we shall obtain information in a condensed form, which is now somewhat scattered in the documents annually laid upon our tables.

Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. WHITTLESEY called for the yeas and nays, which were not ordered; and the motion to adjourn was decided in the negative—ayes 60, noes 63.

The question again recurring on the above resolution,

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved to strike out the word "nett," and insert the words, "together with the amount of drawbacks upon each article," which Mr. HUNTSMAN accepted as a modification; and the resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

The following resolutions, offered by Mr. WHITE of Florida, on the 19th instant, were severally taken up and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House the causes which have prevented the 9th article of the treaty between Spain and the United States, of the 22d February, 1819, and the two acts of Congress passed in relation thereto; and whether, in his opinion, and further legislation be necessary to carry the same into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to this House the report of the Naval Commissioners, who have recently been engaged in the examination of the navy yard at Pensacola, and the report of Commodore Stewart on the same subject.

The following offered by Mr. HENDERSON on the 20th inst. was then taken up:

Resolved, That 5,000 copies of the Senate document No. 333, entitled report of a Geological Reconnaissance made in 1835, from the seat of Government, by the way of Green bay and the Wisconsin Territory, to the Coteau De Prairie, by G. W. Featherstonhaugh, United States Geologist, be printed for the use of the members of this House.

On motion of Mr. H. the resolution was modified by the addition of the following words: "under the direction of Mr. Featherstonhaugh."

Mr. PARKER objected to the resolution, unless some gentleman would give good reasons for its adoption.

Mr. G. LEE said he had voted uniformly for motions to print the public documents; the people were entitled to the knowledge of all the proceedings of the Government; they desire this knowledge; and he had seen no document which was not proper and useful for the people to read and discuss.

The gentleman from New Jersey asks who wants the document—who will read it? and expresses an opinion that not one in one hundred thousand will read it. I will inform the gentleman that several scientific gentlemen have written to me for copies, I have this day applied at the document office for them, and am informed that not a single copy remains. The subject of the geology of our country is an interesting subject to all classes, and especially the geology of our wide spread, hitherto unexplored regions; and I believe the very reverse of the opinion of the gentleman from New Jersey would be nearer the truth. I believe that not one in one hundred thousand of the reading community would fail to read if they had the document; and I believe, moreover, that the printing and the distribution by Congress is the most convenient and the cheapest mode of disseminating information that can be devised.

The question on the resolution, as modified, was then taken, and the vote being ayes 71, noes 47, no quorum;

Mr. PARKER moved that the House adjourn: lost, 64 to 65.

Mr. OWENS moved to lay the resolution on the table; lost without a count.

Mr. BELL wished to know if this work had been examined by any one competent to judge of its merits, for they had often ordered books to be printed which turned out to be worthless. He moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. HENDERSON accepted this as a modification, and, so modified, the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report, in pursuance of the resolution of the House of 29th of May, 1836, in relation to applications for pensions, and containing lists of applicants, which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

On motion, The House adjourned.

[On Friday, Mr. LAWRENCE, of Mass. presented the following petitions: The petition of Nathaniel Goddard and others, for pensions. The petition of John R. Parker, of Boston, inventor of the Sema-phoric telegraph for transmitting information from one station to another, for an act establishing a permanent line of telegraphs throughout the Union. The petition of Sylvester Day, assistant surgeon in the United States army, for a reimbursement of money paid by him for quarters in 1823-4. The petition of inhabitants of the city of Boston, for a repeal of the duty on foreign coal. The petition of Henry J. Pickering, for a remission of duties on certain machines for the manufacture of paper, imported into Boston in 1829. The memorial of Hilliard, Gray & Co. of Boston, for the purchase by Congress of their recently published Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, &c. in 3 vols. 8vo. The petition of the Boston Marine Society, for a light house on Nauset Beach; also for buoys and spindles in Boston harbor.]

IN SENATE,

TUESDAY, December 27, 1836.

The following message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Andrew Jackson, jr. his secretary.

[Given in the proceedings of the House of Representatives.]

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the message and documents were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 19th inst. showing the different appropriations of the last session in which there remain unexpended balances.

Also, a report from the same Department, made in compliance with the resolution of the 20th inst. in relation to the transfers of the public moneys made in pursuance of the deposit act; both of which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of George I. Knight, praying to be remunerated for the loss of a vessel and cargo that was pressed into the service of the United States, and captured and burned by the enemy: referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GRUNDY presented the petition of Joseph Nourse, praying to be allowed by Congress his claims against the Government, which the accounting officers refuse to allow him: referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TOMLINSON presented the petition of a large number of the inhabitants of Connecticut, praying for a repeal of the duty on foreign coal; which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of the heirs of Henry Fisher, praying compensation for the revolutionary services of the deceased.

Mr. EWING presented the petition of the Ohio Railroad company, praying to be allowed the right of way through the public lands: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Petitions were also presented by Messrs. Tipton and Brown.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which had been referred the bill from the House to provide payment for horses and other property lost in the service of the United States, reported the same with amendments, which were read.

Mr. PRENTISS, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of Elisha Town; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. SOUTHARD, on leave, introduced the following bills, which were severally twice read and referred:

A bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Henry Eckford.

A bill to establish a Naval Academy.

A bill for the relief of Commodore Isaac Hull.

A bill to establish and regulate the navy ration, and for other purposes.

A bill to regulate the pay of officers of the Marine corps.

A bill making an appropriation for deepening the bar and constructing a dry dock at Pensacola.

A bill authorizing the necessary examinations and surveys for the purpose of establishing a naval rendezvous at or near the southern extremity of the Territory of Florida.

Mr. DAVIS, on leave, introduced a bill to remunerate the captors of the privateer Lydia; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. BUCHANAN, on leave, introduced a bill to extend, for a longer period, the several acts now in force for the relief of the insolvent debtors of the United States; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. ROBINSON, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of Daniel Bush; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. MOORE, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the amount of the three per cent. fund, reserved for making roads in Alabama, under the direction of Congress; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. TIPTON, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize John E. Metcalf and others to locate certain pre-emption claims in Indiana; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. HENDRICKS, on leave, introduced a bill for the completion of certain internal improvements in the Territory of Florida; which was twice read, and referred.

SPECIAL ORDER.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the resolution, introduced by Mr. EWING of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order in relation to payments at the United States land offices.

Mr. HUBBARD, who had the floor, addressed the Senate at length in opposition to the resolution; after which, on motion of Mr. WALKER, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and, when the doors were opened, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

TUESDAY, December 27, 1836.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Messrs. HALL and EVANS, of Maine.

Mr. PEARCE, of Rhode Island.

Messrs. HARD, WARDWELL, HAZELTINE, McKEON, REYNOLDS, LOVE, and RUSSELL of New York.

[Mr. RUSSELL presented the petition of Milanthon Wheeler, John H. Boyd, and others, inhabitants of the county of Washington, in the State of New York, praying an appropriation to improve the harbor at White Hall, in said county, which, on motion of Mr. B. was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. R. also presented the petition of Lewis Hatch, a soldier of the revolution, praying for a pension for his revolutionary services; which, on motion of Mr. R. was also referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. R. also presented the petition of Samuel Weeks, of the county of Washington, in the State of New York, a soldier of the revolution, praying for an increase of his pension for services rendered in the war of the revolution; which, on motion of Mr. R. was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

Mr. GALBRAITH of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WASHINGTON of Maryland.

Messrs. LUCAS and MERCER of Virginia.

Mr. W. B. SHEPARD of North Carolina.

Messrs. BOYD and HARIAN of Kentucky.

Messrs. SLOANE and KENNON of Ohio.

Messrs. CASEY and REYNOLDS of Illinois.

[Mr. REYNOLDS moved that certain memorials and petitions now on file in this House, praying a grant of land to certain ancient settlers in Illinois, be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands. These petitions and memorials present the claims of certain settlers, arising from an erroneous construction of the acts of Congress on that subject, and from the residence of these settlers in a certain year, which entitled them to a grant of land.]

[Mr. CASEY presented the petition of a number of citizens of Illinois, praying the passage of a law granting a bounty in land to the widows and heirs of those who were slain in battle during the war of the Revolution; which, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.]

Mr. WHITE of Florida.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses for the Government for the year 1837: read twice and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Polly Lemon: read twice and committed.

Mr. LAWLER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of James Moore and William Moore. This bill having been twice read, Mr. L. moved that it be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, after a few words from that gentleman in explanation, and Messrs. D. J. PEARCE, JARVIS and VINTON in opposition to the motion, it was disagreed to—49 only voting in the affirmative. So the bill was rejected.

At a subsequent period of the day's proceedings, the vote by which this bill was rejected, was, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, reconsidered; and then, on motion of Mr. LAWLER, the same was committed to a committee of the whole House.

Mr. LINCOLN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill to grant the Apalaga Rail Road company the right of way through the public lands: read twice and committed.

MICHIGAN.

The following message in writing was received from the President of the United States by the hands of his private secretary, ANDREW JACKSON, jun. Esq.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

By the second section of the act "to establish the northern boundary line of the State of Ohio, and to provide for the admission of the State of Michigan into the Union, upon the conditions therein expressed," approved June 15th, 1836, the constitution and State Government which the people of Michigan had formed for themselves, was ratified and confirmed, and the State of Michigan declared to be one of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union, upon an equal footing with the original States, but on the express condition, that the said State should consist of, and have jurisdiction over, all the territory included within certain boundaries described in th fact, and over none other. It was further enacted, by the third section of the same law, that as a compliance with the fundamental condition of admission, the boundaries of the State of Michigan, as thus described, declared, and established, should "receive the assent of a convention of delegates, elected by the people of said State, for the sole purpose of giving the assent therein required; that, as soon as such assent should be given, the President of the United States should announce the same by proclamation; and that, thereupon, and without any further proceeding on the part of Congress, the admission of the State into the Union, as one of the United States of America, should be considered as complete, and the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, entitled to take their seats without further delay.

In the month of November last, I received a communication, enclosing the official proceedings of a convention assembled at Ann Arbor, in Michigan, on the 26th of September, 1836, all which (marked A) are herewith laid before you. It will be seen by these papers, that the convention therein referred to was elected by the people of Michigan, pursuant to an act of the State Legislature, passed on the 25th of July last, in consequence of the above mentioned act of Congress; and that it declined giving its assent to the fundamental condition prescribed by Congress, and rejected the same.

On the 24th instant, the accompanying paper marked B, with its enclosure, containing the proceedings of a convention of delegates subsequently elected, and held in the State of Michigan, was presented to me. By these papers, which are also herewith submitted for your consideration, it appears that elections were held in all the counties of the State, except two, on the 5th and 6th days of December instant, for the purpose of electing a convention of delegates to give the assent required by Congress; that the delegates then elected, assembled in convention on the 14th day of December instant; and that on the following day the assent of the body to the fundamental condition, above stated, was formally given.

This latter convention was not held or elected, by virtue of any act of the Territorial or State Legislature; it originated from the people themselves, and was chosen by them in pursuance of resolutions adopted in primary assemblies, held in the respective counties. The act of Congress, however, does not prescribe by what authority the convention shall be ordered, or the time when, or the manner in which, it shall be chosen. Had these latter proceedings come to me during the recess of Congress, I should therefore have felt it my duty, on being satisfied that they emanated from a convention of delegates elected, in point of fact, by the people of the State, for the purpose required, to have issued my proclamation thereon, as provided by law. But as the authority conferred on the President, was evidently given to him under the expectation that the assent of the convention might be laid before him during the recess of Congress, and to avoid the delay of a postponement until the meeting of that body, and as the circumstances which now attend the case, are in other respects peculiar, and such as could not have been foreseen, when the act of June 15, 1836, was passed, I deem it most agreeable to the intent of that law, and proper for other reasons, that the whole subject should be submitted to the decision of Congress. The importance of your early action upon it is too obvious to need remark.

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, December, 1836.

The message having been read, was, on motion of Mr. CRAIG, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island submitted the following resolution, which, under the rule, lies over one day.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House if, in his opinion, not incompatible with the public interest, what steps, if any, have recently been taken to recover of the kingdom of Denmark the claims of the United States for three prize ships, viz: The Betsey, The Union, and Charming Polly, valued by Doctor Benjamin Franklin at fifty thousand pounds sterling, captured by the squadron under the command of the Chevalier John Paul Jones, during the war of the revolution, carried into the port of Bergen, Norway, a part of the Danish dominions, seized by the officers of his Danish Majesty, the King of Denmark, in October, 1779, and unlawfully delivered to the British authorities.

If no steps have been so taken to recover said claim, to communicate to this House whether it has ever been waived, or given up, and if the sums have been waived, or given up, when, and if upon any, what consideration.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Maine,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending the provisions of the act, entitled "An act for the relief of certain insolvent debtors of the United States," passed on the 2d day of March, A. D. 1831, to such persons who were indebted to the United States in the manner provided for by said act on the 1st day of January last past.

On motion of Mr. BORDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of changing the name of the revenue district Dighton, in the State of Massachusetts, to that of Fall River; also, the expediency of allowing vessels arriving from the Cape of Good Hope, and places beyond, to enter in said district.

On motion of Mr. BRIGGS, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of continuing to the widows and children of the officers and soldiers of the late war with Great Britain, the pensions to which their husbands and fathers were entitled.

On motion of Mr. JARVIS, it was Resolved, That a committee be appointed, whose duty it shall be to consider all matters touching the public buildings and public grounds within the city of Washington.

On motion of Mr. HALL of Maine,

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing the name of Moses Smith on the pension roll, from the 10th of March, 1814, to the 8th of April 1818.

On motion of Mr. EVERETT,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be directed to inquire into the expediency of publishing a stereotype edition of the Laws of the United States.

On motion of Mr. BEAN,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting an additional appropriation for removing the obstructions in the Cocheco branch of the Piscataqua river, near the harbor of Dover, in the State of New Hampshire.

On motion of Mr. LAWRENCE,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of appointing a Surveyor of the Customs at Brunswick, in the State of Georgia.

On motion of Mr. BURNS,

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing the name of Ezekiel Burnham on the pension roll.

On motion of Mr. JAMES, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Danville, through Walden and Lamoile village, to Walcott, in the State of Vermont; and that the papers now on file in relation to the same, be committed to said committee.

On motion of Mr. JACKSON,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to Elijah Bader the arrears of pay as a revolutionary soldier from the 25th day of September, 1820, when he was stricken from the pension roll, until the 19th day of January, 1832, the time when his name was enrolled.

On motion of Mr. PIERCE of New Hampshire

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of removing the location of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the district of New Hampshire, from Exeter to Concord.

On motion of Mr. CUSUMAN, it was Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reviving the act granting pensions to the widows and orphan children of persons who were employed on board of private armed vessels of the United States, and who died in such employment during the late war.

Mr. CAMBRELENG submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing all laws authorizing protection be issued to American seamen.

Mr. C. gave as a reason for his introduction of this resolution that the laws now in existence on the subject were not only unnecessary for the protection of our seamen, but were a heavy, odious, and entirely unnecessary charge upon that meritorious body of men. It was cruel to require them to take out a protection at every port in the United States, and was a vexatious and odious tax upon them. The American flag was of itself a sufficient protection on the ocean.

Mr. PARKER objected to the resolution, as he considered protections necessary in many cases.

Mr. McKEON hoped that the gentleman from New Jersey would give up his objections. The resolution proposed an inquiry into the propriety of relieving a highly deserving class of our citizens from an onerous tax, and ought to be adopted.

Mr. GILLET said a few words in its support, and wished its operation to be extended still farther, by instructing the committee to inquire also into the expediency of abolishing all fees imposed upon seamen.

Mr. CAMBRELENG remarked, that his resolution embraced all laws on the subject; and as he had no objection to any extension of it, he consented to the modification.

Mr. ADAMS hoped the subject would be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and be examined in all its aspects, and that they would make a report to the House on the subject. This resolution proposed to make a very important change in the system of granting protection to American seamen. He doubted whether it would be expedient to repeal all the laws on the subject. He thought American seamen ought to have some paper as a protection, and to identify them as American seamen. He doubted whether the American seamen should lose the protection of their country.

Mr. A. said there might be many members who did not know what gave origin to this system of protection. The origin of it was the practice of impressment by the British Government; that practice of taking out of every vessel every person they thought proper to take. When war commenced with England, the British King issued orders to his officers to take British seamen wherever found, and under that order British officers impressed and took what seamen out of our vessels they pleased; and the only check there was now to this practice, was this very protection which is now proposed to be taken away from them. It was intended as an expedient for saving American seamen from being taken away in this manner, and impressed on board of British ships of war. He hoped the resolution would pass, and that the committee would consider it a very serious matter; and if the law was to be abolished, that they would provide some protection for American seamen.

Mr. CAMBRELENG said, his own impression was that the roll which every ship took out from the custom-house, was a sufficient protection. On it the name, the age, and a description of every seaman was set down, and he did not know how an American seamen could receive greater protection than this. As to seamen being discharged in foreign ports, the laws expressly declared that no seaman shall be discharged, except under certain specified provisions. He stated that his only object was to relieve American seamen from an inconvenience at present existing, and he did not think that because heretofore our ships had been boarded, and seamen taken, that it became us at this day to continue this kind of protection to American seamen.

Mr. ADAMS said he did not mean to oppose the resolution, but he meant to apprise the House that this was a proposition which involved a question of peace or war, and with no less a power than Great Britain; and when the subject went to the committee, he hoped and trusted they would consider it as a matter of very great moment. He did not consider the ship's roll a sufficient protection; he did not believe that officers of foreign Governments would look upon ships' rolls as of any account at all. Suppose the King of Great Britain was to issue an order in council directing his officers to take British seamen wherever found, he asked the gentleman from New York whether this roll would be any protection at all? And if they should take our seamen, what would you do? You would remonstrate, and instruct your minister to remonstrate, until you would come to war. In this way was our last war brought about; a war (however much he might abhor a war) as righteous as ever was waged in the world. He would vote to repeal any unnecessary charge upon seamen.

Mr. BUSHING did not rise to oppose the resolution, because some examination of the subject might be necessary. He knew that in some ports the charges were higher than in others, in consequence of which there was sometimes difficulty in engaging crews. But, at the same time, he did not consider that the ship's roll was a sufficient protection, as the gentleman from New York had intimated. He inquired from this roll to be a protection to seamen who might be discharged, or might have left the vessel? The roll was always kept with the vessel, therefore it could be no protection to seamen, unless while on the vessel. He was in favor of having any tax taken off of seamen which might now be imposed, or of equalizing the expenses of procuring a protection; but he did not think, with the gentleman from New York, that a protection was unnecessary. He said, that when landmen desired to go to Europe, they got a passport from the Department of State without charge, and he should be pleased to see the seamen get protections on the same conditions.

Mr. C. concluded by moving to amend the resolution, so that the committee should be directed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the law now imposed on seamen.

Mr. CAMBRELENG had rather send the whole subject to the Committee on Commerce, the law as well as the tax. He hoped it would be blotted out from the statute book, for it was a disgrace there, and there was not a single case that could arise leading to the results apprehended by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The resolution, as modified, was then agreed to, and the House passed to the orders of the day.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The first business being the resolutions of Mr. WISE and Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island, on the subject of inquiry into the alleged abuses of the Executive Departments,

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved its postponement till Thursday next.

Mr. DUNLAP hoped it would not be postponed, and he expressed his surprise that such a motion should come from the friends of the administration.

Mr. CAMBRELENG did not wish the resolutions postponed indefinitely, but, on the contrary, acted upon at once. They had, however, as yet, only served to elicit long political speeches, in which it was apprehended the public took very little interest, and the public business was suffering in consequence of it. There were several bills of urgent necessity that ought to be acted upon, and he referred to the bill making appropriations for the suppression of Indian hostilities in Florida, and to that providing for the revolutionary and other pensioners, &c. He was not a little astonished that the gentleman from Tennessee should hint that Mr. C. desired to put off the question when it was within the knowledge of the House that he was one of the very few members last session, who, on all occasions, voted for a similar inquiry. If the House would now take the vote he would withdraw his motion, and for the purpose of testing its sense, he withdrew it accordingly.

The resolution originally submitted by Mr. WISE, and reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, was then read as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the "condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, the vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business in all of them, and the causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation," be referred to a select committee, to consist of nine members, with power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to inquire into the condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, into the manner in which the public business has been discharged in all of them, and into all causes of complaint from any quarter, at the manner in which said departments, or their bureaus or offices, or any of their officers or agents of every description whatever, directly or indirectly connected with them in any manner, officially or unofficially, in duties pertaining to the public interest, have fulfilled or failed to accomplish the objects of their creation, or have violated their duties, or have injured and impaired the public service and interest, and that said committee, in its inquiries, may refer to such periods of time as to them may seem expedient and proper."

The question pending was the following amendment, moved by Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island: Strike out all after the word "resolved," and insert the following:

"That so much of the President's message as is in the following words, to wit: 'Before concluding this paper, I think it is due to the various Executive Departments to bear testimony to their prosperous condition, and to the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted. It has been my aim to enforce in all of them a vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business; and it is gratifying to me to believe that there is no just cause of complaint from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation,' be referred to a select committee of nine members, with instructions to inquire into any specific causes of complaint which may be alleged against the integrity of the administration of any of the departments, or their bureaus, or the vigilance and fidelity with which their duties have been discharged, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers."

Mr. PICKENS remarked that, as the honorable mover of the original resolution was absent from the House, as he had been for some days, parliamentary usage and courtesy would afford him an opportunity of addressing the House in conclusion upon it. Mr. P. would therefore suggest the propriety of postponing the further consideration of the subject till Thursday next, and that it be made the special order for that day.

Mr. HARPER suggested a later day—this day week.

Mr. PICKENS assented, and modified his motion by moving to postpone the subject till Tuesday next, and that it be made the special order for that day. He again explained, substantially as above, his reason for doing so, (viz: the absence of Mr. Wise.)

Mr. BOON hoped it would not be postponed another hour; and he added, it must be obvious to every one that, if it was postponed another week, the information required by it could not be obtained at all during this short session.

The motion of Mr. PICKENS was agreed to—ayes 98, noes 51.

The joint resolution, from the Senate, directing the publication of the annual statement of the commerce and navigation of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, was taken up, read twice, and, on motion of Mr. GILLET, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

INDIAN CESSIONS.

The bill regulating, in certain cases, the disposition of the proceeds of lands ceded by Indian tribes to the United States, was read the third time and passed.

THE MINT.

On motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MUHLENBERG in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill supplementary to the act entitled "An act establishing a mint, and regulating the coins of the United States."

The question pending was the motion of Mr. HARPER to strike out those parts of the bill going to change the value of copper, so as to restore it to the present rate.

The motion to amend was supported by Messrs. ADAMS and HARPER, and opposed by Messrs. CAMBRELENG and McKIM; when the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARPER moved some further amendments, which were agreed to.

A somewhat lengthy discussion ensued upon some of the other minute provisions of the bill, in which Messrs. CAMBRELENG and ADAMS participated, when the bill was laid aside to be reported, as amended, to the House.

The committee then took up and considered the bill making an appropriation for the suppression of Indian hostilities; [the bill appropriated the further sum of $2,000,000;] which was laid aside to be reported.

The committee then took up and considered the bill making appropriations for the payment of the revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States for the year 1837; which was laid aside.

The committee then rose and reported, and the mint bill being taken up, the amendments of the committee of the whole were severally concurred in.

Mr. GILLET moved further to amend the bill, so as to make the cent a legal tender for all sums under the half dime; which was disagreed to.

Mr. G. then moved to strike out the twelfth section, which was also disagreed to, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The other two bills were also ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and then, on motion,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 28, 1836.

Mr. LINN presented the memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, praying for an extension of the right of pre-emption, and for a graduation of the price of public land, in proportion to its quality: referred to the Committee on the Public Lands. Also, a memorial from the same, praying for the establishment of a suitable number of marine hospitals on the northern lakes and the Mississippi river: referred to the Committee on Commerce. Also, a memorial from the same, praying that all lands returned as not worth the expense of surveying, may be surrendered to the State: referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. MCKEAN presented a memorial from sundry citizens of Philadelphia, praying that an appropriation may be made for the erection of a new custom-house at that place: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RUGGLES presented the memorial of John H. Hall, of Harper's Ferry, stating that he has effected important improvements in the construction of fire-arms, and asking remuneration for his great expenditure of time and money on that object: referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KENT presented the memorial of Dr. Boyd Riley, asking the patronage of Congress for a vapor bath invented by him: referred to a select committee, consisting of five members.

Petitions were also presented by Messrs. HUBBARD, DAVIS, KENT, and WRIGHT.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, without amendment, the bill to provide more effectually for the settlement of accounts between the United States and receivers of public moneys.

Mr. TOMLINSON, from the Committee on Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of William H. Hall; and the committee was discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. TOMLINSON, from the same committee, to which had been referred the petition of Ransom Mix, reported a bill for his relief; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WALL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been referred the petition of Tench Ringgold, reported a bill for his relief; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. PRENTISS, from the Committee on Pensions, reported unfavorably on the petition of Joseph Ford.

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported without amendment the bill to authorize the Pensacola and Perdido Railroad and Canal company to locate a road, and cut a canal, through the public lands.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the same committee, reported without amendment the bill to authorize certain internal improvements in the Territory of Florida.

Mr. RIVES submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the 47th rule of the Senate be amended as follows: After "country," insert "or who have received medals by a vote of Congress."

Mr. RUGGLES submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making provision by law for constructing suitable fortifications in Portland harbor, at the mouths of the Kennebec, Penobscot, and St. Croix rivers, and at any other points on the coast or interior frontier of the State of Maine, requiring works of defence.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the laws which impose twenty cents a month upon seamen as hospital money.

The following bills from the House, were severally read twice and referred:

An act for the payment of the revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States;

An act making an appropriation for the suppression of Indian hostilities;

An act to regulate, in certain cases, the disposition of the proceeds of the public lands ceded by Indian tribes to the United States;

An act supplementary to the act entitled an act establishing and regulating the coins of the United States;

A bill for the relief of Norman Holt.

Mr. BENTON called the attention of the Senate to a statement that had been received from the President of the United States in answer to a resolution submitted by him showing the balances that will remain on the 1st January next of unexpended appropriations of the last session, with the date of each appropriation. Mr. B. moved that an extra number of copies of this document be printed and distributed as follows: five copies to each of the Governors of the several States, and twenty copies to each branch of the Legislatures of the several States.

On this motion a debate ensued, in which it was opposed by Messrs. CALHOUN, HUBBARD, DAVIS, NILES, and STRANGE, and supported by Mr. BENTON; but at the suggestion of Messrs. HUBBARD and STRANGE, Mr. BENTON withdrew that part of the motion which relates to sending copies to the Governors and Legislatures of the several States. The first branch of the motion, which was for the printing of 1000 extra copies of the document, was then carried without a division.

The CHAIR communicated a report from the General Post Office Department, containing estimates of the expenditures for the ensuing year: referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

This being the day set apart for the election of chaplain, the Senate proceeded to ballot for the same; and on the first ballot the Rev. Mr. Goodman was elected, he having 22 votes out of 41 given.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 28, 1836.

Petitions and memorials were presented by—
Mr. BEAN of New Hampshire.

[Mr. BEAN presented the petition of Jediah Skinner, praying for an invalid pension.]

Messrs. ADAMS and PHILLIPS of Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLT of Connecticut.

Messrs. HAZELTINE and GILLET of New York.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey.

Messrs. McKENNAN and GALBRAITH of Pennsylvania.

[Mr. GALBRAITH presented a memorial from citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for an appropriation to improve the Alleghany river from Pittsburgh, in Pennsylvania, to Olean, in the State of New York; referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals. Also, a memorial on the files of the House, from citizens of Pennsylvania, setting forth the great and increasing issues of bank paper money by companies incorporated in the different States, producing fluctuations and confusion in the currency of the country, and leading to conflict among the several States and against the spirit of the constitution of the United States; and praying Congress to inquire into the expediency and propriety of proposing an amendment to the constitution, restricting the incorporation of banking companies hereafter by the States, and limiting such companies in their issues of paper money; also, setting forth that the notes of the Bank of the United States, which had been returned to the bank for redemption, and redeemed, had been re-issued since the expiration of the charter on the 4th of March last, instead of being cancelled; and praying an inquiry by Congress whether any remedy can be devised against such practice upon the Government, as a stockholder in the said bank, and upon the community, having no security for the redemption of such re-issues of the notes of a bank whose charter has expired for that purpose.]

Mr. G. asked the reference of the memorial to a select committee.

Mr. MANN of New York expressed a wish to give his reasons why he should be pleased to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania gratified in his motion, and he therefore hoped the petition would lie over.

Under the rule, the memorial was ordered to lie over till to-morrow.]

Mr. HOWARD of Maryland.

Messrs. McCOMAS, TALIAFERRO, and MERCER, of Virginia.

[Mr. McCOMAS presented the petition of James Boyd, which had been heretofore presented to the Commissioner on Pensions and rejected, praying Congress to grant him a pension. The petition was, on Mr. McC's motion, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

Mr. HAMER of Ohio.

[Mr. HAMER presented the petition of Nancy Egnew, praying compensation for losses sustained during the late war with Great Britain: referred to the Committee of Claims.]

Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois.

[Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois presented the memorial of the General Assembly of Illinois, praying a donation of land to be given to the State to aid in the repair of the road from Shaweetown, by Frankfort, in the State of Illinois, to St. Louis, in Missouri; and on his motion the same was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.]

Mr. LAWLER of Alabama.

Mr. WHITE of Florida.

Mr. P. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Claims, reported a resolution discharging that committee from the further consideration of the case of — Brookes, and referring the same, and the accompanying papers, to the Third Auditor; which was concurred in.

Mr. CUSHMAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill for the relief of Joseph Dashiell: read twice and committed.

MEXICAN BOUNDARY.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill to provide for carrying into effect an article of the treaty of limits between the United States and Mexico: read twice and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs of Francis Jarvis, deceased: read twice and committed.

Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana, from the same Committee, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Dawson, deceased: read twice and committed.

Mr. MERCER, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a bill to authorize certain railroad companies to construct railroads through the Territory of Florida; which was read twice and postponed, on Mr. M's motion, until to-morrow.

Resolutions were then called for in the order of States.

POST OFFICE IN NEW YORK.

Mr. GIDEON LEE of New York submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads inquire into the necessity of erecting, or otherwise procuring, a fire-proof building in the city of New York, for the use of the Post Office Department as a post office.

The resolution having been read;

Mr. GIDEON LEE said he knew well the impropriety of appending an argument to a subject matter on reference to a committee for inquiry, but he desired the House to indulge him in saying a few words in this case.

It is known to this House that an immense correspondence centres in the city of New York; the amount of property enveloped in this correspondence is very great; the bank notes, bills, foreign and domestic, executed and unexecuted contracts, papers emanating from the courts of judicature, and other public documents—and although all in transitu, the aggregate amount always at rest in that office, and liable to conflagration, is incalculable.

It is true that the comparatively isolated position of the present office, renders it more safe than many other locations would be, but by no means secure.

Mr. Speaker, from causes beyond the control or the guidance of the people, that city more than any other has suffered by fire; and I fear the appellation of "the city of fires," which some have been pleased to style it, is not so great or so strained a misnomer as we could wish it to be.

I compute the ownership of the property in that office, by the best data within my reach, to be about one-seventh or one-eighth part in the citizens, and the great balance is owned by the people of all the States, from Louisiana to Maine, from Missouri to Virginia. The loss of that kind of property, gentlemen know as well as I do, is irreparable. No man can be more careful, or more faithful, than Mr. Coddington, the present incumbent there; but no care, no measure, short of a fire proof, will insure security.

The resolution was then concurred in nem diss.

FOREIGN CONSULS.

Mr. VANDERPOEL submitted the following, which was read.

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs inquire into the expediency of abolishing the offices of agent of claims at Paris and London.

Mr. VANDERPOEL said, he had a single word to say in regard to this resolution. It would be remembered that we had for years gone on, and paid to the Consuls at London and Paris each $2000, as agents of claims. He could not learn that there was any law in the statute book to create this office of agent of claims. Although there may, originally, have been some claims of American citizens to require some agency from the Consuls at London and Paris, yet he was not aware that there remained any more claims longer to justify this allowance. At all events, he wanted the thing called by its right name. If you say you will allow to each of these Consuls $2000 per year, as Consuls, be it so; but call them not agents of claims. It would be recollected, that last year we passed an act for the relief of the Consul at London, by which it is said that about $3,500 is annually to be allowed to him for office rent, clerk hire, fuel, &c. This, in addition to his $2000, as agent of claims, and his fees of office; making his income nearly or quite equal to that of your resident minister. He felt it his duty to call the attention of the House to this subject.

EXTENSION OF THE PENSION SYSTEM.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the third section of the act entitled "An act granting half pay to widows or orphans, where their husbands or fathers have died of wounds received in the military service of the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes," approved July 4, 1836, so as to extend the provisions of that section to all widows of officers and soldiers of the war of the revolution whose husbands were entitled a pension, excepting cases of second marriage after the termination of the war.

The resolution having been read, Mr. TAYLOR addressed the House as follows:

Mr. Speaker. Before taking the question on this resolution, I ask the indulgence of the House while I submit a few remarks. I had prepared a resolution, instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of extending the provisions of the act to those widows of officers and soldiers of the war of the revolution, whose marriage took place previous to the close of the war; whereas, the act of the last session gives a pension only to those widows whose marriage took place previous to the expiration of the last term of military service of their husbands; but having received some communications upon the subject, and upon further reflection, I have been induced to alter it in the manner as now presented. I have done so from a deep conviction that if there is justice or propriety in extending the pension system to the widows of pensioners, as now provided by law, there is equal justice and propriety in extending it in the manner proposed; and indeed, sir, I may say there would be great injustice in withholding it.

The act which it is proposed to amend, I believe passed without opposition, or at least with great unanimity. There was manifest in the House a strong disposition to extend the pension system to the aged widows of the soldiers of the revolution; and I am inclined to the opinion that if more time had been allowed, more deliberation bestowed upon the subject, the act would not have been as limited in its provisions as it now is. I believe I may say, without fear of contradiction, that no legislation by Congress meets more decidedly and cordially the approbation of the people of these United States, than does that which extends the liberality, the justice, of this nation to that class who yet linger among us, and who were participants directly, or even indirectly, in the privations, the sufferings, and the sacrifices of the war of the revolution; and I rejoice, sir, that it is so; for it indicates that deep and abiding gratitude which flows from a just sense and due appreciation of the great benefits which they obtained, a cherishing of the principles which they taught, and a veneration and attachment to the institutions which they established. This truly American feeling may well be indulged, and should be gratified, especially as we have so abundantly the means of gratifying it; for while it confers upon the aged and worthy remnant of a race of patriots and heroes some just reward for meritorious services and sacrifices, it cherishes and cultivates those sentiments of respect and attachment to the political doctrines and principles of a purer age, which tend to the security of freedom, and the safety of the Union. And why, sir, have you extended your pension system to the widows of those who were entitled to a pension? It is because they, too, have made sacrifices in the cause of their country; it is because they have endured hardships and encountered dangers for their country's freedom; it is because they have united their fortunes and identified their interests from early life with those who fought your battles. It is because of the encouragement which they gave, and the influence which they exerted, an encouragement which never faltered in the gloomiest period of that war, and an influence which was felt, wherever there was a tented field, a battle-ground, or a soldier to be enlisted for the service. The patriotism, the zeal, ay, and the enthusiasm of that day, was not confined to those by nature constituted to endure the hardships of a soldier's life, but pervaded all classes of society, and was conspicuously manifested by the gentler sex; and no matron or maid in the proudest days of Spartan valor would, as the blush of wounded pride mantled on her cheek, have turned with mere of scorn and indignation from the coward who had basely fled from the defence of his country, than would the American women of that period have turned from him whose treachery or cowardice had thrown disgrace upon him. And this influence was powerful in the success of the war; it animated the heart, it nerved the arm of the soldier, and prompted him to deeds of daring and of valor. But, sir, I need not dwell upon the merits, the influence, and the sacrifices of the American women of revolutionary times; for you have already settled the principle, that the widow of the pensioned soldier of the revolution is entitled to a continuance of that bounty of the Government which her husband enjoyed; but you have, as I humbly conceive, unjustly confined it to those, and those only, whose marriage took place previous to the last military services of their husbands. And, sir, is this fact, the fact of marriage previous to the last military services of the soldier, so important as to settle the question whether the widow is entitled to the pension which her husband enjoyed? Should that fact, I ask, be the test by which you are to determine the justice or the expediency of continuing the pension to the widow? It appears to me not, sir. Neither do I conceive that marriage previous to the close of that war is the just criterion by which this question should be decided. If the wife of the soldier, while he was perilling his life in the service of his country, was suffering at home many and great privations, and participating largely in sympathy, anxiety, and solicitude, for the safety of her husband, and the success of the cause in which he was engaged, is entitled to the inheritance of that annuity which your sense, of right granted her husband while living, how much less worthy this favor is the widow, who, although at that period might have stood in no other relation than that of the affectionate daughter, the anxious sister, of those who were hazarding all in their country's cause, and who, after participating, perhaps, equally in the sufferings peculiar to those times, at the close of the war united her fortune for life with that of the war-worn soldier? or the affianced maid, whose marriage, from motives of prudence, advice of friends, the perils of the times, and anxiety for the cause in which all were engaged, was deferred until patriotism and valor were crowned with success, and peace and tranquillity restored to the country? And yet, by your present law, the one is entitled to a pension, while the others are deprived, and the number of this class is not comparatively small. Sir, those days were not so much days of marrying and giving in marriage, as they were of toil, of suffering, and of bloodshed in a glorious cause; and if the facts could be precisely known, I doubt not it would be found that with those actually engaged in the service of their country, more marriages were consummated soon after the war than during the entire period of the revolution; and yet you deprive the widows of all such of that bounty which you bestow upon the others. Is this equal justice? Is it right?

But, sir, my object is not to discuss the question at this time, but merely to bring the subject before the House, with the hope that the committee will give it their immediate attention, and report a bill in conformity to the suggestions of the resolution.

Mr. STORER remarked, that the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions had had this subject under consideration, and would report a bill meeting the views of the gentleman from New York.

The resolution was then agreed to nem. diss.

Mr. HARD submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for granting to each of the disbanded officers who served in the late war with Great Britain, a quantity of land, according to rank, as a remuneration for sacrifices and services rendered by them in that war.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina opposed the resolution, because it held out a delusive promise to the soldiers of the late war. He thought it entirely inconsistent with the duty which they owed to the people of the country, to grant land to officers according to the terms of this resolution. He asked what claim had these officers upon the Government for a grant of this kind? Were they promised land? or were they induced to believe that a bounty of this kind would be granted to them? There was no promise made, and why hold out this hope to them. He thought they might extend a bounty of this kind to those who were more needy. He thought there were many persons much more deserving on the score of necessity than those officers, and he hoped, if the subject was referred to a committee, the committee would reject it.

Mr. HARD hoped, as this was a resolution simply to inquire, that gentlemen would not oppose it. This subject had been twice favorably received by the House on former occasions, and he trusted that now, when the Treasury was overflowing, and they did not know how to dispose of its surplus money, Government would show its liberality to this meritorious class of citizens.

Mr. MANN thought the officers of the late war as meritorious a body of men as were the officers of any other war. It would be recollected by the House and the country, that Congress acted liberally towards the officers and soldiers of the revolution. He alluded to the legislation in relation to officers of the Virginia line; and said that Congress had granted bounty land to the soldiers of the revolutionary war; but they refused it to the officers of the late war. He did not, however, mean to say that he would be in favor of granting land to those officers; but he did say that he was in favor of an inquiry being made into the propriety of it, so as to give the House all the information which could be obtained. Then it would be time enough to decide on the main question.

Mr. HARDIN remarked, that it was well known that the soldiers of the revolution got remarkably bad pay. They were paid in depreciated money, and to induce them to go into the service, or to remain in it when there, the Virginia line were promised bounty land by the State of Virginia. After the war, Virginia ceded all her public lands to the United States, thereby making herself unable to fulfil her engagements with these soldiers, consequently, Congress passed acts granting recompense to those officers and soldiers. The officers of the late war were paid in a sound and substantial currency, sometimes in gold and silver, sometimes in bank paper, and sometimes in Treasury notes. Besides this, they got additional pay for rations and servants' hire; and hence it was that a major general of the late war managed to draw upwards of six thousand dollars in the course of the year, as Mr. H. could show by documents in the proper Department. He did not then consider that they were under any obligations to those officers. No promise had been made to them—no assurance had ever been given that they should receive bounty lands. Mr. H. concluded by saying, that if they once commenced this system of giving away land, he ventured to say that they would have no trouble in getting rid of all the surplus revenue, and that they need not trouble themselves in inquiring what amount of reduction in the tariff was necessary.

Mr. CRAIG did not think they should hold out any inducement to those officers. He then proceeded to show the difference between the case of those officers and the officers of the Virginia line, and concluded by moving to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. CHAMBERS of Kentucky asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and were—yeas 119, nays 71.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

The hour for proceeding to the orders of the day having arrived,

Mr. GLASCOCK moved a suspension of the rule for the purpose of proceeding with the call for resolutions. Lost, only 71 voting in the affirmative: not two-thirds.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Postmaster General, transmitting an estimate of the sums required for the service of the Post Office Department for the year commencing on the 1st of July, 1837; which, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The following engrossed bill was taken up on its third reading:

A bill supplementary to the act entitled "an act establishing a mint, and regulating the coins of the United States."

The bill having been read, some verbal amendments, moved, by general consent, by Mr. CAMBRELENG, were agreed to, and the bill was passed.

The following engrossed bills were also read the third time and passed:

A bill making appropriations for the suppression of Indian hostilities.

A bill making appropriations for the payment of revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States for the year 1837.

Mr. OWENS then renewed the motion to suspend the rule for the purpose of resuming the call of the States for resolutions, which was agreed to 105 to 32, and resolutions were accordingly called for in the order of States, commencing with New York.

On motion of Mr. TURRILL, it was Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing a survey and accurate chart to be made of the coasts of lakes Ontario and Erie.

On motion of Mr. MANN of N. Y.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of prescribing the effect of judgments of the Courts of the United States, as liens in the several States, and regulating the fees of clerks of the several districts.

On motion of Mr. LEONARD it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to the heirs at law of Captain Elisha Ely, commutation pay and interest for services in the Connecticut line in the war of the revolution.

Mr. LOVE submitted the following resolution, which, under the rule, lies over one day.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to report to this House the survey and examination made of a harbor at the east end of Lake Erie, connecting the present harbors of Buffalo and Black Rock; together with his opinion of the practicability of the construction of said harbor, and of its utility and necessity in regard to the increasing commerce upon that lake.

On motion of Mr. PARKER,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the removal of the obstructions to the navigation of Passaic river, and Newark bay, below the city of Newark, in New Jersey.

On motion of Mr. GILLET,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting, at the seat of Government, a Board of Claims, to receive and examine all claims against the Government, and report thereon to Congress for final adjustment.

On motion of Mr. CHAMBERS, of Penn.

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Library to consider the expediency of reporting a bill providing for the engraving and publication of copies of the various medals struck in relation to important events in the United States, before and since the declaration of independence, with an account or statement of the events or occasion which said medals were designed to commemorate.

Mr. McKENNAN submitted the following resolution, which lies over one day.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to report to this House what sums, if any, have been claimed by the respective disbursing officers of that department, and what sums have been allowed them in the settlement of their accounts for difference of exchange on moneys paid out by them since the 1st of December, 1835, giving the names of the officers, the sums disbursed by each, and the place where the disbursements were made.

On motion of Mr. MANN of Pennsylvania,

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting William Keller, of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, an invalid pension from the time he was wounded in the United States service, during the late war, until the time he was placed on the invalid pension roll, and that his papers on the files of the House be referred to said committee.

On motion of Mr. WHITTESEY of Conn.

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the documents in the case of Robert and Caroline Brooke, heirs of Michael Fenwick, that were replevied from the Third Auditor; and that the legal representatives of said Fenwick have leave to withdraw the same, to be returned to said Auditor.

On motion of Mr. FOWLER, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing the name of Jacob Johnson, of New Jersey, on the pension roll.

On motion of Mr. BEAUMONT,

Resolved, That the petition and documents relative to the claim of the heir of John Lamb, now on the files of this House, be referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion of Mr. HOWARD,

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a naval academy.

Mr. PIERSON submitted the following resolution, which lies over one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to this House a copy of the report of General Barnard, of his examination, with a view to the connection of the river Ohio with the waters of Lake Erie. Also, a copy of the report of Col. Kearney of his survey for a canal from the mouth of Big Beaver, in Pennsylvania, to the mouth of Elk creek, and to the bay of Presque Isle.

Mr. GALBRAITH of Pennsylvania submitted the following joint resolution, which was read, referred to the select committee upon that subject, and ordered to be printed:

JOINT RESOLUTION

To amend the Constitution of the United States, in relation to the election of President and Vice President.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for the ratification of the Legislatures of the several States, agreeably to the fifth article of the Constitution of the United States.

The President and Vice President of the United States shall be chosen by the people of the several States, in manner following: The citizens of each State qualified to vote for members of either branch of the Legislature thereof, shall vote distinctly and separately for a President and Vice President of the United States, one of whom, at least, shall not be a resident of the same State with themselves. The person receiving the greatest number of votes in any State, shall be entitled to the votes of that State, which shall be the number to which such State may be entitled of Senators and Representatives for the time being in Congress, and be called the State votes; and in like manner, the person receiving the greatest number of votes in any State for Vice President, shall be entitled to the State votes of such State.

The Legislature of each State shall designate the proper districts, and places of election, prescribe the manner of conducting the same, the mode of canvassing the votes, and ascertaining the true result of the aggregate vote in the State, for each person voted for, and conveying the same to the Executive of the State, and such other functionaries as the State Legislature shall designate and appoint, to receive and ascertain and decide thereupon. Congress shall determine the day or days on which the election shall take place, which shall be the same throughout all the States, prescribe the manner in which the lists of State votes, when ascertained, shall be made out, certified, and transmitted under the seals of the respective States to the seat of Government of the United States, which shall be directed to the President of the Senate, and such others as Congress may direct; and shall direct and designate the time and manner of giving notice of a new election, when a failure to elect, in the manner hereinafter prescribed, shall occur.

The President of the Senate shall, at such time as Congress may determine, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the State votes shall then be counted. The person having received a majority of the whole number of State votes for President shall be the President. If no person shall have received such majority, a second election by the citizens of the States respectively shall be holden, which shall be limited to the two highest on the list of those voted for at the first election, unless the two next to the highest shall have received an equal number of State votes, or the highest on the list shall have died, or otherwise have become disqualified, in which case the two next highest shall be included in the list to be voted for; which second election shall be conducted, the result ascertained, certified, transmitted, and counted in all respects as in the first instance, and the person having received a majority of the whole number of State votes shall be the President. If no person shall have received such majority, then a third election shall in like manner in all respects take place, and so on as often as an election shall fail, until a choice shall be made by a majority of the whole number of State votes. If no choice be made before the fourth day of March next following the first election, then the Vice President shall act as President, as in case of the death or other disability of the President; and Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of either President [or Vice President,] and declare what officer shall act as President or Vice President until the disability be removed, or the vacancy be supplied by an election by the people.

The person having received a majority of the whole number of State votes for Vice President, shall be the Vice President. If no person shall have received such majority, and if a second election be necessary for a President, then, at such second election, the citizens shall vote again for Vice President, limited to the two highest on the list of persons voted for at the first election, in all respects as in the second election for a President. If no person shall have received a majority of the whole number of State votes for Vice President, and a third election be necessary for President, the citizens shall vote in the same manner at such third election for a Vice President.

If no second election be necessary for President, or whenever it may occur that an election for President has been effected, and no person shall have received a majority of the whole number of State votes for President, then from the two highest of the list of those voted for, with the exception hereinbefore provided in the case of the President, the Senate shall choose the Vice President. A quorum for that purpose, shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary for a choice.

The first election under the foregoing provisions, shall take place in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty, and after the expiration of the term of four years, commencing on the 4th of March, 1841, no person elected to the office of President or Vice President, shall be eligible to the same office for more than one term; which shall thereafter be six years, and no longer.

Mr. GARLAND submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury communicate to this House, if within his power, the dividends and surpluses, which were declared by, and the surpluses and contingent fund remaining in, the several banks in which the public money is deposited for the years 1833, 1834, 1835 and 1836 severally.

Mr. GILLET submitted the following amendment: "And that he also communicate the expenses of said banks for each of the said years."

Mr. HARLAN submitted the following amendment: "And that he state also whether the salary of an agent at the seat of the General Government compose a part of the expenses of said banks; the name of the agent, and the several sums paid to him by said institutions respectively."

Pending the consideration of the above amendment,

The House adjourned.

SELECT COMMITTEE.

Select Committee to consider all matters touching the public buildings and public grounds, in the city of Washington:

Mr. WARD of New York.

JARVIS of Maine.

LINCOLN of Massachusetts.

ASH of Pennsylvania.

PETTINGREW of North Carolina.

LUCAS of Virginia.

DAWSON of Georgia.

[In our paper of Tuesday, the 27th instant, it is stated that Mr. LAWRENCE presented a petition of Nathaniel Goddard, praying for a pension. This is an error. The petition referred to was from Nathaniel Goddard and others, and prays for the remission and refunding the forfeiture of the ship Ariadne and her cargo, innocently and unwittingly incurred several years since.]

[Mr. WARDWELL presented a petition of Tabitha Bosworth, praying for a pension on account of the services of her late husband, Samuel Bosworth, a revolutionary soldier.

Mr. REYNOLDS of New York presented a memorial of Paul James, of the county of Cortland, in said State, a revolutionary soldier, praying for a pension.

Mr. RUSSELL presented a petition of Lewis Hatch, of the State of New York, a revolutionary soldier, praying for a pension; also the petition of Samuel Weeks, of the State of New York, a revolutionary soldier, praying for an increase of his pension.]

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, DEC. 29, 1836.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Andrew Jackson, jr. his Secretary, enclosing a report from the Secretary of the Navy, made in compliance with the resolution of the 26th instant; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LINN presented the petition of a number of the citizens of Wisconsin, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a harbor, and the improvement of ——— river in Wisconsin: referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORRIS presented additional documents in support of the claim of Col. George F. Strother; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Petitions were also presented by Messrs. GRUNDY, TOMLINSON, and HUBBARD.

ADMISSION OF MICHIGAN INTO THE UNION.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the message of the President on the subject had been referred, reported a bill to provide for the admission of the State of Michigan into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and on motion of Mr. G. and by unanimous consent, the bill was read the first and second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. G. having having asked that the bill might be read a third time;

Mr. EWING rose and remarked, that it was rather a strange request to ask the third reading of the bill now, without having first given the Senate an opportunity of examining the bill, and the documents which accompanied it.

Mr. CALHOUN had not looked much into the question; but assuming the facts to be correctly stated in the document which had been presented to the Senate, relative to the last convention held in Michigan, he must say that they presented questions of the gravest character for the consideration of Congress. There were facts and principles involved in this matter, which required the gravest examination and deliberation of the Senate, before it agreed to the admission of Michigan into the Union. He was sincerely desirous to look into the facts, and anxious to weigh the important principles which they embraced. With the consent of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, he would move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed to this day week.

Mr. GRUNDY was desirous that as short a time as possible should be named for the consideration of the subject. Every Senator knew that the deposit of the public money was to be made on the 1st of January; and therefore, if Michigan were admitted into the Union, she would certainly be entitled to her share of the deposits. Well, if the Senate postponed the consideration of the bill to this day week, and it should afterwards pass at an early day, it would be impossible for the Secretary of the Treasury to carry the provision in the bill into effect; therefore this was the strongest reason why the Senate should act promptly on the subject.

The facts in relation to Michigan were very plain and clear, though no doubt gentlemen might differ in judgment respecting them. Congress passed a bill in June last, declaring that, upon certain conditions, (prescribed in the act,) and upon the President of the United States issuing his proclamation, Michigan should be admitted into the Union. The people of Michigan called a convention, and the act of Congress not specifying in what way or manner the convention should be called, the Legislature passed an act giving authority for its being held. The convention accordingly met in September, but dissented to the conditions of admission. After some time had elapsed, and more reflection had been given to the matter, the people, through their primary assemblies, called a convention, and that convention gave their assent to the propositions contained in the act of Congress. This was on the 14th of December. It would be seen by the documents laid before the Senate, that there were between five and six thousand votes given for the delegates composing the first convention, and for the last there were no less than from eight to nine thousand affirmative votes. This was about as fair a statement as could be furnished on the subject of those proceedings.

Now the question was certainly open as to the validity of these proceedings, and respecting them different opinions might be formed; but as to the facts, there could be no great contrariety. It would appear that at the first convention there was a majority of the people who dissented; but at the last there was an overwhelming majority in favor of accepting the terms of admission. The election for members of the General Assembly and for the delegates of the convention, showed conclusively that the people accepted the conditions of the act of Congress.

These were the facts, and whenever it should become necessary, he would give his views as to what ought to be the effect of these acts of the people of Michigan upon the legislation of Congress. He hoped the Senator from South Carolina would not insist upon his motion to postpone the subject.

Mr. MORRIS observed that justice to himself, as one of the committee that had reported this bill, required him to say that he did not entirely concur in the preamble. He had no doubt but Michigan ought to be admitted; but he thought that the preamble of the act to admit her was incorrect as to facts. The chairman of the committee (Mr. Grundy) had well stated that Michigan was required by the act of Congress of the last session, to give her assent to the condition prescribed by it, before she could be admitted into the Union; and the fact of such assent having been given, was to be made known by a proclamation by the President of the United States. That proclamation had not been made; and the question arose, was the Senate competent to decide whether such assent had been given within the meaning of the act? The act provided that the assent was to be given by a convention called for the express purpose of so giving it; and a convention was accordingly called for that purpose by an act of the Territorial Legislature. But we find, said Mr. M., that the convention thus called refused to give the required assent, and the fact of such refusal was officially communicated to the President of the United States. Some time after this, however, another convention was held without any authority of law whatever, and by this convention the necessary assent was given.

The passage of the bill for the admission of Michigan into the Union, under these circumstances, he agreed with the Senator from South Carolina, involved questions of the highest magnitude, and ought to be well considered; but he took this occasion to say that the act of this convention was without any authority whatever, and the Senate therefore ought to proceed in reference to it, without considering whether it had been held or not. He had thought when the act of the last session was passed, and he thought now, that the condition required of Michigan, that she should give her assent to the established boundary, was an improper one, and ought not to have been made. He considered the question of boundary as settled; and as one of the representatives of Ohio, he wished Michigan to be admitted without any reference to it. Although the preamble attached to this bill was only a key to it, and formed no part of its legislative character, yet, being calculated to mislead the public mind, he wished it struck out; and he should therefore, at the proper time, make a motion to that effect.

Mr. CALHOUN said that no one could feel more anxious than he did for the admission of Michigan, and he was desirous, too, that she should have her full share of the deposits. And if, after this question should have been disposed of, it was too late for the Secretary of the Treasury to give her the share of the surplus, to which she would be entitled, some means would be devised by Congress to effect that object. It was not his wish to delay her admission into the Union; and, in order to meet the honorable Senator's wishes, he would change his motion to Tuesday. According to the statement which the Senator had just made, he thought that every one must see there was at the bottom of this matter something of the greatest importance. And, if his impression was not incorrect, (for he did not wish to commit himself at this early stage,) there were principles involved in this question of as great importance as those connected with the deposit act; indeed he would rather see almost the withholding of the deposits from all the States, than the admission of Michigan at this time. He wished time for reflection, in order that he might be able to vote conscientiously for the admission of Michigan.

Mr. GRUNDY said that in draughting the bill the committee took a view of the sentiments and opinions entertained by the gentleman from Ohio, (Mr. Morris,) who was also a member of the committee. It was so understood by the committee, and the bill was drawn accordingly; that if a majority of the Senate should concur in its provisions, no regard was to be paid to what had taken place in the first convention; and a majority of the committee deemed it proper to insert the preamble in the bill.

But he (Mr. G.) had always been of the opinion that Congress fixed the boundary by admitting her into the Union, and that she could not afterwards set up any claim. However, recollecting that there was an old, warm, and inveterate controversy between Ohio and Michigan, he did bind Michigan to the boundary, so that she should not have an opportunity of setting up a claim in respect to the northern boundary. Now, the only effect of striking out the preamble, was to leave the matter more open to controversy than if it were retained. As Michigan has given her assent to the act of Congress, and if Congress should agree to admit her, he doubted whether any lawyer would not say that Michigan was estopped thereafter from setting up any claim as to boundary. Now, it was upon that ground that he had thought it material to retain the substance of what is written in the preamble. He should vote for its being retained. He would move that the further consideration of the subject be postponed to Monday.

Mr. BUCHANAN was perfectly aware that this was not the proper occasion for discussing the present question, nor was it his purpose now to enter into the discussion; but as other gentlemen had thought proper to express their opinions, he asked the indulgence of the Senate while he stated his. He did not, by any means, consider this so difficult a question as gentlemen seemed to imagine, though it was always a grave and important question to admit a new State into the Union. The language of Congress in the act of the last session, referred to by the Senator from Ohio, was very plain; and he, for one, expected that the President would have issued his proclamation immediately upon receiving the proceedings of the second convention, declaring the assent of Michigan to the condition required by the third section of that act.

He asked gentlemen to remark the peculiar phraseology of the act of Congress. It did not require that the convention to be held for the purpose of giving the required assent, should be assembled by virtue of any act of the Legislature of Michigan. The language was broad and general. As soon as this assent should be given by "a convention of delegates elected by the people of said State," the President was required to announce the same by proclamation; and immediately thereafter, Michigan was to become one of the States of this Union. The act (Mr. B. said) did not prescribe that the Legislature of Michigan should previously authorize the convention which was to give the assent required; it would, perhaps, have been improper to do so, because the refusal of the Legislature to act, might have prevented the people of Michigan from coming into the Union.

Here Mr. B. read the third section of the act of Congress of the last session. Now he would undertake to say, that under the circumstances of this case, it was perfectly competent and proper for the people of Michigan to hold a convention in their primary capacity, for the purpose of agreeing to the fundamental condition required of them. The only question to be determined by Congress, was, Has a clear majority of the people of that State, by a convention elected by themselves, given the assent required by the act of Congress? This, it was plain to his mind, had been done. He understood that about two thousand votes more had been given in favor of this convention, than had been given on both sides of the question for the first one, which refused to assent to the conditions of the act. This was his understanding of the matter: and if the people of Michigan had made a half a dozen unfortunate attempts to come into the Union, yet this convention, called by a very large majority of the people, equally entitled them to come in as if it had been their first attempt. In this respect the act of Congress contained no limitation. He did not intend (Mr. B. said) to enter into an argument at this time. These were his opinions, and he was prepared to enforce them at the proper time.

Mr. EWING observed that the last convention was unauthorized, and he concurred with his colleague (Mr. Morris) in his views of the preamble of the bill. He (Mr. E.) had not examined the bill nor the papers accompanying it; but whatever advantages might result, or seemed to result, to the people of Ohio by retaining the preamble, or however completely it might have stopped the claim of Michigan to territory, still he was not disposed that it should remain there, because it was an untrue recital. Although it might be adopted by Congress, yet he could look upon it in no other light than as a mere fiction. Now, with regard to the proviso to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania had referred, or that a convention shall be called by the people of Michigan, and if it be shown that a majority of them are willing to accept the conditions upon which Michigan can be admitted, then they had done all that could be required, and had complied with the act of Congress on the subject. He (Mr. E.) denied it; and contended that, inasmuch as the people had risen up en masse, not having the legal and proper authority to meet in convention, they had not fulfilled the intent and real meaning of the act of Congress. The whole of the proceedings connected with the last convention were anomalous, and contrary to the act passed on the subject. Now, what evidence had the Senate of the organization of the convention? of the organization of the popular assemblies who appointed their delegates to that convention? None on earth. Who they were that met and voted, we had no information. Who gave the notice? and for what did the people receive that notice? To meet and elect? What evidence was there that the convention acted according to law? Were the delegates sworn? and if so, they were extra-judicial oaths, and not binding upon them. The Senate were not told who voted; but it was informed that 2,000 more voted than on the former occasion. Were the votes counted? In fact, it was not a proceeding under the forms of law, for they were totally disregarded. He had no objection to the admission of Michigan; he had no contest with her; but still he did not wish that a fraud should be practised on the people of Michigan.

Mr. MORRIS observed that the position assumed by the Senator from Pennsylvania was, that all that was required of Michigan was the assent of her people in their primary assemblies. The gentleman went further, and said that though there might be many attempts made to obtain this assent which failed, yet the people of Michigan might have continued their efforts until they obtained it. This doctrine did away with all our constitutions and laws, and threw us back on the original elements of society. The people of Michigan were bound by a written constitution, and could only proceed in a particular way; yet this construction of the gentleman did away with that, and went to show that they might, in their primary assemblies, abolish their constitution, and act as if they had none.

If this position was correct, how was the consent of Michigan to the condition required by Congress to be shown? Was the county of A to meet to-day and give its assent, and the county of B to meet on another day and do the same thing? And if Michigan can do this, another State can do it, and then the Government of this country was not a Government of constitution and laws, but dissolved itself into the original elements and became a Government of power and of might. This certainly could not be the sense of the Senate of the United States. As to the act of the Territorial Legislature calling the convention, no man even in Michigan ever thought it unnecessary. No; it was passed, and the convention was held in pursuance of it, and their proceedings were forwarded to the President under the authority of law. But another convention had been held without the authority of law, the proceedings of which having been sent to the President, he very properly did not issue his proclamation, but submitted the whole subject to the consideration of Congress. At the proper time, Mr. M. said, he should move to strike out the preamble from the bill, that he might place his vote on those sure and safe grounds which he deemed essential to the liberties of the country.

Mr. BUCHANAN regretted that, in expressing a mere general opinion, he had been misunderstood. The last gentleman up, (Mr. Morris,) in his opening remarks, said he was open to conviction on the subject. He thought that, in the Senator's last remarks, he had taken such strong ground, that it would take the eloquence of an angel to convince him, or shake his opinion. He had by some means or other discovered that he (Mr. B.) was a great latitudinarian, and that the principles which he had stated, (and he did not argue them, nor would he at that time,) should they prevail, would take the law out of the hands of the ministers of justice, and permit the people to administer it according to their will and pleasure. Now, he denied, that any such inference could be drawn from what he stated. By what authority was the first convention held? Has the constitution of Michigan given any authority to the Legislature to pass a law on the subject? According to his recollection of it, no power whatever of the kind was contained in it. Indeed, he felt confident it gave no such power. Why, then, did the Legislature pass a law? From the necessity of the case—no other cause. Michigan was acting as a sovereign State, and Congress were treating with her on the subject of her admission into the Union. The Legislature of Michigan, under the constitution of that State, had no power to pass the law, but for the purposes of convenience she had passed it.

The act of Congress does not assign the Legislature of Michigan any part in this matter. The sovereign people of Michigan, in this particular, had a right to do as they pleased; and if the Legislature refused to legislate on the subject, the people in their primary assemblies had a right to make their intentions known to the people of the United States. He admitted that the people of Ohio especially, and of every other State, had a right to insist that the fundamental condition of admission should be fairly complied with. This was necessary for the final settlement of the boundary question.

There was, however, sufficient proof that a majority of the people in their sovereign character had concurred in the terms of admission. Let them have proceeded in what manner they would, it was evident to the Congress of the United States, that a majority had assented to the conditions on which Michigan is entitled to become a State, not as a matter of favor, but as a matter of right.

He repeated that he would not be drawn into an argument on the merits of the question at this time.

Mr. BENTON believed that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee had consented that this subject should go over until Monday; but it was very apparent that part of the Senate was ready to go on with the debate, and could not even wait until that day. Now he, Mr. B., was as ready as any of them, and was willing to go on then, or on Monday, as gentlemen pleased. The subject of Michigan's admission into the Union had been before the Senate for upwards of five years, and he apprehended that no question relating to it could come up, but what had been already sufficiently discussed. What he rose, however, principally to observe, was, that this State of Michigan, which had the right by her population to be admitted three or four years ago, had been met, and fought inch by inch from the first movement until the last, when the Senate at the last session determined to sit the question out, and the act for her admission was passed late at night. The first movement was to cut her off from the original law by which she was to hold a convention. This was fought off from year to year. When the ground was taken, that for her to come into the Union without a previous act of Congress, was revolutionary; and lastly, this State, which ought to have been admitted years and years ago, was fought off at the last session until late at night, her friends in the Senate bound themselves by a solemn league and covenant not to rise from their seats until the act admitting her should be passed. Now, the present bill was to be put off until Monday, although gentlemen could not restrain themselves from bursting out with their opposition to the bill.

So far from putting off this bill, (Mr. B. said,) they had occasion in these short days, when the sun was at its most southern declination, to sit at night, in order to give gentlemen time to say all that in their fulness they seemed prepared with, tracing the rights of man from the present time down to the days of Adam, in order to see how primary and original assemblies were formed. He wanted gentlemen to tell him how the first convention was ever held by which the first Government was ever formed. As the bill was to be postponed until Monday, he would tell gentlemen that he should come to the Senate on that day prepared, with his cloak around him, to camp on the ground until Michigan was in the Union.

The question was then taken, and the bill was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Monday next; and, on motion of Mr. CALHOUN, ordered to be printed.

The CHAIR communicated a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to the resolution submitted by Mr. BENTON on the 26th instant; which, on motion of Mr. BENTON, was ordered to be printed.

The resolution submitted by Mr. CALHOUN, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for certain statements relative to the expenditures of the present year, was considered and adopted.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to which had been referred the following bills from the House, reported the first with an amendment, and the two last without amendment:

An act supplementary to the act to establish the Mint, and to regulate the coins of the United States.

The act making appropriations for the suppression of Indian hostilities; and

The act making appropriations for the payment of the revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the same committee, to which had been referred the bill for the relief of Elisha Towns, reported the same without amendment; and, on motion of Mr. W. the bill was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. LINN submitted the following resolutions, which lie on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the District Judge of the United States Court for the District of Missouri.

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation to compensate Augustus Jones, Marshal of the State of Missouri, for his extraordinary and successful exertions, and the services rendered the public, in detecting and breaking up certain bands of counterfeiters who were flooding the country with spurious money.

SPECIAL ORDER.

The Senate then took up the resolution submitted by Mr. EWING of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order in relation to payments at the United States Land Offices.

Mr. MORRIS, who had the floor, yielded it to

Mr. SOUTHARD, who addressed the Senate in a speech of great length, in opposition to the resolution and amendments; but, without concluding, gave way to

Mr. RIVES, who modified his amendment so as to make it read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. RIVES to the "Resolution to rescind the Treasury order of the eleventh day of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, and to make uniform the currency receivable for the public revenue," viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That hereafter, all sums of money accruing or becoming payable to the United States, whether for customs, public lands, taxes, debts, or otherwise, shall be collected and paid only in the legal currency of the United States, or in the notes of banks which are payable and paid on demand in the said legal currency, under the following restrictions and conditions in regard to such notes; that is, from and after the passage of this resolution, the notes of no banks which shall issue bills or notes of a less denomination than $5, (five dollars,) shall be received in payment of the public dues; from and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and thirty-nine, the notes of no banks which shall issue bills or notes of a less denomination than $10, (ten dollars,) shall be so receivable; and from and after the first of July, eighteen hundred and forty-one, the like prohibition shall be extended to the notes of all the banks issuing bills or notes of a less denomination than $20 (twenty dollars;) Provided, however, That no notes shall be taken in payment by the collectors or receivers, which the banks in which they are to be deposited shall not, under the supervision and control of the Secretary of the Treasury, agree to pass to the credit of the United States as cash.

The Senate then adjourned over to Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

THURSDAY, December 29, 1836.

The first business in order was the consideration of a memorial, moved by Mr. GALBRAITH on yesterday, to be referred to a select committee. The memorial was from citizens of Pennsylvania, setting forth the great and increasing issues of bank paper money by companies incorporated in the different States, producing fluctuations and confusion in the currency of the country, and leading to conflict among the several States, and against the spirit of the Constitution of the United States; and praying Congress to inquire into the expediency and propriety of proposing an amendment to the constitution, restricting the incorporation of banking companies hereafter by the States, and limiting such companies in their issues of paper money; also, setting forth that the notes of the Bank of the United States, which had been returned to the bank for redemption, and redeemed, had been re-issued since the expiration of the charter on the 4th of March last, instead of being cancelled; and praying an inquiry by Congress whether any remedy can be devised against such practice upon the Government, as a stockholder in the said bank, and upon the community, having no security for the redemption of such re-issues of the notes of a bank whose charter has expired for that purpose.

Mr. GALBRAITH addressed the House at some length, in support of his motion for a select committee.

Mr. LINCOLN opposed it on the ground, that it would be an interference with an institution owing its existence to State authority. If sent to any committee, however, the proper course would be to send it to the select committee raised on amendments to the constitution. He thought there was more intended than met the eye at first view; and that this movement was designed (not by the gentleman himself, but, perhaps, by the twenty or thirty individuals who had sent the memorial there,) to operate upon, or in concert with, the investigation about commencing on the same subject, in the Legislature of Pennsylvania.

Mr. L. concluded by moving to refer it to the Committee on the Constitution.

Mr. HARPER thought that the direction intended to be given to this petition by the gentleman from Massachusetts, was the proper direction; because it involved questions in relation to an amendment of the constitution, restraining banking institutions in their issues of bank paper, and the increase of bank paper throughout the various States. The investigation asked was highly improper.

Mr. MANN of New York had no idea, when he stated on yesterday that he wished to have his friend from Pennsylvania gratified, that this subject would create a debate taking so wide a range as that which the House had witnessed. He thought the gentleman from Pennsylvania should have an opportunity, as chairman of a select committee on this subject, to resist what he deemed an encroachment upon the rights of his constituents. He perceived, however, that there were many members who took occasion to hang a speech upon every subject of this kind which came up. In relation to the banking system, he inquired why it was that for the last ten or fifteen years the community had been constantly kept in a feverish condition? It was in consequence of the fluctuation in the currency of the country. He hoped this petition would meet with the same common respect which all other petitions met with, and be referred to a committee, so that the time of the House would not now be consumed in debating the subject.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island was opposed to referring subjects of this kind to a select committee, when they appropriately belonged to standing committees of the House. If this course of referring subjects to select committees be adopted, all the business belonging to the standing committees of the House would be taken away from them. He did not think this was the proper place to bring a subject of this kind. The people of Pennsylvania, if they have been imposed upon by the Bank of the United States, should commence the work at home, at the ballot box, and not bring it before Congress. He was opposed to all banking institutions, but he did not consider this the appropriate place to bring a subject of this kind. Mr. F. concluded by moving to refer the petition to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. DENNY had heard no good reason why this memorial should be sent to a select committee, for that House had no right to interfere, in any way, with the opinions of the press. They might as well be called upon to put down particular presses, because their influence might produce a political change in the districts of certain gentlemen. If any disposition was made of the memorial, let it be sent to the committee indicated by the gentleman from Massachusetts; though he thought it had better be laid on the table. That House had no right to go into an examination of the new Bank of the United States, an institution created by a State, and utterly beyond the control of Congress.

Mr. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania did not believe the memorial merited being sent to any committee. It had been dug out of the tomb of the Capulets, where it should be sent again. It was strange that, if the grievance complained of was so severely felt, the only knowledge that House had of it was from these twenty-eight individuals. If, however, it was sent to any committee, it should be sent to the Committee on the Constitution, but still be maintained, that the subject was beyond the power and jurisdiction of Congress. Mr. C. concluded by moving to lay the memorial on the table.

Mr. VANDERPOEL asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and were—yeas 84, nays 112, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Chilton Allen, Heman Allen, Ashley, Bailey, Bond, Borden, Bunch, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, Campbell, Carter, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chetwood, Childs, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Clark, Corwin, Crane, Darlington, Deberry, Denny, Dunlap, Elmore, Evans, Graham, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Hard, Hardin, Harlan, Harper, S. S. Harrison, Hazeltine, Heister, Hoar, Hopkins, Howell, Hunt, Huntsman, W. Jackson, Jenifer, Henry Johnson, Lawler, Lawrence, Lay, Luke Lea, Lewis, Lincoln, Lyon, Sampson Mason, Maury, McCarty, McComas, McKennan, Mercer, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phillips, Pickens, Pinckney, Potts, Reed, Rencher, Richardson, William B. Shepard, Shields, Slade, Sloane, Spangler, Standefer, Storer, Taliaferro, Waddy Thompson, Vinton, Washington, White, Elisha Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, and Sherrod Williams—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Ash, Barton, Beale, Bean, Beaumont, Black, Bouldin, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chavey, Chapman, Chapin, Cleveland, Coles, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Doubleday, Efner, Everett, Fairfield, Fowler, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, James Garland, Gillet, Glascock, Granger, Haley, J. Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, A. G. Harrison, Haynes, Henderson, Holt, Howard, Hubley, Huntington, Ingham, Janes, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Gideon Lee, Thomas Lee, Leonard, Logan, Love, Loyall, Lucas, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Martin, William Mason, McKay, McKim, McLene, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parker, Parks, Patterson, Franklin Pierce, Dutee J. Pearce, Peyton, Phelps, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Russell, Schenck, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Speight, Steele, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turner, Turrill, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Webster, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Yell, and Young—112.

So the house refused to lay the memorial on the table.

Mr. VANDERPOEL then addressed the House in support of the reference proposed by Mr. Galbraith, and on the subject generally.

Mr. EVERETT said he had voted against laying this petition on the table, with a view of moving a reference of the different subjects in this petition to different committees. The petition in itself was not entitled to very great consideration. He considered it in the same light, as if the gentleman from Pennsylvania had submitted a resolution of inquiry on the subject. He had nothing to do with that part of it relating to the particular politics of Pennsylvania, but he considered this subject ought to go a special committee, as the gentleman from New York, who last addressed the House, had shown conclusively that it ought not to go to the select committee to consider the amendments to the constitution.

Mr. E. said as there had been for a long time before the country various propositions in relation to the currency, he for one was desirous that the administration might have an opportunity of laying before the House and the country their views upon the subject. He did not consider that this subject was brought up merely upon the responsibility of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; he thought it had been the subject of conference with other friends of the party now in power; and he hoped a committee would be raised entirely favorable to the views of the administration, that the public might know the grounds which that party took. From the measures adopted by them heretofore, it was to be supposed that there was some settled plan in relation to the currency; and, if so, he wished to have the country know what it was. If it was the opinion of the administration that the States had no power to make issues of a particular kind of currency, let them show their hand.

The gentleman from New York gave as a reason why this subject should not be referred to the committee appointed to consider the amendments proposed to the constitution, that it was a humbug committee; but that gentleman gave a better reason, when he said that that committee was not raised with a view to that particular object. Mr. E. wished a committee appointed to consider this special subject, which would bring in a report containing the views of the administration on this particular subject. They had had general talk enough upon this subject, and it was of the utmost importance to the country to know what to rely upon. If it was the policy of the administration to make war upon the State banks, let it be known. Let it be known what course they meant to pursue. He had voted against laying the petition on the table for this purpose, and he would now vote to send it to a special committee, to see what would be the views of the administration on the subject. If they meant to introduce specie instead of the present currency, he wished to see the plan on which they were to carry it into execution.

Mr. HANNEGAN thought this matter had occupied quite as much of the time of the House as it merited in this incipient stage, and he therefore demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER explained that the main question would be on the two motions to refer, and would be first taken on referring to the Committee of Ways and Means; and should that not prevail, the question would then be taken on the reference to a select committee.

The motion for the previous question was seconded by 85 to 75; and on the question, "Shall the main question be now put,"

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and were—yeas 108, nays 84.

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Barton, Beale, Black, Booke, Boon, Borden, Bouldin, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Bunch, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chavey, Chapin, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Davis, Doubleday, Dunlap, Efner, Fairfield, Fowler, French, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, J. Garland, Gillet, Glascock, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Albert G. Harrison, Henderson, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Laporte, Joshua Lee, Thomas Lee, Leonard, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Martin, Wm. Mason, Moses Mason, McCarty, McKim, McLene, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parker, Parks, Patterson, Franklin Pierce, D. J. Pearce, Phelps, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, R. play, Schenck, Seymour, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Speight, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Turner, Turrill, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Wardwell, Webster, Weeks, T. T. Whittlesey, and Yell—108.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Ash, Ashley, Bailey, Bell, Bond, Briggs, William B. Calhoun, Campbell, Carter, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chetwood, Childs, N. H. Claiborne, Clark, Corwin, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Dawson, Deberry, Denny, Elmore, Evans, Everett, Forester, Graham, Granger, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Harlan, Harper, S. S. Harrison, Hazeltine, Heister, Hoar, Howell, James, Jenifer, Henry Johnson, Lawler, Lawrence, Lay, L. Lea, Lewis, Lincoln, Sampson Mason, Maury, McComas, McKay, McKennan, Mercer, Pearson, Pettigrew, Peyton, Phillips, Pickens, Pinckney, Potts, Reed, Rencher, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Russell, A. H. Shepperd, Slade, Sloane, Spangler, Standefer, Steele, Storer, Taliaferro, Waddy Thompson, Underwood, Vinton, Washington, White, E. Whittlesey, L. Williams, and Young—84.

So the House determined that the main question be now put, being the reference to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. EVERETT asked for a division of the question, so as to embrace only the first paragraph of the memorial.

The question being so divided, and taken separately, the House refused to commit both branches to the Committee of Ways and Means, but agreed to the motion to refer the whole subject to a select committee without a count.

The SPEAKER laid before the House two Executive communications, viz:

1. From the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House of the 10th instant, calling for statements in regard to the amount of suspended debts, in consequence of the act for the relief of the sufferers by fire in the city of New York; which, on motion of Mr. GILLET, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

2. From the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution of the 26th instant, directing that officer to communicate the report of the Naval Commissioner, who had been recently engaged in an examination of the navy yard at Pensacola; which, on motion of Mr. WHITE of Florida, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. LOVE, the vote of the House, by which the following resolution, submitted yesterday by his colleague was rejected, was reconsidered, and the consideration of the resolution postponed till Wednesday next:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for granting to each of the disbanded officers who served in the late war with Great Britain, a quantity of land, according to rank, as a remuneration for sacrifices and services rendered by them in that war.

On motion,

The House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

FRIDAY, December 30, 1836.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE.

The following message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his private Secretary, Andrew Jackson, jr. Esq.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 23d instant, I herewith transmit a report from the Secretary of State, to whom the resolution was referred, containing all the information upon the subject which he is now able to communicate.

(Signed) ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28, 1836.

[The report and papers referred to were in relation to the Smithsonian bequest.]

On motion of Mr. CHAPIN, the message and accompanying documents were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The following message was also received, at the same time, from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit, herewith, a communication from the Secretary of War ad interim, with certain accompanying papers from the Engineer Department, required to complete the annual report from that department.

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1836.

Petitions and memorials were presented by

Messrs. PARKS and EVANS of Maine.

Mr. CUSHMAN of New Hampshire.

Mr. TOUCEY of Connecticut.

Mr. SLADE of Vermont.

Messrs. GIDEON LEE, HARD, WARDWELL, GILLET, RUSSELL, and HUNTINGTON, of New York.

[Mr. GIDEON LEE presented the petition of Deposest Manice, praying for the return of duties paid by him in the year 1833.]

Also, the petition of A. Tieman & Co. manufacturers of colors, praying for relief from the onerous duty on sugar of lead, which commodity forms the basis of their manufacture.]

Messrs. HENDERSON and HARRISON of Pennsylvania.

Messrs. HOWARD and JENIFER of Maryland.

Mr. MORGAN of Virginia.

Messrs. DAWSON and GLASCOCK of Georgia.

[Mr. DAWSON presented a petition from certain citizens of Darien, in the State of Georgia, on the subject of the port of entry at Brunswick, in that State; which, on Mr. D.'s motion, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.]

[Mr. GLASCOCK presented the memorial of B. Cullars, praying Congress to inquire into the expediency and propriety of amending the constitution of the United States in relation to the currency; which was referred to the select committee on that subject.]

Messrs. UNDERWOOD, HARLAN, and R. M. JOHNSON, of Kentucky.

[On motion of Mr. HARLAN, Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Martha McKee, on the files of the House, be referred to the Committee of Claims.]

Messrs. CAVE JOHNSON and CARTER of Tennessee.

Messrs. BOND, PATTERSON, and T. WEBSTER, of Ohio.

Mr. JOHNSON of Louisiana.

Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois.

[On motion of Mr. REYNOLDS, all the memorials, petitions, and other documents, relating to the National road in Illinois and Missouri, which were on file, were referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.]

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri.

[Mr. HARRISON presented the petition of James Duncan, for a pension; also the petition of Richard Brannin, for compensation for Indian depredations.]

Mr. WHITE of Florida.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, of Ohio, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Daniel P. Patterson; which was read twice, and committed.

Mr. HARRISON, of Penn. from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of John Midwinter; read twice, and committed.

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase out the stocks in the Bank of the United States belonging to the navy pension fund, and for other purposes; read twice, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Erastus Pierson;

Also, a bill for the relief of William Smith; both of which were severally read twice and committed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill for the relief of Thomas H. Perkins, of Boston; read twice and committed.

Mr. McKIM, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill for the relief of Asa Armington and others; read twice and committed.

Mr. CORWIN, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill to provide for continuing the construction and repairs of certain roads for the year 1837; read twice and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GILLET, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House a survey of the bar and obstructions to the navigation of the Passaic river, below the city of Newark, in the State of New Jersey, made by Lieutenant Commander G. Geinley, together with his plans and estimates, for the removal of the obstructions to the navigation of said river.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to this House the survey, plan, and estimate for the improvement of the mouth of Black river, in the county of Jefferson, in the State of New York.

The resolution having been read, Mr. GILLET asked for its consideration at that time, but objection being made, it lies over one day under the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Kentucky, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the benefit of John Curran: read twice and committed.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Thomas King: read twice and committed.

Mr. HOAR, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of William Collins: read twice and committed.

Mr. DOUBLEDAY, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to Benjamin F. West: read twice and committed.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of certain claimants of land between the Rio Hondo and Saline rivers: read twice and committed.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to change the name of the collection district of Dighton, in the State of Massachusetts, to Fall river; which was read twice, and, on motion of Mr. P. ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. WARDWELL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill extending the provisions of the act supplementary to the act entitled an Act for the relief of the surviving officers and soldiers of the revolution, passed June the 7th, 1832; read twice and committed.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, under instructions from the Committee of Ways and Means, moved for the printing of the estimates of appropriation for carrying the provisions of the mint bill into effect; which was agreed to.

Mr. CAMBRELENG gave notice that some time in the course of next week he should ask the indulgence of the House to take up and consider some annual appropriation bills.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill granting a pension to Samuel J. Smith: read twice and committed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Louisiana,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the causes of the frequent failure of the mails between New Orleans and Mobile, and into the expediency of providing for a more speedy and certain transportation of the said mails, and of removing the evils arising from the irregularities in the arrival of the mails in New Orleans.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina asked the general consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands inquire into the expediency of prohibiting by law the purchase of lands at auction with a view to forfeit them, and afterwards to obtain them at the Government price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Objection being made,

Mr. WILLIAMS moved a suspension of the rules; and, upon this motion, called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and were—yeas 154, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, C. Allan, H. Allen, Bailey, Barton, B. al, Bockee, Bond, Boon, Borden, Bouldin, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Bynum, J. Calhoun, W. B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Campbell, Carr, Carter, Casey, G. Chambers, J. Chambers, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, Chetwood, Childs, N. H. Claiborne, J. F. H. Claiborne, Clark, Cleveland, Corwin, Craig, Crane, Cushing, Cushman, Darlington, Davis, Deberry, Denny, Dunlap, Efner, Elmore, Evans, Everett, Fairfield, French, Fry, J. Garland, R. Garland, Glascock, Granger, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Haley, Hannegan, Hardin, Harlan, Harper, S. S. Harrison, A. G. Harrison, Haynes, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Holey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Howell, Hubley, Hunt, Huntington, Huntsman, Janes, Jennifer, H. Johnson, B. Jones, K.annon, Klingensmith, Lane, Lawler, Lawrence, J. Lee, L. L. a, Lewis, Lincoln, Logan, Love, Lyon, A. Mann, J. Mann, W. Mason, M. Mason, S. Mason, McCarty, McComas, McKay, McKennan, Montgomery, Moore, Muhlenberg, Page, Parker, D. J. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Peyton, Phillips, Pickins, Pinckney, Potts, Reed, Reicher, John Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Russell, Schenck, W. B. Shepard, A. H. Shepperd, Shinn, Sickles, Slade, Sloan, Smith, Spangler, Spright, Standefer, Steel, Storer, Taliaferro, Taylor, Thomas, J. Thomson, W. Thompson, Turner, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Vinton, Wagener, Ward, Wardwell, Washington, Webster, E. Whittelsey, T. T. Whittlessey, L. Williams, S. Williams, Yell, and Young—154.

NAYS—Messrs. Ash, Bean, Black, Bovee, Bunch, Burns, Coles, Cramer, Forester, Fuller, Gillet, J. Hall, Harner, Ingham, W. Jackson, Jarvis, J. Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, C. Johnson, Lansing, G. Lee, Leonard, Loyall, Lucas, Martin, McKim, McLene, Miller, Morgan, Owens, Parks, Patterson, F. Pierce, Phelps, Joseph Reynolds, Seymour, Shields, and Turill—38.

So the motion to suspend the rules was agreed to.

Mr. LANE moved strike out of the resolution the words "Committee on Public Lands," and insert "select committee be appointed;" and to add after the resolution the following: "And also to inquire into the expediency of confining all the future sales of the public lands to actual settlers in limited parcels, at private entry only."

Mr. L. explained that his object was to bring the proposition directly before the House. He was satisfied that no one subject which had ever agitated the Congress of the United States was more important, from the various interests involved, than to stop the sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers. It was important, so far as it related to the manufactures of the country. It was important as related to the revenue. It was important to the interests of the people of the western country. He called the attention of the House to the fraudulent practices which had prevailed at the sales of the public lands at auction, and urged the House to put a stop to them. He said, there were thousands of individuals, who traversed the wilderness in search of land, with their one hundred dollars to pay for eighty acres, or their two hundred dollars to pay for one hundred and sixty acres. Well, sir, after they have made their selections, [and come to the sales, prepared to pay for their lands, there are some ten, fifteen, or twenty agents of speculators, who have never put themselves to the expense and inconvenience of searching after lands, with their hundreds of thousands of dollars, and when the poor man bids his one hundred dollars for eighty acres, the speculators bid five or ten more, and take the land. Thus, perhaps, the Government gets a few dollars more, but it is at the expense of the poor man, who is afterwards compelled to pay a higher price to the speculators. Thus are the speculators enriched, and the poor men, who intend to become actual settlers, either forced to pay them an extravagant price, or take second or third-rate land. The speculators pay no taxes, but get rich on the labor of the poor. Gentlemen talked about reducing the tariff; but if they would confine the sales to the actual settlers, they would find that the revenue from those sales would come down to perhaps three millions a year.

He had great confidence in the Committee on Public Lands; but this subject had been referred to that committee by resolution, and it was not acted on, and he understood that that committee was not likely to agree on any project of the kind. He therefore wished to bring the subject directly before the House. He therefore hoped the committee would be raised.

We now have a surplus revenue, as dangerous and expensive as a national debt; for what could be the difference between paying interest on a national debt, or paying the expenses of raising a revenue from the many, to be divided among the few. He wished this administration to set the example, and carry into effect a law to restrain the sales of the public lands. He wished to see the revenue reduced down to the wants of the Government, and to have a rich people and poor treasury.

Mr. BOON could not help expressing his astonishment at the proposition emanating from his colleague, for it was an unqualified reflection upon the Committee on the Public Lands. Did not the gentleman know that the subject of confining the sales of the public lands to actual settlers was now before that committee, under a reference of that part of the President's message relating to that project? Further, Mr. B. could inform him that a bill, drafted by himself (Mr. B.) was then under the consideration of that committee, who had held a special meeting upon it this morning; but whether they would agree to its principles, or its details, he was unable to say. The further consideration of it, however, had been postponed till another meeting.

Mr. B. said he was much gratified at the introduction of the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina, but he repeated the expression of his astonishment at his colleague's introducing his.

Mr. LANE could assure his honorable colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, (Mr. Boon,) that he had intended no reflection upon that committee, by the introduction of his amendment. He, himself, had the utmost confidence in the talents and integrity of that committee, but he had been given to understand, from authority in which he placed great reliance, that there was no probability of that committee coming to any conclusion on this subject. If the chairman of the committee would now give him the assurance that some definite action would be had on that bill, Mr. L. would withdraw his amendment.

Mr. DUNLAP said: Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat surprised to see the gentleman from Indiana offer his amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from North Carolina. The very same subject mentioned in the gentleman's amendment has twice been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. So much of the President's message as recommended the sale of the public lands to be limited to actual settlers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands; and the gentleman himself had the same subject refer to by resolution, to the same committee. And now, sir, he must offer his amendment, which, if adopted, will take the subject from a standing committee of this House, and referred to a select committee. The gentleman speaks of the great benefits to result to the actual settler on public lands from the adoption of this measure. I want the proposition of the gentleman not to be embarrassed by any amendments. It is intended to amend the general law regulating the sale of public lands, and to provide against the frauds practised by speculators on the Treasury and the actual settlers. Sir, the practice now is, for all the speculators to unite together, and purchase all the lands offered for sale. They run the land over the actual settler; and after his land is sold he leaves for home, and next morning the speculator forfeits the land and it is again offered for sale, and is bid off at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents by another member of the company; and thus the speculator gets the land for much less than the actual settler would pay for the same, and thereby defrauds your Treasury, and deprives the settler of his home. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important amendment to our law, and one which I hope to see receive the unanimous assent of this House. The adoption of the principle of the original resolution will do more to protect the actual settlers than any other law that has been passed for that purpose.

Mr. LANE said, understanding that a bill entirely embracing his views had been agreed upon by the Committee on Public Lands in the Senate, he would withdraw his amendment; and he withdrew it accordingly.

The resolution of Mr. WILLIAMS was then agreed to without a division.

Mr. VANDERPOEL moved a suspension of the rules, for the purpose of submitting a motion that, when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

On this motion Mr. WHITTLESEY called for the yeas and nays, which were not ordered.

The motion to suspend was then negatived—ayes 95, noes 65.

Mr. HARLAN then moved a suspension of the rules for the purpose of submitting a motion that when the House adjourns to-morrow, it will adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

Mr. HUNTSMAN called for the yeas and nays on this motion, which were not ordered, and the motion to suspend was agreed to; ayes 127, noes 36.

Mr. JARVIS then called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn over, which were not ordered, and the motion to adjourn over was agreed to.

PRIVATE ORDERS.

The bill for the relief of Robert Allison, a Lieutenant in the Revolutionary war, was postponed until Friday next.

The bill for the relief of Colonel Anthony White was postponed until this day week.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HAYNES in the chair, and took up the following bill:

A bill for the relief of the representatives of Col. John Winston, an officer in the revolutionary war.

After a discussion of considerable length on the above bill, the committee rose, and

The House adjourned.

SATURDAY, December 31, 1836.
The Senate did not sit to-day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House took up the motion of reference of a memorial for a claim presented on yesterday by Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. MORGAN moved to refer it to a select committee.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, moved to refer it to the Committee of Claims, but withdrew that motion, and substituted the Committee on the Judiciary.

After some remarks from Messrs. KENNON, E. WHITTLESEY, CRAIG, and HARPER, the latter renewed the motion to refer to the Committee of Claims.

After a few remarks from Messrs. HAMER and MORGAN, the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary was rejected without a count, and that to the Committee of Claims was lost by a vote of 63 to 66, and the memorial was referred to a select committee of seven.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Messrs. BAILEY and FAIRFIELD of Maine.

Messrs. LAWRENCE and BORDEN of Massachusetts:

Messrs. CAMBRELENG, DOUBLEDAY, YOUNG, and MILLER, of New York.

Messrs. INGERSOLL, GAI BRAITH, and BEAUMONT, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOWARD of Maryland.

Mr. LOYALL of Virginia.

Messrs. W. B. SHEPARD, and PETTIGREW, of North Carolina.

Mr. GRIFFIN of South Carolina.

Mr. DAWSON of Georgia.

[Mr. DAWSON said that a few days since, a gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Lawrence) had made a reference to the Committee on Commerce, in relation to the city and port of Brunswick, in Georgia. In connection with that subject, Mr. D. held in his hand some interesting information, in relation to the growing importance of that place, and such information as would go to show that the State of Georgia has on her shore one of the best harbors and ports on the south Atlantic coast. He therefore begged leave to present it to the House, and asked that it should be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed; which was accordingly ordered. The document contained the report of the commissioners appointed by the Legislature of Georgia to examine the harbor of Brunswick, and the survey of Mr. Baldwin of the canal and railroad leading to Brunswick.]

Mr. CALHOUN of Kentucky.

Messrs. LUKE LEA, CAVE JOHNSON, and FORESTER, of Tennessee.

Messrs. STORER and PATTERSON of Ohio.

Mr. HANNEGAN of Indiana.

Mr. HANNEGAN presented the petition of Leslie Malone, praying to be placed on the pension roll for Revolutionary services; referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois.

[Mr. REYNOLDS presented the memorials and petitions praying a port of entry at Alton, in the State of Illinois, which are on file in the House; and on his motion were referred to the Committee on Commerce.]

These documents state, that Alton is situated on the Mississippi river, and is a place of considerable commercial importance in the State of Illinois; that there is no other place in Illinois so much entitled to a port of entry as Alton.]

DEPOSITE BANKS.

The House then resumed the consideration of the following resolution and amendments moved thereto on a former day, as follows:

Mr. GARLAND submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury communicate to this House, if within his power, the dividends and surpluses, which were declared by, and the surplus and contingent fund remaining in, the several banks in which the public money is deposited, for the years 1833, 1834, 1835, and 1836, severally.

Mr. GILLET submitted the following amendment: "And that he also communicate the expenses of said banks for each of the said years."

Mr. HARLAN submitted the following amendment to the amendment: "And that he state also whether the salary or compensation of an agent at the seat of the General Government compose a part of the expenses of said banks, the name of the agent, and the several sums paid to him by said institutions respectively."

The question pending was the motion of Mr. HANNEGAN to lay the subject on the table, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The motion to lay on the table was decided in the negative—yeas 28, nays 141, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bean, Black, Boon, Buchanan, Coles, Cushman, William K. Fuller, J. Hall, Hannegan, Benjamin C. Howard, Jarvis, Benjamin Jones, Kilgore, Lansing, Wm. Mason, McKim, McLene, Muhlenberg, Owens, Parks, Patterson, Dutee J. Pearce, Sickles, J. Thomson, Wagener, Weeks, and Yell—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, C. Allan, Anthony, Ashley, Bailey, Bell, Bockee, Bond, Boyd, Briggs, Brown, Bunch, Burns, Bynum, J. Calhoun, W. B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, G. Chambers, J. Chambers, Chapman, Chapin, Chetwood, Childs, N. H. Claiborne, Clark, Corwin, Craig, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Davis, Dawson, Deberry, Denny, Doubleday, Efner, Evans, Everett, Fairfield, Foraster, Fowler, French, Fry, jr. J. Garland, Gillet, Glascock, Granger, Grayson, Griffin, Haley, Harlan, Harper, Haynes, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howell, Hubley, Huntsman, Ingersoll, Ingham, W. Jackson, Henry F. James, Daniel Jenifer, Joseph Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, Lane, Lawler, Lawrence, T. Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, J. Mann, Martin, Moses Mason, S. Mason, Maury, McComas, McKay, McKennan, Miller, Milligan, Montgomery, Moore, Page, Parker, F. Pierce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Peyton, Phelps, Phillips, Pinckney, Reed, Rencher, J. Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Russell, Seymour, A. H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Slade, Sloane, Smith, Spangler, Speight, Standefer, Steele, Storer, Taliaferro, Thomas, Toucey, Turner, Underwood, Vanderpool, Vinton, Ward, Wardwell, Webster, White, E. Whittlesey, T. T. Whittlesey, L. Williams, S. Williams, and Young.—141.

Mr. GILLET then withdrew his amendment, and Mr. HARLAN moved his as an amendment to the original resolution; and thereon the question recurring.

Mr. CUSHMAN rose and remarked that he had voted to lay the subject on the table, not because he was opposed to the original proposition, but to facilitate the business of the House. With the same object, therefore, he now demanded the previous question.

The House refused to second the demand for the previous question—71 ayes to 90 noes.

Mr. GRANGER called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, which were ordered.

Mr. HARLAN expressed a hope that there would be very few members of any party disposed to vote against this amendment. It had been asserted again and again, on that floor and elsewhere, that a certain individual, residing in this city, occupied a room in the building rented by the Treasury Department, and the rent thereof paid out of the public Treasury; and that he carried on a correspondence with the deposite banks under the frank of the Secretary of the Treasury. If this was so, the people had a right to know it; they had a right to know the name of the agent, if any, and the amount of his compensation. If it was a fact that this agent occupied a room in the Treasury building, and had his correspondence franked by the Secretary of the Treasury, they had a right to have a distinct answer from the Secretary. The depositories had been removed from the place designated by the law, and transferred to other banks, and a large amount was lost to the Government by this operation. Now it was said that a large sum was paid out of the profits on the moneys deposited with the State banks, to an agent; and it was proper that the people should know whether this was so, and the amount this agent received from these banks.

Mr. GARLAND of Virginia said, that in presenting the resolution now under consideration, he had had but a single isolated object in view, which was, to exhibit to the American people the important fact, that under the existing regulation of the revenue system, an excess of revenue far beyond the necessary and proper wants of the Government had been exacted from them, and employed, not for the benefit of the nation, but for the benefit of banking institutions. It was to inform them, in the most practicable and accurate form which the nature of the case admitted of, that an excess of revenue of more than thirty millions of dollars had been abstracted from their pockets; the use of which had resulted in no benefit to the nation, but a profit of near two millions of dollars to banking institutions, with a view to arouse their jealousy, increase their watchfulness, and excite a determined resistance to such unconstitutional, oppressive and unnecessary exactions—exactions not only oppressive to them, but dangerous to the purity of our Government, and to liberty itself. Mr. G. said, that when he presented the resolution, seeking, as it did, a simple statement of facts, he did not anticipate any effort to encumber it with amendments, seeking information foreign to its object, and having no legitimate connection with it. Such he regarded the amendment of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Harlan.) The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, calls upon the Secretary of the Treasury to inform this House whether the deposite banks, so called, have an agent in their employ, residing in this city, and whether he receives a salary for the duties which he performs, and what that salary is. Suppose (said Mr. G.) the Secretary, in responding to this resolution, affirms the fact that these banks have an agent here, and pay him a heavy salary—what then? Why, sir, the information will be, that the banks have done precisely what they have a right to do, without any responsibility to this Government whatever. From whence (said Mr. G.) do these banks derive their corporate existence? From the State Governments; not from the Federal Government. What, then, does it concern this Government, if, from their own funds, they conjointly or severally employ an agent to reside either at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, or this city, to transact lawful business for them? Nothing, whatever, sir; their funds are their own property, and they have the undoubted right to dispose of them in their own way. If they violate their charters, the State Governments must apply the remedy; this Government has no power to do so. Mr. G. said that the only responsibility which these banks had incurred to this Government, was to fulfil the obligations which they came under, in the contract by which they became depositories of the public money, and this responsibility grows out of the contract itself. Mr. G. said, however, that while he contended that this Government had nothing to do with any agency created by the banks here, and sustained at their own expense, the Government had a right to look into any illegitimate and improper connection between the Treasury Department, and any agent employed by the banks, because in that connection the welfare and interest of the country were deeply involved. He believed there was no such illegal or improper connection; he was satisfied all was right and proper, yet objectionable as the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky was, as an appendage to his own, and however unconnected the subjects of inquiry, he would vote for it. It came from an opponent of the administration; it came in the form in which that gentleman chose to present it, and he should vote for its adoption, because if all was right, the adoption of the resolution could not make any thing wrong. If any thing was wrong, it ought to be known and exposed; and if the adoption of this resolution led to the detection of any fraud or corruption, the country would never regret the detection, because of the objectionable form in which it was instituted.

Mr. G. said that from many sources, both out of and in this House, strong imputations of abuse and corruption had been made against some of the departments of the Government, and some of its highest officers. These imputations coming from high and respectable sources, had been so often and so repeatedly made, that it was due to the departments, to the public offices implicated, and to the country, that they should either be proved or disproved, that the corrupt practices may be corrected, if they exist; the offending officers, if any be removed, or innocence vindicated, and confidence more firmly riveted. Mr. G. said he never would, under any more particularly existing circumstances, do any thing to cover or conceal corruption, fraud, or mismanagement of any kind in any department of the Government, whatever, whoever, might be affected by it. He was willing, and as far as his vote was concerned, would throw open as wide and as broad as might be desired, the door of investigation. If there was any thing wrong, he was willing to know it, he wished the country to know it. If there was nothing wrong, then our public officers will stand vindicated against the aspersions which have been so lavishly thrown upon them. Upon the purity with which this Government is administered, he said, depends the perpetuation of our invaluable system, and the security of liberty itself, and he would not scruple as to the form in which any abuse might be detected, if it exists.

Mr. G. said, that during the last session, when his honorable colleague, (Mr. Wise,) not now in his seat, submitted a resolution to make the very inquiry now sought in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, through a committee, he (Mr. G.) voted for it. He thought it the preferable mode, and would prefer now to vote for that form of inquiry, which he still thinks ought to have been adopted; but he was willing that gentlemen who thought the inquiry ought to be made, should have it in their own way and in their own form; and he appealed to his political friends, with whom he had acted in honesty and good faith, to unite with him upon this occasion, and permit this or any other inquiry, into any abuse alleged to exist, to be made by our opponents, and no longer subject ourselves to the imputation of concealing the alleged abuses of the administration under the broad and thick folds of the mantle of purity; let us meet the investigation as becomes men confident of the integrity of the administration, and at the same time willing to eradicate any abuse or corruption which may or can be found in any form of investigation fairly conducted. Mr. G. repeated his entire confidence that there was neither abuse nor corruption, yet there might be, and he would not object to the investigation. He calculated confidently that the investigation sought to be made, if permitted, would result in the successful vindication of the branches of the administration so strongly implicated, and their renewed confidence in the public mind. He hoped the amendment would be adopted.

Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina concurred in the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Garland,) although he did not belong to the same party. This subject of Whitney's connection with the Treasury and the deposite banks, was one of deep excitement throughout the country. He had forborne, as he always should do, to make any charges until the evidence was before him. Now he denied the evidence, and it was most important that an investigation of the whole subject should be had. Although he had never made use of the term democrat for party purposes, yet he was enough of a democrat to say that he desired this whole subject thoroughly examined and laid before the people. What they desired to know was the amount which Whitney received from these banks, to put down suspicions which existed all over the country. Whatever his connection might be, it ought to be known, so that the people might not be under apprehensions of fraud being practised. It was all important to know his connection with the banks, as far as possible, so that it might be seen whether he was not influenced by a high douceur. If he was receiving fifty thousand dollars—and he could readily conceive that he received twice that amount, because banks with several millions of dollars could well afford to pay a large douceur—the people desired to know it. He thought these suspicions were well founded; others might think differently; but all he desired was, that the case might be submitted to the American people, and he trusted gentlemen would meet him on this ground, so that they might have the full benefit of refuting all the charges which had been made.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island said he had voted to lay this resolution on the table, and had found himself in a very lean minority. He had done so, however, because he considered it a work of supererogation. If the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Harlan) wished a committee appointed on the part of the House, for the purpose of ascertaining whether Reuben M. Whitney was acting improperly as agent for the deposit banks, and had facilities granted him by the Secretary of the Treasury which were contrary to law, he, for one, would not shrink from any investigation; and he would be willing that the gentleman from Kentucky should be at the head of a committee, for the purpose of satisfying himself and others on the subject. But suppose that Mr. Whitney is the agent of the deposit banks, he is not the agent by the act of Congress, nor under any power which the Secretary of the Treasury can control. If he is an agent, he is agent by virtue of a contract between himself and the deposit banks; and what right had the House, or the Secretary of the Treasury, to interfere in the matter? and if they did do so, what would be the consequence? Suppose the Secretary was to interrogate the agent, or the banks, on the subject. If they had a disposition to answer, they would do so; if not, they would leave it alone. Because this individual had been seen in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury at times, reading the newspapers, perhaps, and at other times in his own office, near by, were they to make a formal call on the Secretary, to ascertain whether he had any improper connection with that department? As to those inquiries, got up without foundation and without cause, he had heretofore expressed his sentiments; he was opposed to them entirely. So much for Reuben M. Whitney, who, he presumed, was to be one of the great men of the country, because men frequently were brought into notice by the persecutions of their enemies.

All the House had to do with the deposit banks was to exercise the powers granted by the deposit bill of the last session. They were under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, by the contract they made with him; and so far as that went, the House could extend its power, and no farther. But the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia goes back to the year 1833; and he would ask, what right had the House, or the Secretary, to make a call on them for any statements independent of what was contained in the contract made with them? If the banks refuse to make any developments, what benefits would be derived from the adoption of the resolution in its original form. None, except such as have been received from the demands made upon him for something less than a year past.

The Secretary of the Treasury, under the deposit act, had been gradually withdrawing the public moneys from the great States and depositing them in the small ones, so that he might be ready to pay over those moneys to the States on the first of January next. In Rhode Island three-fourths of the sum to be transferred, had been removed some two or three months ago; and if the banks there had discounted any more freely in consequence of this law, let them have the benefit of it; but as to going back to any time previous to the removal of these moneys, what benefit could be derived from it? He saw no reason why any person on the part of that House, or why the Secretary of the Treasury, should inquire into the affairs of these banks any more than any other banks.

He agreed that there was an evil arising from the surplus on hand, but it was not confined to the deposit banks alone; it was an evil arising from the banking system, the operations of which tended to enrich the few at the expense of the many. The stockholders of these institutions, by their connection therewith, always had the opportunity of knowing the value of the stock, and took advantage of those who were not so well informed; and this was one of the great evils of the banking system. If, then, they were to legislate at all, let them legislate for the benefit of the greatest numbers, for the benefit of the hewers of wood and drawers of water, and those men who were made to suffer by the operations of those corporations.

Mr. TOUCEY said he saw no objection to the original resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, nor any very great objection to the amendment which had been proposed. The object of both was to call for information in possession of the Treasury Department. If the facts sought for were there, and were deemed important, it was proper they should be laid before Congress. The gentleman from Rhode Island, (Mr. Pearce,) asked if this inquiry be made of the Secretary in regard to the deposit banks, why not extend it to all the banks in the country? The answer was obvious. By the law of last session, and under the former regulations of the Treasury Department, all deposit banks were required to give the department certain information relative to their condition and business. This had been done; and this information it was proper for the House to call for, while it might be very unfit to extend the inquiry further.

But in regard to an agent of the deposit banks residing here, we had been told by a former Secretary of the Treasury that he was not an agent or officer of the Government, nor in any manner paid by the Government. If these banks found it to their convenience to employ an agent to transact their business here, there certainly was no impropriety in their doing so, nor in their remunerating him for his services. It might be, and doubtless was convenient for the Government, that such an agency should exist with authority to act for these banks. And if they have communicated to the Treasury Department any information in regard to the expenses of this agency, and any member of the House desired that that too might be communicated by the Secretary, why let the resolution call for it. It was certainly of very little importance any way, that we should know what compensation an agent, even of a deposit bank, received from his principal; and it was quite probable that the department knew nothing upon the subject.

But as neither the resolution nor the amendment required the Secretary to give any information except what was already in his power, and that could be both readily and properly communicated, he (Mr. T.) saw little foundation for objection to either, and was willing that both should pass.

Mr. VANDERPOEL said that he apprehended that the amendment of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Harlan) would not secure his object, at least if his object was to ascertain whether there was any agent, without the authority of law, connected with the Treasury Department, to correspond or communicate with the deposit banks. It had been often alleged here as matter of suspicion, if not of conviction, that an agent, unauthorized by law, and paid, probably, out of the public moneys, was employed by the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate with the deposit banks. He would submit a resolution which would require the Secretary of the Treasury to respond distinctly to the point, whether such agency existed; and if so, who pays such agent. Mr. V. then submitted the following as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky:

"And whether the Treasury Department has any agent or attorney to correspond or communicate with said deposit banks in relation to the public deposits; if so, who is such agent or correspondent, what compensation is allowed to him, and by whom is such allowance made or paid?"

The time devoted to morning business having expired,

Mr. WHITTLESEY called for the orders of the day.

Mr. VANDERPOEL moved a suspension of the rule for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration, and disposing of the subject under discussion: lost, 97 to 58, not two-thirds.

Mr. THOMSON of Ohio, asked the consent of the House to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the use of this Hall be allowed for an exhibition of the pupils of the New England Institution for the education of the blind, under the direction of Dr. S. G. Howe, on Tuesday next, at half past 10 o'clock, A. M. for the space of one hour.

Objection being made, the rule was suspended. On motion of Mr. LAWRENCE, the resolution was received and agreed to without a division.

The House then proceeded to the private orders.

PRIVATE ORDERS.

The bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Lewis Durett, was taken up, and after some discussion, postponed until Friday week.

The House then took up an engrossed bill for the relief of Don Louis Orillon; and, after debate, The House adjourned.

SELECT COMMITTEE

On the memorial of citizens of Pennsylvania, on the subject of banking companies:

Mr. GALBRAITH of Pennsylvania,
SPEIGHT of North Carolina,
EVERETT of Vermont,
MASON of Maine,
LINCOLN of Massachusetts,
MANN of New York,
JENIFER of Maryland,
HOLSEY of Georgia,
CRAIG of Virginia.

IN SENATE,

Monday, January 2, 1837.

Mr. PRESTON appeared and took his seat.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Andrew Jackson, Jr. his Secretary, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of War, with certain papers from the War Department, to complete the annual report of that department.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the Navy Department, transmitting a statement of the expenditures made under the contingent appropriations for that department, made in compliance with the act of Congress of the 9th of May, 1836.

Mr. HENDRICKS presented the petition of Casper W. Weaver, praying additional compensation for superintending the work done on the Pennsylvania avenue: referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HENDRICKS also presented the petition of the legal representatives of John H. Pratt, which was referred to the same committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of Doctor Plantou of Philadelphia, stating that he has invented several important improvements in regard to the navigation of canals by steamboats, and also certain improvements in the construction of railroads, and asking Congress to make an appropriation for the purpose of testing the utility of his inventions: referred to the Committee on Roads and canals.

Mr. BUCHANAN also presented the petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Philadelphia, praying for an appropriation for the building of a new custom-house at that city: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion of Mr. CALHOUN, the petition and papers of Mary Moore, on the files of the last session, were again referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, the petition and papers of Archibald W. Hamilton, on the files of the last session, were again referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TOMLINSON presented the petition of Col. Samuel Dean, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALKER presented the petition of sundry citizens of Mississippi, praying that the claim of Andrew Knox, to a certain tract of land, may be reserved to him: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CLAY presented the petition of Colonel Anthony Gale; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KING of Alabama presented the petition of the Mayor and Aldermen of the city of Mobile.

praying that a sum of money advanced by them for equipping certain volunteers, for the service of the United States in the late Creek war, may be refunded to them: referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Petitions were also presented by Messrs. NILES, TIPTON, and RIVES.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel Warren of South Carolina; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been referred the bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise the claim of the United States on the Alleghany Bank of Pennsylvania, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a bill to authorize the Gainsville and Narkata railroad company to locate a road through the public lands; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Gustavus B. Horner, deceased; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the bill to limit the sales of the public lands to actual settlers, reported an amendment thereto, striking out all after the enacting clause, and substituting another bill; and,

On motion of Mr. WALKER, it was made the order of the day for Thursday next.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported the following bills, which were severally read and ordered to a second reading:

A bill to authorize the Ohio Railroad Company to locate a road through the public lands.

A bill making appropriations for the completion of the improvement of certain rivers and roads in Florida; and

A bill making appropriation for the completion of certain military roads in Florida.

Mr. RIVES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported without amendment the bill for the relief of certain officers of the United States sloop of war Boston.

Mr. KING of Alabama presented the credentials of the Hon. JOHN McKINLEY, elected by the Legislature of the State of Alabama a Senator from that State, to serve for six years from the 4th of March next.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, reported a bill to remit the duties paid on certain merchandise imported into the city of New York destroyed by fire; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the same committee, reported, without amendment, the bill from the House to regulate, in certain cases, the disposition of the land ceded by Indian tribes to the United States.

Mr. SEVIER, from the Committee on Public Lands, which was directed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire into the expediency of confirming certain sales of lands made by Governor Pope of Arkansas, reported a bill for that purpose; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. NILES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Moses Van Campen, which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KING of Georgia, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill giving effect to the 8th article of the treaty with Spain, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. BROWN submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of compensating Jeremiah Taylor, for shoeing horses belonging to Captain Bradley's company of cavalry, attached to Colonel John Coffee, 3d regiment, during the late war.

Mr. SEVIER submitted the following resolutions, which were considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to each of the States of Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, five hundred thousand acres of land, for the purposes of internal improvement.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending the jurisdiction of the District Court of Arkansas, so as to embrace all capital offences against the United States, which may be committed in the Indian country, west of Arkansas.

Mr. GRUNDY moved that the previous orders be postponed, for the purpose of taking up the bill for the admission of Michigan into the Union; carried—yeas 22, nays 15.

The bill being then before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole,

After some remarks from Messrs. CALHOUN and GRUNDY,

Mr. MORRIS moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to strike out the preamble, which refers to the assent given by the late Convention in Michigan to the boundaries prescribed in the act of Congress.

A debate followed, in which Messrs. CALHOUN, MORRIS, GRUNDY, WALKER, TIPTON, STRANGE, and DANA, took part; after which, and before the question was taken,

On motion of Mr. EWING of Ohio,

The Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE,

TUESDAY, January, 3, 1837.

Mr. LINN presented the memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, praying for a donation of 500,000 acres of land for the purposes of education: referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, the memorial of the same, praying for the establishment of an additional land district: referred to the same committee.

On motion of Mr. EWING of Ohio, leave was given to George Johnson to withdraw his petition and papers, presented at the last session.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the memorial of the Marshal of the Southern District of New York, praying that an appropriation may be made for the erection of suitable buildings for the accommodation of the Federal Courts for that district: referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON presented the memorial of the Galena and Chicago Union Railroad company, praying the right of way over the public lands, with the right of pre-emption to one section of land the whole length on each side of the road, on condition that the company transport, free of cost, the United States mail upon said road for sixty years, the length of their charter: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

On motion of Mr. LINN,

Ordered, That the various petitions on the files of the last session from citizens of Missouri, praying for the establishment of a new land office at Jefferson City, in that State, be again referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KING of Alabama presented the memorial of a large number of the citizens of Georgetown, D. C. stating the disadvantages under which they labor with respect to the banking system of the District, and praying Congress to charter a new bank: referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KENT presented the memorial of the common council of the town of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, praying for aid for the completion of the branch of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal to that town: referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALKER presented the petition of — Marshall, late an officer of the army of the United States under the command of General Wayne, praying for a pension: referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RIVES presented the memorial of J. H. Hall, praying to be compensated for his improvements in the manufacture of fire arms: referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RIVES also presented the petition of George Taylor, of the District of Columbia, and the petition of John Cooper, and others, praying indemnity for French spoiliations prior to 1800: laid on the table.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported without amendment the bill to incorporate the Washington city manual labor school and male orphan asylum.

Mr. KENT, from the same committee, which had been directed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire whether there was any law in force in the District of Columbia, which conferred on the Medical Society of said District the right to grant licences for the practice of medicine; and if so, to inquire into the expediency and justice of repealing said law, made a report thereon, giving it as the opinion of the committee that the law was a wise and salutary one, and ought not to be repealed; whereupon the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same.

Mr. LINN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which had been referred the bill for the relief of Sebastian Butcher and others, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. SEVIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of George W. Brand; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which had been referred the petition of Irvine Shubrick, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, from the Committee on Claims, to which had been referred the memorial of the honorable John Forsyth, praying for compensation for property lost in consequence of the carelessness of the United States troops during the late Creek war, made an unfavorable report thereon, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the bill introduced by Mr. Clay, to appropriate for a limited time the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, reported the same without amendment, and gave notice that he was instructed by the committee to move for the indefinite postponement of the bill, when it should come up for consideration.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which had been referred the following bills, reported the same, severally, without amendment, viz:

A bill to establish a foundry in the west and one in the southwest, and certain arsenals;

A bill to provide for the collection of material and the purchase of sites for building certain fortifications;

A bill for the relief of Mrs. Caroline E. Clitherall;

A bill for the relief of the heirs of Gen. William Eaton; and

A bill to fix the compensation of the senior clerk employed in the Adjutant General's office.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which had been referred the petition of Daniel Steenrod, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KING of Alabama, in pursuance of notice given, asked and obtained leave and introduced a bill to encourage the employment of boys in the vessels of the United States; which was twice read and referred.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, the Senate took up the bill from the House to regulate, in certain cases, the disposition of the proceeds of the sales of the lands ceded to the United States by Indian tribes; and the bill was by unanimous consent read the second and third times and passed.

The following bills were also read the third time and passed:

The bill making appropriations for the suppression of Indian hostilities; and

The bill for the relief of Elisha Towns.

The resolutions offered yesterday and on Thursday, were severally considered and adopted.

The resolution submitted by Mr. BENTON to exchange certain resolutions from the Journal of the Senate, coming up for consideration,

Mr. BENTON moved that it be printed, and made the order of the day for Monday next; which motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL ORDER.

The bill for the admission of Michigan into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, was taken up as the unfinished debate, when

Mr. EWING of Ohio addressed the Senate in opposition to the bill, and in support of Mr. Morris's amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN then rose, and in a speech of some length and argument, supported the bill, and opposed the amendment.

Mr. CALHOUN moved that the Senate adjourn; which motion was decided in the negative by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, Knight, Moore, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, and White—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Nicholas, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tipton, Walker, Wall, and Wright—22.

Mr. PRESTON next took the floor, and spoke at length in opposition to the bill.

After some remarks from Mr. STRANGE, in reply to Mr. PRESTON,

Mr. MORRIS withdrew his proposition to recommit the bill with instructions, and submitted as an amendment a substitute for the preamble.

Mr. GRUNDY asked for the yeas and nays on Mr. MORRIS's amendment, which were accordingly ordered.

Messrs. CALHOUN and MORRIS addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment just offered.

Before Mr. MORRIS concluded, he gave way, and

Mr. EWING of Ohio moved that the Senate adjourn; which question was decided in the negative—yeas 16, nays 16.

After a few remarks from Mr. MORRIS,

Mr. WALL moved that the Senate adjourn; which motion was lost—yeas 19, nays 19.

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Alabama, Knight, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Preston, Southard, Swift, Wall, and White—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Georgia, Linn, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, and Wright—19.

After a few more remarks from Mr. MORRIS,

Mr. EWING of Ohio moved that the Senate adjourn; which motion was carried, yeas 21, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Alabama, Knight, Linn, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Preston, Southard, Strange, Swift, Wall, and White—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, and Wright—17.

So the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

TUESDAY, January 3, 1837.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Mr. PARKS of Maine.

Messrs. PEARCE, and BURNS of New Hampshire.

Messrs. PHILLIPS, ADAMS, and CUSHING of Massachusetts.

Messrs. HAZELTINE, CHAPIN, CAMBRELENG, GIDEON LEE, HUNTINGTON, and YOUNG of New York.

[Mr. CHAPIN presented the petition of Albert Tanderweer, a revolutionary soldier, praying to be placed on the pension roll: referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

Messrs. HARPER, GALBRAITH, LAFORTE, PIERSON and INGERSOLL of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TURNER of Maryland.

Mr. LOYALL of Virginia.

Mr. HARLAN of Kentucky.

[Mr. HARLAN presented the joint preamble and resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky, for the passage of a law compensating the troops called into the service of the United States, in virtue of an order from General Gaines to the Governor of Kentucky; which troops were destined for Camp Sabine, but disbanded by the order of the President of the United States.]

Messrs. HUNTSMAN and CARTER of Tennessee.

Mr. HANNEGAN of Indiana.

[Mr. HANNEGAN presented the petition of the Mayor and Corporate authorities of Michigan city, in the State of Indiana, praying that a certain strip of unsurveyed land along the lake shore, between the city and the water, be granted to said corporation for city purposes; referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.]

Messrs. CASEY and REYNOLDS, of Illinois.

[Mr. CASEY presented the petition of a number of citizens of Illinois, praying the passage of an act granting to the Mount Carmel and Alton Railroad company the right of pre-emption to alternate sections of the public land through which the same may pass; which, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.]

[Mr. CASEY also presented the petition of sundry citizens of Wabash county, Illinois, praying the passage of a law authorizing the relinquishment of section sixteen, in township one, north, range twelve, west of the second principal meridian, and the privilege of entering other lands, in lieu thereof, for the use of schools in said township; which was also referred, on his motion, to the Committee on the Public Lands.]

[Mr. REYNOLDS presented the papers and documents sustaining the claim of the heirs of William B. Whiteside, deceased, for military services performed by their ancestor in the year 1809.

William B. Whiteside performed the above mentioned service under the order of M. Lewis, Governor of Upper Louisiana, and acted as a captain of a company of spies at Fort Madison, on the west side of the Mississippi, in the present limits of Wisconsin Territory; neither he or his heirs having received any pay for said services. On motion of Mr. R. the papers were referred to the Committee of Claims.]

Messrs. LYON and MARTIN of Alabama.

Messrs. HARRISON and ASHLEY of Missouri.

[Mr. HARRISON presented the petition of John L. Bean and A. S. Hughes, praying remuneration as Indian agents.]

Mr. JONES of Wisconsin.

[Mr. JONES presented a petition from the citizens of Toledo, State of Ohio, praying for the construction of a harbor at the mouth of Root river, in Milwaukee county, Wisconsin Territory; Also, of the citizens of Monroe, in Michigan, who pray for the same improvement.]

On motion of Mr. ADAMS,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of restoring to the list of pensioners for services in the revolutionary war, the names of all persons who were entitled to, and obtained pensions, under the act of Congress of 18th March, 1818; but whose names were afterwards stricken from the list, and have not since been restored, for the single reason that they were not in indigent poverty.

WEST POINT ACADEMY.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill to provide for the support of the Military Academy of the United States, for the year 1837: read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

On motion of Mr. GILLET, the following resolutions, reported by him on a former day from the Committee on Commerce, were taken up, and severally concurred in:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House a survey of the bar and obstructions to the navigation of the Passaic river, below the city of Newark, in the State of New Jersey, made by Lieutenant Commandant Gedney, together with his plans and estimates for the removal of the obstructions to the navigation of said river.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to this House the survey, plan, and estimate for the improvement of the mouth of Black river, in the county of Jefferson, in the State of New York.

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the following resolution, which was concurred in:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire and report to this House what alterations (if any) are necessary in the laws regulating the pay, compensation, and allowances of persons in the Navy.

PRE-EMPTION LAW.

Mr. YELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill to revive in part the provisions of an act entitled an act granting pre-emption rights to settlers on the public lands, approved June 19, 1834; which was read twice, and referred to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FRY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Captain Presley Gray of Kentucky; also, a bill for the relief of the children and legal representatives of Oliver Parrish, deceased; also, a bill granting a pension to Chaney Rice of Pennsylvania; also a bill granting a pension to James J. Coffin, of Massachusetts; which bills were severally read twice and committed.

Mr. FRY, from the same committee, also made unfavorable reports upon the petitions of Mary Cruchton, and also that of Israel Wright, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of Robert Murray; also, a bill for the relief of Jonathan Boone; also, a bill for the relief of Himan Steigermayer; which bills were severally read twice and committed.

DEPOSITE BANKS.

The House then resumed the consideration of the following resolution and amendments moved thereto on a former day, as follows:

Mr. GARLAND submitted the following resolution.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury communicate to this House, if within his power, the dividends and surpluses, which were declared by, and the surpluses and contingent fund remaining in, the several banks in which the public money is deposited, for the years 1833, 1834, 1835, and 1836, severally.

Mr. HARLAN submitted the following amendment to the amendment: "And that he state also whether the salary or compensation of an agent at the seat of the General Government compose at part of the expenses of said banks, the name of the agent, and the several sums paid to him by said institutions respectfully."

The question pending was the following amendment to the amendment submitted on Saturday last by Mr. VANDERPOEL:

"And when the Treasury Department has any agent or attorney to correspond or communicate with said deposite banks in relation to the public depositories; if so, who is such agent or correspondent, what compensation is allowed to him; and by whom is such allowance made or paid?"

Mr. PEYTON intimated his wish to submit an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, when it should be in order to do so, and begged of all gentlemen who might be favorable to an investigation, not to vote for the original resolution, or for either of the amendments pending; because it was asking of the Secretary of the Treasury to send them information which he was bound to do by law, but which he had neglected to send. It was asking the Secretary to send there a whitewashing essay in defence of himself and Reuben M. Whitney, if he chose so to do. He did not think it the proper course to call on the Secretary to make a statement, touching his own official conduct, and also touching the conduct of that sickly and mysterious agent, who was the organ of communication between the Treasury and the deposite banks. Mr. P. then read extracts from the deposite law of the last session, to show that the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to appoint an agent to communicate with, and examine into the affairs of the deposite banks; and that it was his duty to give Congress statements of their condition, &c. If, then, the Secretary had failed to perform that duty, and Mr. P. contended he had, he thought they ought to resort to other means to procure it. He was opposed to all inquiries of the Secretary of the Treasury, but was in favor of a full investigation of the matter by a committee clothed with the power to do so. In relation to Whitney, the ground had been taken by gentlemen that he was a private individual, and that his acts were of a private nature, and that the House had no right to inquire into a private matter. He then proceeded to show that Whitney was connected with the Treasury Department, as an agent for the deposit banks; that he had an office in the building occupied by the Treasury Department, and that he carried on a correspondence with the deposit banks and with Receivers of public moneys; and read extracts from a published circular purporting to be from Whitney to a Mr. Blakey, a Receiver of public moneys, in support of the latter charge.

Mr. P. said that in consequence of the character of the agent alluded to, Mr. Taney, the former Secretary of the Treasury, would not recommend him as an agent of the deposit banks; but when the present Secretary came into office, this individual was taken into the Treasury Department, and every facility granted him. Now he had fortified himself, and gentlemen were afraid to institute an investigation in his conduct. Mr. P. spoke at considerable length, and adverted with great severity to the course of the Secretary in relation to Whitney's connection with the Treasury Department.

Mr. GARLAND of Virginia said the honorable gentleman from Tennessee did him no more than justice, when he said that he (Mr. G.) had no desire to cover any fraudulent practices of the Treasury. Mr. G. said while he stood there as the representative of a free and intelligent people, he never would, by any act of his, attempt to conceal from public view fraud or corruption in any shape or form whatever. But when he first submitted the resolution to the House, the simple object he had in view was to make an inquiry in relation to the revenue of the country, and he had not at that time the most remote idea that an inquiry in relation to Reuben M. Whitney would have been appended to it; because his honorable colleague from Virginia (Mr. Wise) had submitted a resolution, which had been made the order of the day for this very day, in relation to the same subject, and which took broader grounds than the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Harlan). Three times at the last session Mr. G. had voted for inquiries being made into this subject, and he would continue to vote for them, if they were submitted day after day, until doomsday.

These were the reasons which induced him to offer the resolution alluded to, and he certainly thought it was not liable to the criticism of the gentleman from Tennessee. He had drawn up the resolution in this particular form, because he did not suppose that the Secretary of the Treasury had any legal or constitutional power to exact the information from these banks; yet, at the same time, he might have acquired the information, and communicated it to the House in this manner; and, Mr. G. considered it the most respectful form for the resolution. Besides, a committee of the House had no more power than the Secretary of the Treasury to compel the banks to give the information desired, but he did not suppose they would refuse to give it; and hence he had made the inquiry in this way, so that they might obtain, by the assent of the banks, through the Secretary of the Treasury, information which they had not the power to compel the banks to give.

With regard to the investigation into the character of Mr. Whitney, he had nothing to say; that person might be all that the gentleman from Tennessee seemed to think him to be. If the proposition the gentleman desired to have adopted, had reference to an investigation of Whitney's private character, to ascertain whether he was a traitor or a perjured villain, as gentlemen had represented him, he could not vote for it, because that was a matter which the House had nothing to with. Yet there were insinuations coming from high sources, from gentlemen on that floor, from representatives of the people, that there was an illegal, illegitimate and corrupt connection between Whitney and the Secretary of the Treasury and the deposit banks; and when charges came in this form he was prepared to meet them and give the investigation desired. He thought no wrong could be done by this; there was no fear of the innocent being made guilty by an investigation. Integrity could never suffer by investigation; its purity would be made more manifest and more attractive. Truth, like Thomson's beauty, is most adorned when unadorned.

He before said that he thought there was no improper connection between the individual alluded to, the deposit banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury; and he still thought so, but when urged on that floor, and from all quarters of the country, to make an inquiry, was it not due to the Secretary of the Treasury that this investigation should be had. If any one was guilty, and an improper connection did exist those concerned in it would be exposed to public view, and the corrupt officers would be removed from their places of trust; but if they be innocent, then the responsibility would rest on their accusers; and the public officers would stand acquitted, and be sustained by the American people; because they had passed the fiery ordeal, and been found pure and uncorrupted. He then appealed to gentlemen to meet the inquiry in the broadest form in which it might come. He thought the Secretary of the Treasury was too conscious of his own rectitude to shrink from any investigation. If he did, or any other officer would do so, they were not the men which ought to hold public trusts.

Those high officers who administered the Government should be like Caesar's wife, not only innocent, but unsuspected; and when suspicions were thrown upon them, let the officers meet them and drive them back, as the gloom of night is driven before the rays of the rising sun. He feared nothing which was to follow the investigation, because he believed every thing to be correct; if not, then fraud and corruption would be detected and exposed; therefore he would meet the charge, and give the investigation in its broadest form. He said the House had in its keeping American liberty itself; the preservation of our free institutions; their perpetuity and preservation depended upon the purity with which this Government was administered. This could only be done by closing every avenue to mal-administration.

Mr. GARLAND intimated his desire to modify his resolution; when

Mr. HARLAN withdrew his amendment. Consequently the amendment of Mr. VANDERPOEL fell; so that the resolution was before the House in its original form.

Mr. GARLAND of Virginia then submitted the following as a modification of his resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of nine members be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire whether the several banks employed for the deposit of the public money, have all, or any of them, by joint or several contract, employed an agent to reside at the seat of Government, to transact their business with the Treasury Department; what is the character of the business which he is so employed to transact, and what compensation he receives; whether said agent, if there be one, has been employed at the request, or through the procurement of the Treasury Department; whether the business of the Treasury Department with said banks is conducted through said agent; and whether, in the transaction of any business confided to said agent, he receives any compensation from the Treasury Department; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, if they deem it necessary.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury communicate to this House, if within his power, a statement of the dividends and surpluses which were declared by, and the surpluses and contingent funds remaining in, the several banks in which the public money is deposited for the years 1833, 1834, 1835, and 1836, severally.

Mr. McKAY then submitted the following amendment, to come in as a second resolution:

Resolved further, That the Secretary of the Treasury report the average amount of public moneys each of said banks has had on deposit on the first day of each quarter, in the aforesaid years respectively, together with any other information, which will show what proportion of said dividends and surpluses has been derived by the said banks for the use of the public moneys; also, as far as it can be ascertained what have been the dividends and surpluses of an equal number of the banks than those that have the public moneys for the last two years.

Mr. GARLAND of Va. accepted this amendment as a modification of his resolutions.

Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana, then moved to strike out of the second resolution the word "average," and insert the word "actual," so as to make it read "actual amount of public moneys," &c.; which motion, after some explanations by Messrs. GARLAND of Louisiana, and McKAY, was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS then moved to strike out of the first resolution, after the words "and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers," the words "if they deem it necessary to do so."

Mr. GARLAND of Va. accepted this as a modification.

Mr. ADAMS then called for a division of the question, so as to take the question separately on each resolution.

The first and second resolutions were then agreed to without a division.

Mr. CHAMBERS of Kentucky called for the yeas and nays on the third resolution, which were ordered, and the resolution adopted unanimously.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of the expenditures made out of the contingent appropriations of the Navy; which, on motion of Mr. A. H. SHEPPERD, was referred to the committee on so much of the public expenditures as relates to the Navy Department.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House another communication from the same, transmitting two hundred and seventy-five copies of the Naval Register, for the use of the members of the House: laid on the table.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the various sums paid out of the five per cent. fund of the nett proceeds of the sales of the public lands; which was laid on the table.

EXECUTIVE ADMINISTRATION.]

The orders of the day were called for, and the CHAIR announced the resolution, originally submitted by Mr. Wise, and reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, proposing an inquiry into the Executive Departments, and the amendment of Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island, as given below.

Mr. HANNEGAN remarked, that as the hour was late, and as the western States had heretofore been excluded from the opportunity of offering resolutions, he moved to postpone the subject till to-morrow for that purpose.

Mr. PICKENS, who was entitled to the floor, said, he had no particular objection to postpone the subject for one day, for the reason urged by the gentleman from Indiana, provided it was understood that it be made the special order for to-morrow. He added, that he had no wish, on his own part, that it should be postponed a moment longer, nor would he be instrumental in having it so, for he was quite prepared to go on.

Mr. JARVIS hoped it would not be postponed. Unless the resolutions were merely intended as a peg to hang speeches upon, there was no use in postponing them; for if it was intended to raise the proposed committee there was no time to spare.

The motion to postpone was lost, and the resolutions were then read.

The first, as reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, was as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the "condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, the vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business in all of them, and the causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation," be referred to a select committee, to consist of nine members, with power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to inquire into the condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, into the manner in which the public business has been discharged in all of them, and into all causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which said departments, or their bureaus or offices, or any of their officers or agents of every description whatever, directly or indirectly connected with them in any manner, officially or unofficially, in duties pertaining to the public interest, have fulfilled or failed to accomplish the objects of their creation, or have violated their duties, or have injured and impaired the public service and interest; and that said committee, in its inquiries, may refer to such periods of time as to them may seem expedient and proper."

The question pending, was the following amendment, moved by Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island: Strike out all after the word "resolved," and insert the following:

"That so much of the President's message as is in the following words, to wit: 'Before concluding this paper, I think it is due to the various Executive Departments to bear testimony to their prosperous condition, and to the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted.' It has been my aim to enforce in all of them a vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business; and it is gratifying to me to believe that there is no just cause of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation,' be referred to a select committee of nine members, with instructions to inquire into any specific causes of complaint which may be alleged against the integrity of the administration of any of the departments, or their bureaus of the vigilance and fidelity with which their duties have been discharged, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers."

Mr. PICKENS then addressed the House at length against the amendment, and in support of the original resolution, dwelling at large upon, and reviewing the policy and course of the administration of Gen. Jackson.

Mr. DUNLAP avowed himself in favor of the adoption of the original resolution, and entered into a spirited defence of General Jackson from the charges brought against him by the gentleman from South Carolina, and others, who had traduced the President's character. Mr. D. appealed to the gentleman from Rhode Island to withdraw his amendment, and suffer the question to be taken on the original resolution.

After some remarks from Mr. PEYTON in reply to his colleague, and from Mr. DUNLAP in rejoinder,

Mr. ROBERTSON obtained the floor, and moved that the House adjourn, but withdrew it to enable the Speaker to present a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the amount of surplus revenue remaining in the Treasury on the first day of the present month, with the proportions of the same that the several States will be entitled to receive under the act of the last session of Congress; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The House then adjourned.

IN SENATE,

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 4, 1837.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the Treasury Department, informing Congress of the measures adopted for carrying into effect the deposite law of the last session, and enclosing a table exhibiting the portion allotted to each of the several States. The report shows that twelve of the States have signified their acceptance of the terms of the act, and that transfers, equal in amount to their respective proportions for the first instalment, are now issuing to them; and adds that, in consequence of the convention recently held in Michigan, and the views expressed by the President of the United States in his late message, together with the provisions of the bill now pending in one House of Congress for her admission into the Union, the Department has supposed her situation to be so far changed, since November last, as to justify the assignment to her of her share of the public depositories, subject however to the future decision of Congress; the payment of which will be postponed till some expression of opinion shall be given by Congress which will either sanction its being made to her, or require its division among the other States.

The CHAIR also communicated a report from the Navy Department, transmitting, in pursuance of law, sixty copies of the Navy Register for the present year.

Mr. HENDRICKS presented a memorial numerously signed by citizens of the State of Indiana, stating that the falls of the Ohio river still present a serious obstacle to its navigation, notwithstanding the Louisville and Portland canal has been constructed to remedy that inconvenience. That the great and increasing commerce of the valley of the Mississippi, imperiously demands the removal of every obstruction to the free transit of western produce to its proper market in the south. That the many States interested in the navigation of the Ohio river, places this matter upon a level with any work in the Union; and that the national importance of this navigation, has been frequently recognised in the liberal appropriations which have been made by Congress for the removal of obstructions to the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, as well as in the subscription of stock to the Louisville and Portland Canal. The petitioners state that the object for which this canal was constructed has not been attained to the extent contemplated; because,

1st. The canal is too narrow and too shallow to accommodate boats of heavy tonnage.

2d. The site of the canal being peculiarly favorable to an accumulation of mud and the lodgment of drift wood, makes it necessary for the company occasionally to suspend business until those obstructions can be removed, creating a vexatious delay to boats, and restoring the old custom of land transportation from Louisville to Portland.

3d. That in consequence of the heavy expenditures necessary to keep the canal navigable, the company is compelled, in order to realize fair dividends, to exact exorbitant tolls, which operate as a great burden upon western commerce.

The petitioners respectfully represent it as the duty of the General Government to construct a free canal on the Indiana side of the river; and express a confidence in the opinion that such work can be completed for a less sum than would be requisite to purchase the stock in the Louisville and Portland canal, and that, when completed, it would be a much better work.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. KENT presented the memorial of James Williams, praying indemnity for French spoliation prior to 1800: referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RIVES presented the petition of Nathaniel Wattles, President of the Marine Insurance Company of Alexandria, D. C. praying indemnity for French spoliation prior to 1800: laid on the table.

Mr. DANA presented the petition of sundry citizens of Maine, praying for the establishment of a new mail route: referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. PARKER presented the petition of William P. Goodwin, son and legal representative of Francis Goodwin, late a surgeon's mate in the revolutionary army: referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. KING of Alabama presented the memorial of Susan Marlin, and the memorials of other individuals and Indian reservees on the same subject, stating that by the construction given to the acts of Congress passed in their favor by the officers of Government, they have been prevented from locating such tracts of land as would be of any service to them, and praying the interposition of of Congress in their behalf: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PRENTISS submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of constituting a board of Commissioners of Claims, whose duty it shall be to hear and examine all claims against the United States which may require the special legislation of Congress, and report the facts proved, with their opinion thereon, to Congress.

Mr. RIVES submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making compensation to James Points, Marshal of the Western District of Virginia, for extraordinary services rendered by him in detecting and apprehending a band of counterfeiters.

Mr. HUBBARD submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for extending the provisions of the act of the last session, giving pensions to widows in certain cases, so as to embrace the widows now living of all soldiers and officers of the revolution who would have been entitled to pensions under the act of June 7, 1832.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which a petition on the subject had been referred, reported a bill to establish a hospital in the District of Columbia; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. TOMLINSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which had been referred the petition of John McLeod, reported a bill granting him a pension; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. SEVIER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which the same had been referred, reported, with several amendments, the bill to provide for the legal adjudication and settlement of private land claims, in Louisiana and Arkansas, derived under the grants to Baron Bastrop and others.

Mr. KENT, from the select committee appointed to consider the subject, reported a bill to authorize the purchase of the right to use, in the army and navy of the United States, the apparatus of Doctor Boyd Riley, for the application of steam to the human body; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. DAVIS, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of the owners of the brig Despatch and cargo; which was read twice, and referred.

Mr. DAVIS, on leave, also introduced a bill to provide for the payment to several States of interest on advances made by them for the United States during the late war; which was read twice, and referred.

Mr. RIVES, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make certain advances to the Secretary of the Navy on account of the navy pension fund; which was twice read, and referred.

The joint resolution, introduced by Mr. ROBINS, directing the Committee on the Library to procure, as far as practicable, a certain number of copies of all the public and private laws of the several States, made both before and since the adoption of the present constitution, was considered; and, on motion of Mr. PRESTON, it was referred to the Committee on the Library.

SPECIAL ORDER.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the bill for the admission of Michigan into the Union. The question being on the amendment of Mr. MORRIS to strike out the preamble, and insert a substitute.

This question was debated by Messrs. MORRIS, BAYARD, and CRITTENDEN, in favor of the motion, and by Messrs. BROWN, NILES, and FULTON against it, and was decided in the negative—yeas 18, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Moore, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Sevier, Southard, Swift, and White—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Parker, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, and Wright—23.

Mr. SOUTHARD moved to strike out the preamble, which motion was rejected—yeas 16, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Kent, Knight, Moore, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, and White—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Parker, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, and Wright—25.

Mr. CALHOUN moved to strike out the preamble, and insert, in lieu thereof, a section repealing the conditions imposed on Michigan by the act of the last session, as to her assent to the boundary prescribed in that act.

On submitting this motion, Mr. CALHOUN moved that the Senate adjourn, in order to allow him an opportunity of addressing the Senate in its support the next day.

This motion was lost—yeas 13, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Calhoun, Davis, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Moore, Parker, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, and Swift—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, White, and Wright—24.

The question was then taken on Mr. CALHOUN'S amendment, and it was lost—yeas 12, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Davis, Kent, Knight, Moore, Morris, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, and White—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Parker, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, White, and Wright—25.

After some remarks from Mr. WHITE, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading—yeas 27, nays 4, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Knight, Linn, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Parker, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, White, and Wright—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Davis, and Prentiss—4.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 4, 1837.

Mr. CONNOR, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill for the relief of Patrick Greene; which was read twice and committed.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a resolution instructing that committee to inquire into the expediency of revising the acts of Congress relative to foreign missions; which was concurred in.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Daniel Davis: read twice and committed.

Mr. WARDWELL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Tawney York, deceased: read twice and committed.

Mr. PINCKNEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill for the relief of Ferdinand Clarke: read twice and committed.

Dr. DAWSON submitted the following resolution, which, under the rule, will lie one day on the table:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to communicate to this House, the report of the Naval Commission, who were charged with the examination of the South Atlantic seacoast, for the most eligible site for a naval depot and navy yard.

Mr. OWENS submitted the following resolution, which, under the rule, will lie over for one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish this House with a detailed statement of the number and names of the officers in the regular army of the United States, who have resigned their commissions within the last twelve months, and the dates of said resignations; the number and names of the officers who have applied for and obtained furloughs within the same period of time, the date of said furloughs, and the reasons for granting the same; and the number and names of the officers who have refused to comply with the last general order of the President of the United States, requiring the officers of the army to join their regiments, and the reasons for such non-compliance; and any other matter connected with this subject that he may deem important to the public interests.

On motion of Mr. LOYALL, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing Samuel Ross, disabled seaman of the United States, on the navy pension roll.

On motion of Mr. McKAY, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of prohibiting or regulating by law the practice of officers of the army being employed in the service of individuals or incorporated companies, and receiving compensation from them during the time they hold their commissions.

On motion of Mr. HOLSEY, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the granting of patents to assignees or holders of contracts of purchase of Creek reservations, which had been certified by the agent, and approved by the President, under the third article of the treaty with the Creek tribe of Indians, concluded at Washington, on the 24th day of March, 1832.

Mr. MONTGOMERY submitted the following resolution; which under the rule will lie on the table one day.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform this House what quantity of public lands belong to the United States in each State and Territory, and their aggregate amount; what has been the whole cost attending their purchase and management up to the 1st December, 1836; designating the amount of each of the various heads of expenditure, with the dates at which these lands have been acquired. Also, that he inform the House what amount of land has been surveyed and offered for sale in each of the States and Territories; the amount which has been sold in each; the amount sold at public sale; the amount purchased at private sale; the probable amount that has been purchased by speculators; the amount that has probably been taken for actual settlement; the amount that will probably bring the Government price or more; what amount will bring less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and over seventy-five cents per acre; what amount will bring seventy-five cents, and over fifty cents per acre; what amount will bring fifty cents, and over twenty-five cents per acre; what amount will bring twenty-five cents, and under; and what amount will not sell at any price. Also, the amount of cash paid into the public Treasury, and disbursements made therefrom annually since 1790 inclusive.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, it was Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the propriety and justice of making an additional appropriation of land, to satisfy the warrants in scrip which have been issued, and which may hereafter issue, in virtue of the laws and ordinances of the United States, and of the State of Virginia, for services in the army of the revolution. And that the committee further inquire into the propriety of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, in cases where scrip may have been, or shall be issued, and all the heirs, and others interested therein, shall not appear or join in receiving the same, to issue to those who shall appear or join, or their attorney or attorneys, their proper proportion, reserving in the Treasury the portion due to those who do not appear or join as aforesaid.

Mr. C. ALLAN submitted the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, Congress has heretofore made donations of the public lands for the purposes of internal improvement and education:

To the State of Ohio,	1,737,838 acres.
Indiana,	1,112,592
Illinois,	1,712,225
Missouri,	1,181,248
Mississippi,	733,244
Alabama,	1,216,450
Louisiana,	920,053
Ter. of Michigan,	599,973
Arkansas,	996,338
Florida,	947,724

In the aggregate amounting to 11,057,685 acres.

And whereas, each of the United States has an equal right to participate in the benefit of the public lands, the common property of the Union; and every wise and good American having agreed in the opinion that the cause of general reduction is indissolubly identified with the cause of general liberty; Therefore, to do equal, and exact justice to all the States; to aid in diffusing among the rising generation intelligence enough to comprehend, and spirit enough to defend their rights, and thus to elevate the national character, and insure the perpetuity of our free institutions,

Be it resolved, That a select committee, to consist of one member from each State, be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the justice and expediency of making to each of the thirteen original American States, together with each of the States of Maine, Vermont, Kentucky, and Tennessee, such grants of the public lands for the purposes of education, as will correspond in a just proportion with those heretofore made in favor of the first named States and Territories, and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise. But, to avoid the objection of one State holding land in another, the committee is directed to insert a clause in the bill which they may report, providing that the grants to be made thereby shall be subject to sale under the laws of the General Government now in force, and that the proceeds arising therefrom shall be paid over to the States entitled to the same.

Mr. HALL of Maine moved to strike out of the resolution the words "Select Committee," and insert "Committee on the Public Lands."

Mr. ALLEN hoped the amendment would not be adopted, because the Committee on the Public Lands was principally composed of members from the new States, to which these grants had been made. He did not consider that it was doing the old States justice by referring this subject to that committee. He did not object to the new States getting these lands; he rejoiced that they had got them. But his object now was to extend this benefit to all the States for the purposes of education. This, he considered, would be taking nothing from the new States, because this land was the common property of the nation; at any rate, he only proposed to submit to the consideration of a committee of one member from each of the States this subject, so that they might inquire into the propriety, the expediency, and the justice of the measure. This inquiry was of a nature so important that he was satisfied that his constituents, and the citizens of the old States generally, would not be satisfied, unless it was sent to a committee of members from all of the States.

Mr. HALL having withdrawn his amendment, Mr. DAVIS said he did not rise to discuss the question as it would be premature at this stage of the proceedings, but he rose to express his astonishment at the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky, (Mr. Allen.) Sir, said Mr. D. the proposition is one carrying with it palpable and gross injustice to the new States. To prove this fact, it is but necessary to refer to the ratio by which the surplus revenue is distributed; in addition to the thousands and millions expended in the old States upon fortifications, ships of war, custom-houses, and a thousand other public works, they receive by the bill of the last session, a very large amount over and above what their population would entitle them to, take for example said Mr. D. those States whose representation on this floor would not be sustained, if the ratio of 1830 was now applied; and yet at this very moment the State of Indiana, under the same ratio, is entitled to fifteen or sixteen representatives; and yet forsooth the gentleman is desirous that the old States shall have the power to put their fingers into the Treasury, and take therefrom an additional quantum of that revenue which is principally acquired by the labor and enterprise of the new States.

Mr. D. had hoped better things from the gentleman; he had hoped that the gentleman's knowledge of the privations incident to the settlement of the new States would not have urged him to impose this additional requirement upon a people already most unjustly taxed. Sir, said Mr. D. if the old States possess the power thus to infringe upon the rights of the west, to wring from that oppressed portion of your country the proceeds of their labor, and are determined to carry out the principle of such unjust exactions, I shall not be surprised, soon to see our private lands, if not our personal property, made the source of additional revenue, for the benefit of the old States.

The gentleman has appealed to the justice and magnanimity of the members of the new States in submitting this proposition. Sir, said Mr. D. that word justice is entirely a relative term; and if his proposition carries with it justice in his estimation, it is the farthest imaginable from being justice in my view of the subject. Sir, the old States jointly have already been ruling us with a rod of iron upon this subject, and we have little hope that our condition would be bettered by their disjointed control. I ardently hope that the proposition may not obtain even a reference. For my own part I am prepared to vote against it now and to all future time. Mr. D. concluded by moving to lay the proposition on the table; but withdrew it at the request of

Mr. VINTON, who submitted the following amendment to the resolution:

"That said committee be further instructed to inquire into the expediency of inserting a clause in said bill to pay said new States the value of the improvements made by them on the public lands, or to pay to them the amount the public lands would have been assessed for taxes if they had been private."

Mr. VINTON had no objection to have this subject go to a select or standing committee, but he could not, as a representative of one of the new States, consent that the impression should be raised in that House or elsewhere, that the new States had received a larger proportion of the public lands than they were entitled to receive. He argued that the grants of lands to the new States was not a gratuity, and that the General Government had received an equivalent therefor. The State of Ohio and other States, assessed no tax on the public lands, when private citizens were taxed by the State to make improvements on those lands, which enhanced their value. A large proportion of the roads in the State of Ohio were made on the public lands, and the property of private individuals were taxed to make them. By this means lands which were worth nothing before, were immediately sold, and the proceeds sent into the Public Treasury. The Government to be sure had made donations of lands for canals and other improvements, but it always received an equivalent. He instanced the grant made to the canal connecting the waters of the lakes and the Ohio river; and for which the Government had the privilege of transporting troops and public property on the same, free of toll. For the purpose then of doing the new States justice, he had proposed an amendment, providing that, if land was given to the old States, the new States should receive an equivalent in taxes.

Mr. ALLAN again defended his resolution, and denied that he intended to take any thing away from the new States that they were already possessed of. What he wanted was distributive justice; and the whole argument, so often brought forward in favor of the new States, was based on injustice and sophistry. At least he hoped the inquiry would be made; and he was astonished that members from the new States should object to this.

Mr. VINTON denied that he opposed an inquiry. What he wished was that the new States should be included in the investigation.

Mr. ALLAN was not opposed to the new States; and if it could be shown that they merited special privileges, he was ready to accord them; but he was well assured, and believed he could satisfy every candid mind, that they had no such claims as had been set up for them.

Mr. BRIGGS should vote for the inquiry; for it proposed nothing more than what was just, equal, and proper between the several States. He was surprised at the opposition coming from the gentlemen from Ohio and Indiana. On what ground could Ohio complain in respect to her works of internal improvement? What she had done with the General Government was a matter of contract; and her works of internal improvement had been carried on for her own benefit.

Mr. PARKER concurred entirely with the last gentleman, and, for one, expressed his thanks to the gentleman from Kentucky for having introduced this resolution. Why, was not the public domain the property of the whole people? Why should the people of New Jersey, for instance, be excluded from partaking in this benefit, as well as the people of the new States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Louisiana, denied that the grants of land made to the new States, were made at the time under the character of donations. It was a compromise, made in consideration of the exemption of the public lands from taxation for five years after their sale or entry. He moved to extend the provisions of the resolution, so as to embrace all the States, but the CHAIR deciding that another amendment could not be moved pending the one under consideration.

Mr. VINTON then modified his amendment as follows, by inserting a further clause, that the inquiry be extended to all the States; which Mr. ALLAN accepted as a modification of the original resolution.

Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi, moved a proviso, that no such grant should interfere with, or be located on the claims or improvements of any actual settler on the public lands.

Mr. CLAIBORNE briefly addressed the House in advocacy of the cause and claims of the actual settlers on the public lands. [His remarks will be published as soon as they can be prepared for the press.]

Mr. ASHLEY renewed the motion to refer the subject to the Committee on the Public Lands, on the ground that that was the most appropriate reference; but it was decided to be not then in order.

Mr. JARVIS said, as the resolution had been modified so as to extend the inquiry, he should vote for it; but he could not see why so much time should be taken up in discussing the merits of the question at this incipient stage. It would be time enough for every gentleman to express his opinion when the report of the committee should come into the House. He demanded the previous question, but the House refused to second it.

Mr. MANN of New York, said it must be apparent, by this time, that this proposition was neither more nor less than a new edition of the old and exploded idea of distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, attempted to be concealed under rubbish and verbiage, and gilded over by the patriotic idea of applying it to public education. Its paucity is suspicious, and its hope fallacious and delusive. The resolution following the preamble, discloses its object in its argument: "to avoid the objection of one State holding land in another, the committee are to be instructed to report a provision, that the lands be sold by the United States, and the proceeds given to the old States for the purposes of education." Sir, (said Mr. M.) what more distinct surrender of the principles of dividing "the spoils" of the public lands among the States could be desired, than is contained in this provision?

Sir, gentlemen sometimes express their surprise at the various propositions submitted; but, sir, I am no longer surprised at any thing occurring here. I have been here too long for that, sir. But I will admit that I heard the remarks of my friend from Mississippi (Mr. Claiborne) on this subject with regret. I am confident, however, sir, that those remarks proceeded from any other cause than a sense of the injustice or illiberality of Congress towards the new States; and I am sure that, on more experience here, and a more careful consideration of the subject upon broad and liberal principles, my honorable and talented young friend will not cherish any of the feelings he has expressed. I know (said Mr. M.) the purity of his feelings and the generosity of his nature too well, I trust, to suppose him for a moment capable of acting upon local, selfish or narrow principles, to favor his own or any other State.

The preamble, Mr. M. repeated, to this resolution is illusory and deceptive, addressed to the cupidity of the old States represented upon this floor. It recites the grants made by Congress to each of the new States of the public lands in the aggregate, without specifying the motive or consideration upon which they were made. Its argument is, that an equal quantity should be granted to the old States, to make them respectively equal sharers in the public lands. Now, sir, said Mr. M. nothing could be devised more disingenuous and deceptive. Let us look at it briefly. The idea is that the old States granted these lands to the new for an implied consideration, and resulting benefit to themselves; that it was a sort of Indian gift, to be refunded with increase. Not so, sir, at all. If Mr. M. understood the motives inducing those grants, they were paternal on the part of the old States; proceeding upon that generous and noble liberality which induces a wealthy father to advance and provide for his children. This was the moving consideration, though he, Mr. M. was aware that the grants in aid of the improvements of the new States and Territories, were upon consideration of advancing the sale and improvement of the remaining lands in those States held by the United States.

We were now asked, he, Mr. M. believed, for the first and he hoped for the last time, to destroy that parental and fraternal feeling which had always bound the new States to the old in an indissoluble union, by arraying before them our liberal beneficence, and claiming from them an equivalent. Sir, we should remember that the people of the new States are our enterprising citizens from the old—our friends and our children; and if we establish the principle contained in this proposition, we might as well claim from them a remuneration for all our appropriations to make their roads, to open and render habitable the country sought by their enterprise. We might, in short, claim a remuneration for the loss of our population and wealth which has been transferred from the old to the new States. The principle carried out would result in this. Mr. M. said he perceived that the States of Kentucky and Tennessee were to share in this proposed bounty. Most of the old States possessed a large share of land which they have devoted to the various purposes of their own infant Governments. When the people of the new left the old States, they relinquished their interests in those lands, and the funds proceeding from them, and this consideration has, perhaps, had some effect with Congress in extending their liberality to the people of the new States. It should do so.

The United States continue to hold their large domain in those new States, and to derive a revenue therefrom. Not so with the States of Kentucky and Tennessee. These were not colonial States. How did they acquire title to the lands within their jurisdictions? Not by grant from the United States, or any one of them. Time will not permit, Mr. Speaker, to relate the history of those transactions now. Suffice it to say, they made "lawful prize of the lands" they now held, no matter whether by discovery or conquest. They wish now to share a new division of spoils; and if any is to be had, perhaps it is right they should.

Mr. M. concluded by saying, that when it shall be in order, he would move to strike out the preamble to this resolution entirely, as illusory, argumentative, and deceptive.

Mr. CAMBRELENG thought they had better dispose of one resolution at a time, and he therefore called for the orders of the day.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Executive communications:

1. From the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the Register and Receiver of the Land Office of the southwestern district of Louisiana; which, on motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Louisiana, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

2. Another communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report, in pursuance of a resolution of the 10th of July, 1832, directing that officer to lay before the House, at each succeeding session of Congress, copies of the statements and returns showing the capital, circulation, discounts, amount of specie, deposits, &c. of the different State banks and banking companies; which, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, was laid on the table; and, on motion of Mr. PARKER, 5,000 extra copies were ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE ADMINISTRATION.

The House then resumed the consideration of the resolution, originally submitted by Mr. WISE, and the amendment proposed thereto by Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island, for an inquiry into alleged abuses of the Executive Departments of the Government.

Mr. ROBERTSON, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the House at length in support of the original resolution, and in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island, (Mr. Pearce.) The objection to this resolution, (said Mr. R.) was more to the form than to the substance. He considered the form the proper one; the form of the present resolution constituted its essential importance. It had been objected to the resolution that it was a kind of general search. Was the institution of an inquiry into the management of the Executive Departments to be looked upon as a general search? He objected to giving specification; and considered that the object of the inquiry would be entirely frustrated by the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Rhode Island. He would think but little of one of the heads of departments, who should take exception to this resolution, on the ground of its being a general search; it would be nothing more nor less than the plea of a quibbling attorney. If a committee was to go to make an examination into the affairs of the Treasury, the deposit banks, and Reuben M. Whitney, were they to be told that they must make no examination unless the charges against the parties were specific? Mr. R. then proceeded to reply to the remarks heretofore made by the gentleman from Rhode Island, (Mr. Pearce,) and adverted, with some severity, to the course of that gentleman at a former period. He also reviewed the whole course of the administration, pointing out various transactions, which, he contended, were abuses, and read extracts from various documents in support of his position. After dwelling upon these topics at considerable length, Mr. R. gave way, without concluding, to

Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana, who moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. BOON called for the yeas and nays on this motion, which were not ordered, and then

The House adjourned,

SELECT COMMITTEE

On the resolution for an inquiry whether the deposit banks have employed an agent at the seat of the General Government to transact their business with the Treasury Department, &c.

Mr. GARLAND of Virginia.

PIERCE of New Hampshire.

FAIRFIELD of Maine.

WISE of Virginia.

GILLET of New York.

JOHNSON of Louisiana.

HAMER of Ohio.

MARTIN of Alabama.

PEYTON of Tennessee.

IN SENATE,

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5, 1837.

The CHAIR communicated a letter from the Hon. ALEXANDER PORTER, a Senator of the United States from the State of Louisiana, resigning his seat in the Senate of the United States, which was read.

The CHAIR communicated a report from the Navy Department, made in compliance with the act of April, 1818, containing a statement of the number of clerks employed in that department, and in the office of the Commissioners of the Navy.

Also, a letter from the same department, enclosing a report from the Board of Navy Commissioners, of the examination and surveys made by them of the waters of Narraganset bay, made in obedience to a resolution of the Senate at the last session.

Mr. KENT presented a memorial from sundry merchants of Baltimore, importers of hardware, praying for a modification of the tariff law of 1832: referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. KENT also presented the memorial of sundry citizens of Alexandria, District of Columbia, praying for an act of Congress to amend their charter: referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BOBINSON presented the petition of Benjamin Harris, praying permission to locate a land warrant; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEVIER presented a memorial from the Legislature of Arkansas, praying for an extension of the National road from St. Louis to the seat of Government in Arkansas. Referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals. Also, a memorial from the same, praying for the change of location of certain school lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LINN presented the petition of Job Wood, praying for a pension, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions; and the petition of John B. Valle, praying permission to locate a tract of land: referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. TALLMADGE presented the petition of — Smith, praying for arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HUBBARD presented the petition of the widow of Thomas Cogswell; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. HUBBARD also presented the petition of Parker Cole, praying for arrearages of pension: referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FULTON presented resolutions from the Legislature of Arkansas, instructing their Senators to vote for the expurgation from the journal of the resolution of the 28th March, 1834, condemning President Jackson for removing the public deposits from the Bank of the United States; which were read, laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been referred the bill to extend, for a longer period, the several acts now in force for the relief of the insolvent debtors of the United States, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to which had been referred the petition of sundry umbrella-makers of Philadelphia, praying for a reduction of the duties on certain articles used by them in their business, moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which had been referred the petition of Thomas H. Perkins and others, reported a bill for their relief, which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KING of Alabama, from the Committee on Commerce, to which had been referred the several memorials from citizens of Philadelphia, praying for the erection of a new custom-house at that place; and a resolution submitted by Mr. NICHOLAS of Alabama, directing the committee to inquire into the expediency of erecting a new custom-house at the city of New Orleans, reported a bill making appropriations for those objects; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. RIVES submitted the following resolutions, which lie on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the District Judge for the eastern district of Virginia.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making additional provision, by law, for the compensation of the clerks of the federal courts held at Richmond and Norfolk, in the State of Virginia.

Mr. HENDRICKS submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry or delivery at Fort Wayne.

Mr. RUGGLES submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to the Senate copies of the surveys, estimates, and maps, of Owlhead harbor and Cabscook bay, taken pursuant to a resolution of the Senate at the last session.

Mr. KING of Alabama submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire into the propriety of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay equitable commissions to the attorneys of persons, the sums awarded to whom under the treaty with France were taken for debts due by them to the United States.

Mr. NICHOLAS submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be instructed to inquire into the propriety of confirming the report of the Register and Receiver of the Land office at St. Stephens, in the State of Alabama, acting as commissioner under the authority of the 3d section of an act of Congress, passed the 2d March, 1829, recommending for confirmation the title of Andrew Demetry to lands on the bay of St. Louis, which report was made on the 16th February, 1834.

STATE OF MICHIGAN.

The bill, for the admission of Michigan into the Union came up on its third reading; and after a debate, in which the bill was supported by Messrs. STRANGE, BUCHANAN, and KING of Georgia, and opposed by Messrs. CALHOUN and DAVIS, on taking the question, the bill was passed—yeas 25, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Parker, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, White, and Wright—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Kent, Moore, Prentiss, Southard, and Swift—10.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

THURSDAY, JAN. 5, 1837.

On motion of Mr. HALL of Maine it was ordered that the Committee on Enrolled Bills, on the part of the House, be now appointed.

In pursuance of this order the CHAIR appointed Mr. HALL of Maine, and Mr. BRIGGS of Massachusetts, said committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Kentucky, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the benefit of Fielding Pratt: read twice and committed.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to which had been referred the memorial of Sarah Brickall and others, praying for relief from French spoiliations, prior to 1800, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which was granted.

On motion of Mr. JENIFER, the Committee on Invalid Pensions were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the heirs of Lieut. Col. Blackburn, praying to be allowed the half pay to which he was entitled; and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

On motion of Mr. INGERSOLL, the Committee of Ways and Means were discharged from the further consideration of the memorial for the Umbrella Manufacturers of Philadelphia; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

On motion of Mr. S. WILLIAMS, the Committee on Invalid Pensions were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Samuel Edgcomb, of Connecticut, praying for an increase of pension on account of wounds received in the war of the revolution; and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. McKIM, from the Committee of Ways and Means, moved that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of sundry merchants of Baltimore, dealers in hardware, for the repeal of the 10th and 12th sections of the tariff act of July, 1832, and that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which had the bill on the same subject under consideration.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON of Pennsylvania, the Committee on Invalid Pensions were discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of James Allen and Moses Smith; and the petitions were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the petitions of J. M. Rea, James Bean and Samuel Oran; which reports were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARPER, from the Select Committee on the Patent Office, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Daniel Pease, Jr.; which was laid on the table.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ADAMS rose and gave notice that on tomorrow he should submit a motion to repeal the 77th and 78th rules of the House. [The rules in question relate to the appointment of the six additional standing committees on expenditures in the public departments, and prescribe their duties.]

Mr. MANN of New York also gave notice that at the same time he should move to take up the report of the select committee, made at the last session, on the subject of the rules of the House generally.

CONNECTICUT MILITIA.

Mr. TOUCEY gave notice that when the House next resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the state of the Union, he should move to take up and consider the "bill for the settlement of the claim of Connecticut against the United States for the services of her militia during the late war."

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The House then resumed the consideration of the following preamble and resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. C. ALLAN, as modified:

Whereas, Congress has heretofore made donations of the public lands for the purposes of internal improvement and education:

To the State of Ohio,	1,737,838 acres.
Indiana,	1,112,592
Illinois,	1,712,225
Missouri,	1,181,248
Mississippi,	733,244
Alabama,	1,216,450
Louisiana,	920,053
Ter. o. Michigan,	599,973
Arkansas,	996,338
Florida,	947,724

In the aggregate amounting to 11,057,685 acres.

And whereas, each of the United States has an equal right to participate in the benefit of the public lands, the common property of the Union; and every wise and good American having agreed in the opinion that the cause of general reduction is indissolubly identified with the cause of general liberty: Therefore, to do equal and exact justice to all the States; to aid in diffusing among the rising generation intelligence enough to comprehend, and spirit enough to defend their rights, and thus to elevate the national character, and insure the perpetuity of our free institutions,

Be it resolved, That a select committee, to consist of one member from each State, be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the justice and expediency of making to each of the thirteen original American States, together with each of the States of Maine, Vermont, Kentucky, and Tennessee, such grants of the public lands for the purposes of education, as will correspond in a just proportion with those heretofore made in favor of the first named States and Territories, and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise. But, to avoid the objection of one State holding land in another, the committee is directed to insert a clause in the bill which they may report, providing that the grants to be made thereby shall be subject to sale under the laws of the General Government now in force, and that the proceeds arising therefrom shall be paid over to the States entitled to the same.

Resolved further, That the said inquiry be extended to all the States.

The question pending was the following amendment, moved by Mr. VINTON:

"That said committee be further instructed to inquire into the expediency of inserting a clause in said bill to pay said new States the value of the improvements made by them on the public lands, or to pay to them the amount the public lands would have been assessed for taxes if they had been private."

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri addressed the House at some length in opposition to the resolution. He considered the preamble to the resolution wholly deceptive and erroneous. It assumed the position that the grants made to the new States were a gratuity, when in fact, Mr. H. said, those States paid what he considered the very highest possible price for those lands. They had given up to the Government, as a consideration for those lands, a portion of their most sacred rights—a portion of the principle of sovereignty itself. The new States gave up the right of taxation—a right which he considered an essential ingredient of sovereignty. This was one of the rights which the new States gave up for the lands which the gentleman from Kentucky had called a donation. Mr. H. said the conditions would be seen, by the ordinance of 1787, on which the new States received those lands; and he read various extracts from that document, and other resolutions and acts of Congress, to show the conditions which were imposed upon the new States. The conditions imposed were, that the public lands should not be taxed while they belonged to the Government, nor for some years after their sale.

The gentleman from Kentucky charged that the State of Ohio had received several thousand acres of the public lands as a gift, and that the State he had the honor to represent had received a large number of acres as a gratuity. Now, Mr. H. said Missouri had never received an acre but what was received under the ordinance and laws to which he had alluded, which provided that the public lands should not be taxed; yet the gentleman from Kentucky charged that the new States had received exclusive privileges from the General Government. Mr. H. denied that Congress had the power to make the grants which the gentleman asked for in his resolution, and read extracts from various documents in support of his position. He contended that, if the measures proposed by this resolution were carried out, it would place the new States in a state of vassalage to the old States. Divide the lands among the several States, and you give the new States nineteen masters instead of one, and they would be completely in the power of the old States. They would be as lambs in the hands of the shearers. The people of the western States were vitally interested in this question; they had paid, and more than paid, the General Government for her donations. They had made canals and railroads, and enhanced the value of the public lands; and in this way alone he considered they had paid for them; but they had done more than this; for it was by the boldness and perseverance of the western pioneers that the lands were rescued from the Indians, and made available to the General Government. Yet after all this the new States were dependent upon the General Government; because they could not construct a road or canal through these lands without coming before Congress and asking the right of way. He considered that this proposition came with a bad grace from the gentleman from Kentucky; because the State of Kentucky had for a long time been selling the public lands which she had obtained from the General Government, and still had more to sell. He hoped this resolution would not pass, at least in the form in which it was; and gave notice that when it should be in order he would move an amendment, providing that the old States which had received land, should not receive an equal proportion with those which had not.

Mr. HANNEGAN moved to lay the resolution and amendments on the table.

Mr. C. ALLAN asked for the yeas and nays on this motion; which were ordered, and were as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ash, Ashley, Barton, Beale, Bean, Beaumont, Black, Bockee, Bond, Boon, Boyce, Boyd, Brown, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chapman, Chapin, J. F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Dawson, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Dunkap, Efner, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, J. Garland, R. Garland, Gillet, Grantland, Haley, J. Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, A. G. Harrison, Haynes, Holt, Howard, Hubley, Huntington, Ingham, Jarvis, Cave Johnson, H. Johnson, B. Jones, Kilgore, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, G. Lee, J. Lee, Leonard, Loyall, Lyon, A. Mann, J. Mann, W. Mason, McCarty, McLene, Miller, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Page, Parks, Patterson, F. Pierce, Phelps, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Rogers, Seymour, Shields, Sickles, Smith, Storer, J. Thomson, Toucey, Turritt, Vanderpool, Vinton, Ward, Wardwell, Webster, Weeks, E. Whittlesey, T. T. Whittlesey, and Yell—95.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, C. Allan, H. Allen, Bailey, Bell, Borden, Bouldin, Briggs, Buchanan, Bunch, J. Calhoun, W. B. Calhoun, Carter, G. Chambers, J. Chambers, Chetwood, N. H. Claiborne, Clark, Connor, Corwin, Craue, Darlington, Deberry, Denny, Elmore, Evans, Everett, Fowler, French, Graham, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, H. Hall, Hard, Harlan, Harper, S. Harrison, Hoar, Holsey, Hopkins, Howell, Hunt, Huntsman, Ingersoll, Jones, Daniel Jenifer, Joseph Johnson, Kennon, Laporte, Lawrence, Lay, L. Lea, Lincoln, Love, S. Mason, Maury, McCormas, McKay, McKennan, McKim, Milligan, Montgomery, Owens, Parker, D. J. Pearce, J. A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Peyton, Phillips, Pickens, Potts, Reed, Rencher, Richardson, Robertson, Russell, Schenck, W. B. Shepard, A. H. Shepperd, Shinn, Slade, Sloane, Sprague, Standefer, Steele, Taliaferro, W. Thompson, Turner, Underwood, Wagener, Washington, White, L. Williams, S. Williams, and Young—99.

So the motion to lay on the table was disagreed to.

Mr. LANE obtained the floor, but gave way to Mr. GARLAND of Virginia, on whose motion the House proceeded to the orders of the day.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Executive communications:

1. From the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the names of the clerks employed in that department, and the amount of compensation paid to each; which, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

2. From the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting information called for by a resolution of the House of the 26th ult. in relation to the causes that have prevented the execution of the 9th article of the treaty between Spain and the United States, 22d of February, 1819; which, on motion of Mr. HOWARD, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE ADMINISTRATION.

The House then resumed the consideration of the resolution, originally submitted by Mr. WISE, and the amendment proposed thereto by Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island, for an inquiry into alleged abuses of the Executive Departments of the Government, as follows:

The first, as reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, was as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the "condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, the vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business in all of them, and the causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation," be referred to a select committee, to consist of nine members, with power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to inquire into the condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, into the manner in which the public business has been discharged in all of them, and into all causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which said departments, or their bureaus or offices, or any of their officers or agents of every description whatever, directly or indirectly connected with them in any manner, officially or unofficially, in duties pertaining to the public interest, have fulfilled or failed to accomplish the objects of their creation, or have violated their duties, or have injured and impaired the public service and interest; and that said committee, in its inquiries, may refer to such periods of time as to them may seem expedient and proper."

The question pending, was the following amendment, moved by Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island: strike out all after the word "resolved," and insert the following:

"That so much of the President's message as is in the following words, to wit: 'Before concluding this paper, I think it is due to the various Executive Departments to bear testimony to their prosperous condition, and to the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted. It has been my aim to enforce in all of them a vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business, and it is gratifying to me to believe that there is no just cause of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation,' be referred to a select committee of nine members, with instructions to inquire into any specific causes of complaint which may be alleged against the integrity of the administration of any of the departments, or their bureaus, of the vigilance and fidelity with which their duties have been discharged, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers."

Mr. ROBERTSON concluded his remarks. He adverted to the declaration of uncompromising hostility, avowed by some gentlemen to the coming administration, in which he was not disposed to join. He would not go so far as that, or prejudice the course of the new President, and denounce his acts beforehand, for, if the principles of Mr. Van Buren's administration coincided with Mr. R.'s, it should have his support.

Mr. R. went on to show that the effect of the amendment, if it should be adopted, would be so to tie up the hands of the committee as to render a full inquiry impracticable. It had been said that the resolution, from the absence of specification, was without precedent. This was not so, and in refutation of it he adverted to the resolution for inquiring into the abuses of the Post Office Department. That case also presented a striking parallel to the present. Again and again was the denial reiterated, that no abuses existed in that department; and, as in this case, the opinion of the Executive was quoted in support of the contradiction; and yet what a mass of fraudulent, corrupt, and collusive practices, were brought to light by the labors of that committee! Extra allowances to an enormous extent, made without evidence of service; contracts made by collusion and bribery; alterations and erasures of the accounts, without end; and all these things had been going on for years, when the purity and regularity of the office were daily lauded in the Halls of Congress and other places. After dwelling upon various arguments in support of the original resolution for some time, Mr. R. concluded, and

Mr. HANNEGAN obtained the floor, and gave his reasons why he should support the original resolution. He should vote for it, because, when an honorable member on that floor rose and proclaimed corruption, and demanded a committee to aid him in investigating it, Mr. H. would always vote for it. Here was also another reason, and that was to ascertain the truth in regard to Reuben M. Whitney; against whom charges of a high character had been ringing in that hall for the last two years, and it had become due to the country, and due to that individual, and to his family, that either the truth or falsehood of those charges should be ascertained.

Mr. HAMER followed in reply to all the charges brought against the administration by those opposed to it. [Want of time, and the lateness of the hour at which the House adjourned, prevent our giving even a synopsis of the remarks of Mr. HANNEGAN or Mr. HAMER; they will be given in extenso so soon as they can be prepared for the press.] Without concluding, Mr. HAMER gave way to Mr. ANTHONY, on whose motion

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

FRIDAY, JANUARY 6, 1837.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the Treasury Department, made in compliance with the act fixing the compensation of the Ministers and Consuls of the United States residing on the coast of Barbary, showing the number of those officers, with the compensation paid to each.

Mr. WHITE presented the petition of Samuel Martin, praying Congress to encourage the linen manufacture; which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. TOMLINSON presented the petition of De Forest Maurice, praying the return of certain duties paid by him in 1833: referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RIVES presented the petition of Gatano Carusi, praying compensation for services rendered, and losses, sustained under a contract with certain officers of the United States Navy: referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the memorial of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, praying that an appropriation may be made for the erection of a suitable building for the accommodation of the courts of the United States, and also for the erection of a penitentiary at that city.

Mr. B. said, in presenting the petition, I recommend it to the consideration of the Judiciary Committee. I can say we have brought the penitentiary system in Pennsylvania to perfection. Our plan has become a model, not only in many parts of this country, but in Europe. And as it will be necessary, at no remote time, for the United States to erect penitentiaries, it appears to me that there is not a more suitable place where to commence than Philadelphia.

Mr. CALHOUN called for the reading of the memorial; and it having been read, Mr. C. said he had no objection to its being referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; but he hoped they would pause and weigh the question a long time before they would give their assent to our commencing a penitentiary system of the United States. There was patronage enough exercised by the General Government already—its powers were great and extensive, without their being introduced into a State. He objected to a State and General Government acting together. He merely threw out these suggestions to the committee, in the hope that they would pause a long time before they would give their sanction to the commencement of the proposed system.

Mr. GRUNDY said he did not object to the reference of the memorial to the committee of which he was a member. But as to pausing a long time on the subject, he had made up his mind, and he would say, that so far as he could judge of the disposition of his colleagues, they would not have to pause for any length of time, for the committee would report in a few days, not only on the subject of penitentiaries, but on court-houses also.

Mr. BUCHANAN remarked, that he was sorry to hear that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee had made up his mind on the subject. It appeared to him (Mr. B.) that at some period, not very remote, it would be necessary for the Government of the United States to erect penitentiaries. How could it be avoided? As long as the Government of the United States are a Government executing their own laws, and punishing offenders against them, they must make some provision for their punishment. The States, without entertaining any hostility to the Government of this Union, might find it very inconvenient to accommodate the prisoners sentenced by virtue of the laws of the United States. What was to be done? Were they to be set at liberty? Were they not to receive the punishment inflicted by the laws? He could not suppose that any State would not show a proper comity to the United States Courts. But suppose it should happen that they were unable or unwilling to do this, in what a situation would the Government be placed. He could not, he confessed, see in this thing any interference with the rights or the liberties of the States. He had no idea that his calling the attention of the Judiciary Committee to the subject would have caused the least debate, or he would not have done it.

The petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TALMADGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Frederick Boyer, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the same committee, to which had been referred the petition of Commodore Isaac Hull, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading. Also, reported a bill for the relief of Nicholas G. Hunter; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. CLAY presented the petition of John McLane, a citizen of Virginia, owning property in the State of Illinois, opposite to an island in the Mississippi river, which he prays, for reasons therein set forth, to be allowed to purchase: referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. LINN,

Ordered, That the vacancy in the Committee on Private Land Claims, occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. ALEXANDER PORTER, be filled by the Chair; and Mr. STRANGE was accordingly appointed.

Mr. KENT presented the petition of the Franklin Fire Insurance Company of this city, praying that an act may be passed for the renewal of their charter, with certain amendments; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN presented the petition of the administrator of Covington Simpson, praying indemnity for French spoils prior to the year 1800; which was laid on the table.

Mr. CALHOUN submitted the following resolution; which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the Senate as early as possible, the undrawn appropriations on the 1st day of January instant, with the date of the acts making such appropriations.

Mr. TALMADGE submitted the following resolutions, which lie on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry at Poughkeepsie, in the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing a survey of the ship channel of the Hudson river, from the city of New York to the city of Troy, with a view to the erection of beacons and spindles, and of placing buoys at the shoal places on dangerous points.

The resolutions submitted yesterday by Messrs. RIVES, HENDRICKS, and RUGGLES, were considered and adopted.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers and seamen of the United States schooner Wild Cat; which was twice read and referred.

On motion of Mr. CLAY,

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution introduced by Mr. EWING of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order designating the funds which shall be received in payment of the public lands; when

Mr. SOUTHARD, who had the floor, addressed the Senate in a speech of some length in support of the resolution, and in conclusion of his remarks commenced when the subject was last up; after which,

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, the further consideration of the subject was postponed for the purpose of taking up the bill supplementary to the act establishing the Mint and to regulate the coins of the United States.

On motion of Mr. CALHOUN, the bill, after being amended, was laid on the table, with the understanding that it be taken up at the next sitting of the Senate.

The bill for the relief of Captain Samuel Warren of South Carolina, was read and ordered to a second reading.

After the consideration of Executive business, The Senate adjourned over to Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

FRIDAY, January 6, 1837.

STATE OF MICHIGAN.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to provide for the admission of the State of Michigan into the Union, upon an equal footing with the original States; which was read twice, and laid on the table.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BOON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill to arrest monopolies in the public lands, and to prohibit the sales thereof, except to actual settlers; which was read twice, and referred to a Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Nancy Agnew; which was laid on the table.

Mr. MUHLENBERG, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report upon the petition of John Davis, son and heir at law of John Davis, deceased, a soldier of the revolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

M. GILLET, from the Committee on Commerce, moved to print certain documents in relation to the custom-house bill, and the reorganization of the Treasury Department.

After some remarks from Messrs. ADAMS, GILLET, WHITTLESEY of Ohio, SUTHERLAND, PEARCE of Rhode Island, and GIDEON LEE, the latter gentleman demanded the previous question, which was seconded, and the main question ordered; on the question being divided, the document in manuscript only was ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, the House then passed to the orders of the day.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report, in pursuance of an act entitled an act fixing the compensation of public Ministers and Consuls residing on the coast of Barbary, and for other purposes; which, on motion of Mr. HOWARD, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed; also a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting the names of the clerks employed in that department, and the compensation paid to each; which, on motion of Mr. HOWARD, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the

PRIVATE ORDERS,

and took up an engrossed bill for the relief of Don Louis Rosamond Orillon; which, on motion of Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, was recommitted to a Committee of the whole House.

The House then took up an engrossed bill for the relief of Robert P. Letcher and Thomas P. Moore.

The bill being on its third reading,

Mr. LANE called for the yeas and nays, but they were not ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD then moved to recommit the bill to a Committee of the Whole House.

After a few remarks from Messrs. HUNTSMAN and LANE,

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina called for the yeas and nays on the motion to recommit; which were ordered.

After some remarks by Mr. MANN of N. York, Mr. ANTHONY demanded the previous question.

Mr. RENCHER moved to lay the bill on the table, and upon that motion called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and were—yeas 35, nays 157.

So the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

The question then recurred on the demand for the previous question on the passage of the bill; which was seconded by the House—yeas 83, nays 46.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina, called for the yeas and nays on ordering the main question; which were not ordered, and the main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina, then called for the yeas and nays on the main question, which was on the passage of the bill; which were ordered, and were—yeas 125, nays 64, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, C. Allan, H. Allen, Anthony, Ash, Bailey, Barton, Beale, Bean, Beaumont, Bell, Bockee, Borden, Boyce, Boyd, Briggs, Brown, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, Bynum, J. Calhoun, Carr, Casey, Chaney, Chetwood, J. F. H. Claiborne, Clark, Cleveland, Craig, Cramer, Cushing, Cushman, Darlington, Davis, Dawson, Doubleday, Elner, Elmore, Fairfield, Fowler, Fry, Galbraith, R. Garland, Gillet, Granger, Grantland, Haley, Hamer, Hannegan, Hardin, Harlan, S. S. Harrison, A. G. Harrison, Haynes, Henderson, Hoar, Holt, Howard, Hubley, Hunt, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingersoll, Ingham, William Jackson, Joseph Johnson, R. M. Johnson, Henry Johnson, Benj. Jones, Kennon, Kilgore, Laporte, Lawrence, J. Lee, Leonard, Lewis, Lincoln, A. Mann, J. Mann, Martin, M. Mason, May, McKennan, McKeon, McKim, Moore, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Page, Patterson, Dutce J. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phelps, Phillips, Pickens, Pinckney, Potts, Reed, Joseph Reynolds, Schenck, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Slade, Sloane, Smith, Spangler, Sprague, Storer, Sutherland, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Waddy Thompson, Tur-rill, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Washington, Webster, Weeks, White, T. T. Whittlesey, and Yell.—125.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashiky, Black, Bond, W. B. Calhoun, Campbell, Carter, G. Chambers, Chapman, N. H. Claiborne, Connor, Corwin, Crane, Deberry, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Evans, Everett, Forester, French, Fuller, J. Garland, Graham, Graves, Griffin, J. Hall, H. Hall, Harper, Hazeltine, Heister, Hopkins, Howell, Jarvis, C. Johnson, Lane, Lawler, Gideon Lee, Love, Loyal, Lyon, Sampson Mason, McCarty, McLene, Milligan, Montgomery, Owens, Parker, Rencher, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Russell, Seymour, W. B. Shepard, A. H. Shepperd, Standefer, Steele, Taliaferro, Turner, Underwood, Vinton, Wardwell, E. Whittlesey, L. Williams, and S. Williams—64.

So the bill was passed.

The House then took up an engrossed bill for the relief of Robert Allison, a lieutenant in the revolutionary war.

After a discussion, in which Messrs. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania, HARDIN, HOWELL, and UNDERWOOD participated,

On motion of Mr. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania, the bill was postponed till to-morrow.

The bill for the relief of Jas. Latham was taken up, and, on motion of Mr. VINTON, was laid on the table.

The joint resolution for the settlement of the account of O. H. Dibble, was taken up, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of William Anderson was then taken up.

After some remarks by Messrs. UNDERWOOD, SHIELDS, EVERETT, VINTON, PARKER, BELL, HUNTSMAN, BRIGGS, and CAVE JOHNSON,

Mr. CRAIG moved to postpone the bill until Friday next: lost.

After further debate by Messrs. CRAIG, HOAR, WARDWELL, BELL, WILLIAMS of North Carolina, ASHLEY, WHITTLESEY of Ohio, WHITE of Florida, THOMPSON of South Carolina, SHIELDS, and HARPER,

Mr. UNDERWOOD moved an adjournment, but withdrew it at the suggestion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, when

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in pursuance of a joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives of the 19th of April last, referring the papers of the heirs of Robert Fulton, to that Department; which, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, was referred to the Committee of Claims.

The House then adjourned.

SATURDAY, January 7, 1837.

The Senate did not sit to-day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

The Hon. Mr. Gholson, member elect from the State of Mississippi, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. DOUBLEDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill granting a pension to Eli Eastman; which was read twice, and committed.

Mr. DOUBLEDAY, from the same committee, reported the following resolution, which was concurred in:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from so much of the petition of Elihu Eastman, guardian of Eli Eastman, as prays that the name of the said Eli may be restored to the roll of revolutionary pensioners, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Benjamin McCuller: read twice, and committed.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Andrew Lyman: read twice, and committed.

Mr. STORER, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Primus Hall, alias Trask: read twice and committed.

Mr. STORER, under instructions from the same committee, made an unfavorable report on the petition of John Whitman.

Mr. STORER, moved that the report be re-committed to the same committee, with instructions to report a bill for the memorialist's relief; and after some remarks from Messrs. REED, STORER, JARVIS, GRANGER, WARDWELL, RENCHER, D. J. PEARCE, GIDEON LEE, Mr. RENCHER, moved to lay the whole subject on the table. Lost.

Mr. STORER withdrew his motion to recommit; and, on motion of Mr. REED, the report was committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill granting a pension to Robert Brooke: read twice, and committed.

Mr. LEA, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Jerusha Ripley: read twice, and committed.

Mr. HARRISON of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Thaddeus Hubbard; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported unfavorably on the petition of Benjamin Williams for an increase of pension; which was laid on the table.

Mr. JAMES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the petitions of Barnaby Healy, and Richard Allen; which were ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. JAMES, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John Taylor, asking for back pay for services in the revolutionary war, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

On motion of Mr. JAMES, the Committee on Revolutionary Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Hannah Wise, praying half pay of captain to which her husband was entitled; and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. MUHLBERG, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Jas. D. Woodside, administrator of John Woodside; which was laid on the table.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the petitions of Carter B. Chandler and Henrietta Morfitt, severally praying pensions; which were ordered to lie on the table.

FREEDOM OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. BELL rose and gave notice, that on Tuesday next he should ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for the security of the freedom of elections.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The House then resumed the consideration of the following preamble and resolutions, submitted on the 4th instant by Mr. C. ALLAN, as modified:

Whereas, Congress has heretofore made donations of the public lands for the purposes of internal improvement and education:

To the State of Ohio,	1,737,838 acres.
Indiana,	1,112,592
Illinois,	1,712,224
Missouri,	1,181,248
Mississippi,	733,244
Alabama,	1,216,450
Louisiana,	920,053
Ter. of Michigan,	599,973
Arkansas,	996,338
Florida,	947,724

In the aggregate amounting to 11,057,685 acres.

And whereas, each of the United States has an equal right to participate in the benefit of the public lands, the common property of the Union; and every wise and good American having agreed in the opinion that the cause of general reduction is indissolubly identified with the cause of general liberty: Therefore, to do equal and exact justice to all the States; to aid in diffusing among the rising generation intelligence enough to comprehend, and spirit enough to defend their rights, and thus to elevate the national character, and insure the perpetuity of our free institutions,

Be it resolved, That a select committee, to consist of one member from each State, be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the justice and expediency of making to each of the thirteen original American States, together with each of the States of Maine, Vermont, Kentucky, and Tennessee, such grants of the public lands for the purposes of education, as will correspond in a just proportion with those heretofore made in favor of the first named States and Territories, and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise. But, to avoid the objection of one State holding land in another, the committee is directed to insert a clause in the bill which they may report, providing that the grants to be made thereby shall be subject to sale under the laws of the General Government now in force, and that the proceeds arising therefrom shall be paid over to the States entitled to the same.

Resolved further, That the said inquiry be extended to all the States.

The following amendment was moved by Mr. VINTON:

"That said committee be further instructed to inquire into the expediency of inserting a clause in said bill to pay said new States the value of the improvements made by them on the public lands, or to pay to them the amount the public lands would have been assessed for taxes, if they had been private."

The question pending was the amendment to the amendment moved by Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi, providing that no grant should interfere with the land of any actual settler.

Mr. LANE was entitled to the floor.

Mr. C. ALLAN said he wished to modify the preamble, by substituting the word "grant" for "donation;" and gave notice that he would do so when he could obtain the floor.

Mr. LANE addressed the House at some length in opposition to the resolution. The resolution (Mr. L. said) proceeded upon the supposition that nine of the new States, together with one Territory, had received upwards of eleven millions of acres of the public lands as a donation. This proposition was either true or it was untrue. If it was true, he contended it was unequal and unjust, so far as it regarded the new States. If it was not true, it was an insult offered to those nine States, and the suffering and bleeding Territory of Florida, as well as the members who represent those States on this floor. The resolution proposed to give a certain portion of the public lands to the seventeen old States; and this was unjust, because, by this proposition, the land was to be meted out to the old States, according to their population at the present time; and, when the new States had received their portion, they did not number one-third their present population. According to this apportionment, Maryland, with a population of only half a million, would receive more of these lands than Indiana, with eight hundred thousand citizens, and more than Ohio, with a million and a half. And Kentucky, with a much smaller population, would receive more than Indiana or Ohio. It would be unjust to carry this resolution into effect, because the lands granted to the new States were not only received when the population of the States was small, but when the lands were an unbroken wilderness; when there were no roads, no mills, no meeting-houses, no school-houses; and were only inhabited by wild beasts, and the roving savages. But now, when all the comforts of life were to be found in the vicinity of those lands, the old States were to come in for a portion of them, equal to those granted to the new States. Who raised the value of those lands? those who remained at home in ease, comfort, and luxury, or those hardy pioneers who went into the wilderness, subdued the savage, and made it smile and blossom as the rose? The old States by this resolution were to come in for a share of these lands when they were not only easy of access, but when their value was raised by the enterprise and industry of the citizens of the new States. This Mr. L. considered unjust.

Was it true, or was it untrue, that these lands were given to the new States as a donation? He always understood that a donation was a gift, and not founded upon any considerations but those of kindred or affection. Every thing which was founded upon contracts, however trifling the consideration, was a valuable consideration, and was equally binding on the parties, regardless of the amount of the consideration: then was the proposition true that the new States received these lands as a donation? He proceeded, then, to show that they had not received an acre of land, except by a contract founded upon a bona fide consideration, and read extracts from the ordinance admitting Ohio &c. into the Union, in support of his position. Mr. L. said that by this ordinance it would be seen that the lands had been received by the new States on the condition that they would not tax the public lands while belonging to the Government, and for five years after their sale; and that the Government should retain the salt springs, and all minerals found thereon.

The remarks of Mr. LANE were arrested by a call by Mr. WHITTLESEY for the orders of the day.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the Second Auditor, showing the contingent expenses of the military establishment of the United States for the year 1836; which, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina asked leave of the House to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Militia be directed to inquire into the expediency of causing to be published, at the expense of the United States, an edition of the work on tactics, &c. of General

Macomb and Major Cooper, sufficient to supply each commissioned officer in the militia of the United States with a copy.

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing an examination to be made by a board of officers of rank and experience of the improvements in fire arms by Cochran, Hall, Colt, & d Baron Hackett, exhibiting in tabular statements the advantages of each in all important military points of view, and especially as to

1. Celerity of fire.
2. Efficiency of fire.
3. Extent of the recoil.
4. Inconvenience from heated barrel in rapid firing.
5. Cheapness and simplicity of construction.
6. Durability.
7. Saving of ammunition and appendages.
8. The number of charges which may be carried by an infantry soldier.
9. Advantages when used against a charge of cavalry.
10. Advantages when used by cavalry.

Objection being made,

Mr. THOMPSON moved a suspension of the rules for the purpose of submitting said resolution; which motion was disagreed to.

STATE OF MICHIGAN.

Mr. THOMAS asked the general consent of the House to take up the bill from the Senate, then lying on the Speaker's table, entitled "An act to provide for the admission of the State of Michigan into the Union, upon an equal footing with the original States." Objection being made,

Mr. VANDERPOEL moved a suspension of the rules for the purpose, which was agreed to—ayes 119, noes 2.

The bill was then read a first and second time.

Mr. THOMAS said he was instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until Tuesday next, that it be made the special order for that day, and each succeeding day thereafter, Fridays and Saturdays excepted, from and after the hour of one o'clock, until disposed of.

Mr. T. remarked that it was proper he should take that occasion to say, that in the Judiciary Committee, as was doubtless the case in that House, there was a wide difference of opinion as to the mode of action the House itself should adopt, in disposing of this bill when it should come up for consideration. Mr. T. was about proceeding, when

The CHAIR interposed, and reminded the gentleman that the motion was not debateable.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved that the bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be made the special order of the day for Tuesday next.

The CHAIR remarked that the motion to postpone took precedence.

Mr. JARVIS inquired whether, if the bill should be committed, it would be competent for a bare majority of the House to take it up and consider it?

The CHAIR replied that it would be competent for the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, when in committee, to take it up; and it would be competent for a majority of the House to go into Committee of the Whole upon this when all the other orders on the Speaker's table had been disposed of.

Mr. HARDIN wished to make a single remark. The bill involved an appropriation, inasmuch as it provided that Michigan should receive her portion of the surplus money. Now, whether the bill should be considered by the House as embracing an appropriation or not, Mr. H. considered it virtually—

The CHAIR said he was compelled to arrest debate. The motion to make the bill the special order, thereby giving it precedence over all other business, being one of priority, could not, under the rules, be debated. He added that it would require a vote of two-thirds to carry the motion.

Mr. ADAMS expressed a hope that that motion would prevail.

The question being taken, was lost. Ayes 99, Nays 71, not two thirds.

The motion of Mr. ROBERTSON, to commit, then recurring:—

Mr. THOMAS rose and said it was his original purpose, as it was then his wish, not to interpose between the business of the House, and he therefore moved to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Tuesday next.

This motion took precedence of the other.

Mr. ROBERTSON said he would state in a few words the grounds upon which he had made the motion to commit. It was not with a view to produce a protracted debate, but because it appeared to him that a bill of such magnitude as this, providing for the admission of a State into the Union, demanded such a commitment if any bill ever did. If bills of this character were not to be committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, he could imagine no bill deserving to be committed to that committee.

But there was an additional reason. The bill, though not in direct terms, did, in substance, contain a provision for an appropriation of public money, for it placed the State of Michigan, in regard to the distribution of the surplus treasure, upon the same footing with the other States. What was the effect of that provision? The right to receive a large portion of the public money, with the possibility that not one dollar of it would ever be demanded back again; thereby, in effect, contemplating a final disposition of it. Upon that ground, he moved that the bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion to postpone was agreed to—ayes 95, noes not counted.

The CHAIR, in reply to a question from a member, said that when the bill came up on Tuesday, it would be open to all the other motions made that day.

The House then passed to the

PRIVATE ORDERS.

The joint resolution providing for the settlement of the account of Orange H. Dibble, was read a third time and passed.

The House then took up the bill for the relief of the representatives of William Anderson.

The debate was continued by Messrs. SHIELDS, EVERETT, and WARD, when

Mr. HOWELL called for the yeas and nays on ordering the bill to be engrossed; which were ordered, and were—yeas 52, nays 96. So the bill was rejected.

The House then took up the bill for the relief of Henry Lee, when,

On motion of Mr. VINTON,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

Monday, January 9, 1837.

The CHAIR presented the credentials of the honorable SAMUEL PRENTISS, re-elected by the Legislature of the State of Vermont a Senator from that State, to serve for six years from the fourth of March next; which were read.

Mr. CALHOUN presented the credentials of the honorable WILLIAM C. PRESTON, re-elected by the Legislature of the State of South Carolina a Senator from that State, to serve for six years from the 4th March next; which were read.

The CHAIR presented a communication from the State Department, transmitting a list of the clerks employed in that department, with the compensation paid to each.

The CHAIR also presented a communication from the War Department, transmitting a report from the Second Auditor, showing the expenditures of the contingent fund of the military establishment, made in compliance with the provisions of the fifth section of the act of March, 1809.

Mr. WEBSTER presented the petition of George Frazier, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TOMLINSON presented the petition of Nathaniel Perry, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the memorial of Luigi

Persico, relative to models for statuary; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KNIGHT presented the petition of sundry merchants of Newport, Rhode Island, praying for an appropriation for placing buoys in the harbor of that port: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NICHOLAS presented the petition of sundry merchants of the city of New Orleans, praying for the extension of their port: referred to the same committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of a number of the citizens of Pennsylvania, asking for an appropriation for the purpose of making the Alleghany river navigable from Pittsburgh, in Pennsylvania, to ———, in New York: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUCHANAN also presented the petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Philadelphia, praying for the extension of the time for the production of certificates on articles entitled to drawback, and transported coastwise: referred to the same committee.

On motion of Mr. RIVES, the petition and papers of Captain Warrington, on the files of the last session, were again referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TALLMADGE presented the petition of sundry citizens residing on the river Hudson, praying that an appropriation may be made for improving the channel of said river, and for placing buoys on the shoals of the same: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, the petition and papers of Mary Perkins and others, and of George Jay and Thomas P. Oliver, on the files of the last session, were again referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The CHAIR communicated the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, praying compensation for certain volunteers who served in the late Indian war; and

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The following resolutions were offered, to lie on the table one day:

By Mr. KING of Alabama,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending an act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, passed the 3d of March, 1833, so as to insure a verification of the invoice of goods subject to an ad valorem duty.

By Mr. TALLMADGE,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of legislating on the subject of pilots on the sea coast, with power to report by bill or otherwise.

By Mr. MORRIS,

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the construction of a bridge over the Ohio river, from the point where the Cumberland road intersects the river opposite the city of Wheeling, in the State of Virginia.

By Mr. LINN,

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for holding a treaty with the Chippewa Indians, in Wisconsin Territory, for the purchase of their lands.

By Mr. EWING of Illinois:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the creation of ports of entry at the towns of Alton and Chicago, in the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a marine hospital at Caledonia, in the State of Illinois.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been referred the petition of the marshal of the southern district of New York, praying for an appropriation for the erection of a suitable building for the accommodation of the United States courts, in the city of New York; and also a petition from sundry citizens of Philadelphia, praying for an appropriation for the erection of a court-house and penitentiary at that city; made reports thereon, accompanied by resolutions that the prayers of the petitioners are unreasonable, and ought not to be granted.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the bill to extend the time for issuing scrip on United States military land warrants, reported the same with amendments.

Also, reported with amendments the bill to authorize the relinquishment of the 16th sections of land granted for the use of schools, and the location of other lands in lieu thereof.

Also, reported the bill from the House for the relief of Norman Holt, without amendment; and,

On the petition of sundry citizens of Mississippi in favor of Andrew Knox, reported a bill to authorize that individual to enter a certain tract of land; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which had been referred the petitions of Benjamin Harrison, and of the heirs of Lieutenant Colonel Uriah Forrest, deceased, made unfavorable reports thereon; and the Committee was discharged from the further consideration thereof.

On motion of Mr. BROWN, the Committee Revolutionary Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of the heirs of Joseph Blackwell and the heirs of Jacob Hall.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which had been referred the bill for the relief of John McCarty, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which had been referred the bill to increase the Army of the United States, reported the same without amendment.

On motion of Mr. MORRIS, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John J. Rose.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which had been referred the bill for the relief of Benjamin J. Porter, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Select Committee appointed to consider and report what measures shall be adopted to supply the loss occasioned by the late destruction by fire of the models in the Patent Office, made a detailed report on the subject, accompanied by a bill, in addition to the act of the last session, entitled an act to promote the progress of the useful arts. The bill was read and ordered to a second reading; and

On motion of Mr. BENTON,

Ordered, That two thousand extra copies of the report be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SEVIER, on leave, introduced a bill authorizing certain internal improvements in Florida; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to bring in a bill to permit George Whitman, of Alabama, to import an iron steambot in detached parts.

The following bills were severally read the third time and passed:

The bill supplementary to the act establishing the Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States.

The bill for the relief of Colonel Samuel Warren, of South Carolina.

The bill for the relief of Robert P. Letcher and Thomas P. Moore.

The Senate then took up the resolution submitted by Mr. EWING of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order, designating the funds which shall be received in payment at the United States land offices; and

Mr. STRANGE, who had the floor, addressed the Senate in a speech of some length in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. WEBSTER made a few remarks in reply; after which,

On motion of Mr. BENTON,

The Senate went into the consideration of Executive business; and, after spending some time therein,

Adjourned.

MONDAY, January 9, 1837.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Petitions and memorials were presented by Messrs. EVANS and JARVIS of Maine.

Messrs. JACKSON, BORDEN, and ADAMS, of Massachusetts.

FOREIGN AUTHORS.

Mr. ADAMS inquired if there was any member of the House who was charged with a petition from the "Authors of Great Britain." The reason why he had made the inquiry was, that he had received a letter from a very respectable person, Miss Harriet Martineau, accompanied by a printed address and petition of certain authors of Great Britain, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America. He thought it probable that some other gentleman might be charged with a similar petition—the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, perhaps—with the request to present it to the House. If so, he would not present the petition he had received, as he was not directly requested to present it to the House.

Mr. CAMBRELONG said as the gentleman from Massachusetts had referred to him, it was, perhaps, proper for Mr. C. to state that he had received no such petition, and none such was, or had been, in his possession.

Mr. ADAMS then observed that he should not present the petition to-day, but he should take occasion to do so on some other petition day, next Monday perhaps.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN D. C.

Mr. ADAMS presented a petition from one hundred and fifty women, wives and daughters of his immediate constituents, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GLASCOCK objected to the reception of this petition.

Mr. ADAMS did not expect that any objection would have been made to the reception of this petition. The petition was entirely respectful in terms, and came from women, mothers and daughters of his immediate constituents. At the last session of Congress, after much debate, it was decided that petitions of this kind should be received, but provision was made for disposing of them afterwards; and that precedent went so far as to insure the reception of those petitions. It appeared to him that the decision of the House at the last session went quite far enough to suppress the right of petition of the citizens of this country, and quite far enough to suppress the freedom of speech; but this motion went one step further. It went to settle the principle that petitions upon a subject as interesting to the whole nation as any other should not even be received; and that, too, directly in the face of the constitution itself. He hoped the people of this country would not tamely submit to the injustice and wrong which would be inflicted upon them by their immediate representatives, in deciding that their petitions should not be received. He lamented deeply that the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech on this subject had been violently assailed for the last twelve months. He lamented deeply the decision and determination of the House at the last session, so far as it went; but this motion went one step further; and he hoped it would not be sanctioned by the House. It was always in the power of the House to reject the prayer of a petition; and the House had at the last session, by an overwhelming majority, given a decision in advance of the disposition to be made of petitions of this kind, and it was now ready, too ready, to raise its voice against these petitions, and reject the prayer of them. He considered that, from the fact that this petition came from women, wives, mothers, and daughters of his constituents, persons of the greatest respectability, that it ought to be received, and treated with respect. He put the case to gentlemen: suppose the petitions to be from their own mothers, would they treat it with contempt or disrespect? He trusted not. Then as this petition was from respectable citizens of Massachusetts, and addressed to the House in respectful language, he hoped it would be received. He did not consider that the House had any thing to fear from this petition of females, certainly not insurrection and blood and slaughter. He hoped, therefore, that the objection would be withdrawn, and that the panic which had been gotten up would not deter gentlemen from doing justice in regard to these petitions.

Mr. GLASCOCK remarked that it was well known what position he occupied before that House and the country, on this subject, at the last session of Congress; and if he were, on the present occasion, to accede to the proposition of receiving a petition of this character, it would be construed into an abandonment of the principles he then assumed. No man bad, or could have, a higher regard for petitions emanating from such a quarter, if upon proper subjects, than himself; but it was time, from the course and scenes acted at the last session, that those who believed they possessed the right not to receive those petitions should have the privilege which they conceived secured to them by the rules of the House, and the constitution of the United States, to have their votes recorded against petitions of this character. This opportunity had been denied at the last session.

If this were a new subject, a subject upon which the information of this House had not been already sought, and upon which the opinions of that House had not been obtained, emanating from daughters and mothers, he would respond to it as feelingly, and receive their petition as freely, as the gentleman from Massachusetts, or any other gentleman, and vote also to lay it on the table without reading, or, as the gentleman himself said on a former occasion, send it to sleep in the tomb of the Capulets. It was true that this petition emanated from females; but Mr. G. must be permitted to remark, that he had great doubts whether all these petitions were not got up for effect of some kind or other, and that an improper influence had been exercised over them by mischievous and designing men. The gentleman had appealed to those who had mothers and daughters to pay some regard to this petition, and went on to contend that to reject it would be to treat them with disrespect.

Now, if Mr. G. had been situated as that venerable gentleman was, had witnessed the many votes taken upon questions of this kind, and had seen and witnessed the excitement it always produced, his language to his mother and daughter would have been of a different character. He would have told them something to this effect: Your prayers, though they may be just according to the views of those who surround you, and in your immediate section of the country, yet it is impossible they can be heard at this time; and as the subject is one calculated to renew a great excitement in the country, which it is desirable should be allayed, let me, as a son, advise you, at least, to withhold them. Now, did the gentleman from Massachusetts presume that those from the south ought to have less sympathy for those who were more delicately situated, upon the question he took upon himself to advocate, than the mothers and daughters who had signed that petition? Need he tell the gentleman that they of the south had mothers and daughters? Need he appeal to the mothers and daughters of the north that, if they would spare many a bitter pang, and many an anxious feeling, they would withhold these petitions? He would beseech them to do so. This is the kind of language he would hold out, not only to the mothers and daughters of the east, but to every person in this country. Why should these memorials be introduced here, when no possible good could result, and much evil was to be apprehended? This was a brief reply to the appeal to him by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The gentleman had further thought proper to advise Mr. G. for the honor of his character as a man and a citizen, to withdraw his objection to the reception of the petition. Were Mr. G. to withdraw it, he would prove recreant to his own feelings, and to the known will of the thousands who had sent him there. It was a position he had assumed last session, a position which had received the almost unanimous approbation of his constituents, and God forbid that he should be found, at this time, abandoning it. But he appealed to the gentleman himself that, if he wished to allay excitement, and not produce further agitation in that House, and throughout the country, to present no such petitions here. There was no necessity for it, when no good could possibly result.

Mr. G. repeated that his sole object was to have an opportunity of recording upon the journals the votes of those opposed to the reception of these petitions. It was far from his wish to be the means of producing any embarrassment, or throwing any confusion into the House, but that the simple question of reception should at once be taken.

Mr. G. then went on to show, from Jefferson's Manual, that the preliminary question of reception must first be put to the House before the petition could be considered in its possession, and ergo that Mr. Jefferson had contemplated the question of non-reception. [Want of time precludes our writing out Mr. G's argument at length; it will be furnished hereafter.]

Mr. PARKS said that, believing discussion upon this subject had never been productive of good, and could not be, but might be productive of harm, he therefore moved that the petition itself, and the objection to its reception, be severally laid on the table.

THE CHAIR said it would be in order to move to lay the question of reception on the table, but not to include the petition. That motion prevailing, would suspend the motion on the petition itself; and it would remain in the possession of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GLASCOCK appealed from this decision; but the CHAIR having stated the grounds of it, and referred to the rules bearing upon the point, Mr. G. withdrew his objection.

Mr. REED asked for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table, which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 130, nays 60, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashley, Barton, Beale, Bean, Bell, Black, Bockee, Boon, Bovee, Boyd, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, J. Chambers, Chaney, Chapin, J. F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Deberry, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Efner, Fairfield, Farlin, Forester, French, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, J. Garland, Gholson, Gillet, Grantland, Graves, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Harlan, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Haynes, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Howell, Hubley, Abel Huntington, Adam Huntsman, Leonard Jarvis, Daniel Jenifer, Joseph Johnson, C. Johnson, B. Jones, Kennon, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, Gideon Lee, Thomas Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Loyall, Lucas, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Martin, William Mason, Moses Mason, Maury, May, McKay, McKeon, McKim, McLene, Mercer, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Patton, Franklin Pierce, Dutee J. Pearce, Pettigrew, Phelps, Pinckney, Rencher, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Seymour, A. H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Taliaferro, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turrill, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Washington, Webster, Weeks, White, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, and Yell—130.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Anthony, Bailey, Bond, Borden, Bouldin, Briggs, Brown, John Calhoun, Wm. B. Calhoun, Campbell, George Chambers, Chetwood, Childs, N. H. Claiborne, Clark, Connor, Corwin, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Dawson, Denny, Elmore, Evans, Everett, Glascock, Graham, Granger, Grayson, Griffin, Hiland Hall, Hard, Harper, Hazeltine, Joseph Henderson, William Heister, Sam'l Hoar, Joseph R. Ingersoll, Ingham, Wm. Jackson, James, Henry Johnson, Lawrence, Lincoln, Love, McCarty, McKennan, Miligan, Parker, Pearson, Phillips, Pickens, Potts, Reed, Russell, Schenck, W. B. Shepard, Slade, Sloane, Sprague, Standefer, Steele, Storer, Waddy Thompson, Wardwell, Eli-sha Whittlesey, and Young—60.

So the preliminary question of reception was laid on the table.

Mr. CHAPIN, when his name was called, rose and inquired of the Speaker what would become of the petition, in case the motion to lay the question of the reception of the petition on the table, prevailed.

The CHAIR answered: The petition would be arrested in the hands of the gentleman offering it, subject to the order of the House.

Mr. PINCKNEY, when his name was called, rose and asked leave to make a brief explanation of the vote he designed to give; but it was ruled to be out of order.

Mr. ADAMS then rose and said, that as he understood, by the decision of the Speaker, the petition itself was not laid on the table, but only the motion to receive it, in order to save the time of the House, he gave notice that he should call up the motion for decision, every day as long as he should be permitted to do so by the House. He felt himself impelled to this course, because he should not have performed his duty to his constituents so long as that petition was not received, and so long as the House had not decided they would not receive it. Mr. A. was proceeding further, when

Mr. PINCKNEY rose to a question of order.

The CHAIR decided that under the rules, the notice of motion could not be debated.

Mr. ADAMS reiterated his notice, and declared his intention to renew it, from day to day, until it was decided.

Mr. A. then presented another memorial signed by 228 women of South Weymouth, the wives and daughters, he said, of his immediate constituents, praying for the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia.

Mr. A. said, as a part of his speech he should read the memorial itself, which was very short, and would not consume much time. He was proceeding therein, when

Mr. PINCKNEY inquired if the doing so was in order?

The CHAIR said the gentleman had a right, under the rule, to make a brief statement of its contents, but nothing more. It was not for the Chair to decide whether the gentleman should make the statement in his own language or in that of the paper itself.

Mr. ADAMS said he read it as a part of his speech, and was proceeding again to do so, when

Mr. CHAMBERS of Kentucky renewed the point of order made by Mr. PINCKNEY.

The CHAIR then decided that as the 45th rule declared that a member presenting a petition should confine himself to a brief verbal statement of its contents, and as the lex parliamentaria, as given in Jefferson's Manual, laid it down that no member could read any paper to the House without leave, not even his own speech, therefore, as the question had been raised, he decided that the gentleman from Massachusetts could not insist upon reading this memorial.

Mr. ADAMS appealed from that decision; and after some remarks in support of it from Mr. PATTON and Mr. CHAMBERS, of Ky. and against it by Mr. BRIGGS and Mr. HARPER,

Mr. ADAMS withdrew his appeal.

The CHAIR: Therefore the decision of the Chair is acquiesced in.

Mr. GLASCOCK then objected to the reception of the petition.

After some remarks from Mr. DAWSON, deprecating any excitement on the subject, and condemning in strong terms the conduct of the fanatics in agitating it,

Mr. BOON moved to lay the preliminary question on the reception of the petition on the table.

After some confusion, Mr. B. withdrew that motion at the request of Mr. A. MANN, who said that wishing to save the time of the House, and the nation, he demanded the previous question.

In reply to the inquiry of Mr. GLASCOCK,

The SPEAKER said the main question would be, "Shall this petition be received?"

Mr. GLASCOCK. That is all we want.

The previous question was seconded—ayes 114, noes not counted, and the main question ordered to be put without a count.

Mr. CHAPIN called for the yeas and nays on the main question, which were ordered.

Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana moved a call of the House: lost.

The question was then taken, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 137, nays 75, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Anthony, Bailey, Beale, Bean, Bockee, Bond, Boon, Borden, Bovee, Boyd, Briggs, Brown, Buchanan, Burns, William B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, George Chambers, Chaney, Chapin, Chetwood, Childs, Clark, Cleveland, Corwin, Cramer, Crane, Cushing, Cushman, Darlington, Denny, Doubleday, Evans, Everett, Fairfield, Farlin, Fowler, French, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, Gillet, Granger, Grantland, Grennell, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hiland Hall, Hamer, Hard, Hardin, Harper, S. S. Harrison, Haynes, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Holt, Howell, Hubley, Hunt, Huntington, Ingersoll, Ingham, Jones, Jarvis, Cave Johnson, B. Jones, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Lawrence, Gideon Lee, Thomas Lee, Leonard, Lincoln, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Moses Mason, Sampson Mason, McCarty, McComas, McKay, McKennan, McKeon, Milligan, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parker, Parks, Patterson, Franklin Pierce, Dutee J. Pearce, Pearson, Phelps, Phillips, Potts, Reed, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Russell, Schenck, Seymour, Shinn, Sickles, Slade, Sloane, Smith, Sprague, Storer, Sutherland, Taylor, John Thomson, Toucey, Turrill, Vanderpoel, Vinton, Wagener, Ward, Wardwell, Webster, Weeks, Elisha Whittlesey, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Sherrod Williams, and Young—137.

NAYS—Messrs. Ash, Ashley, Barton, Bell, Black, Bouldin, Bunch, Bynum, John Calhoun, Campbell, John Chambers, Chapman, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Coles, Connor, Craig, Davis, Dawson, Deberry, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Elmore, Forester, James Garland, Rice Garland, Gholson, Glascock, Graham, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Hannegan, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Hopkins, Howard, Huntsman, Jenifer, R. M. Johnson, H. Johnson, Lawler, L. Lea, Lewis, Loyall, Lucas, Martin, Maury, May, McKim, McLene, Mercer, Miller, Patton, Pettigrew, Peyton, Pickens, Pinckney, Rencher, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Sheperd, Shields, Standefar, Steele, Taliaferro, Thomas, Waddy Thompson, Underwood, Washington, White, Lewis Williams, and Yell—75.

So the House determined that the petition should be received.

Mr. HAYNES then moved to lay it on the table.

Mr. ADAMS moved to refer it to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The former motion taking precedence, Mr. ADAMS asked for the yeas and nays thereon, which were ordered.

Mr. PINCKNEY inquired if the motion was susceptible of amendment.

The CHAIR replied in the negative.

Mr. PINCKNEY asked the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw the motion in order to enable Mr. P. to make a more comprehensive one. He explained his object to be to move a resolution that not only this memorial, but all others of a similar character should be also laid on the table.

Mr. HAYNES inquired if his own motion would be susceptible of such a modification, because, if so, he would cheerfully assent to it.

The CHAIR replied that it was not.

The motion to lay on the table was decided in the affirmative—yeas 151, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Ash, Barton, Bean, Bell, Black, Bockee, Boon, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, Bynum, John Calhoun, Cambreleng, Campbell, Carr, Carter, Casey, G. Chambers, John Chambers, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, Chetwood, Nath. H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Deberry, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Efner, Elmore, Fairfield, Farlin, Forester, Fowler, French, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, James Garland, Rice Garland, Gillet, Gholson, Graham, Grantland, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Haynes, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Howell, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Jarvis, Jenifer, Richard M. Johnson, C. Johnson, H. Johnson, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, G. Lee, T. Lee, L. Lea, Leonard, Loyall, Lucas, J. Mann, Martin, M. Mason, Maury, May, McComas, McKay, McKeon, McKim, McLene, Mercer, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Patton F. Pierce, Pettigrew, Peyton, Phelps, Pickens, Pinckney, Rencher, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, W. B. Shepard, A. H. Sheperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Standefar, Steel, Sutherland, Taliaferro, Taylor, Thomas, J. Thomson, Toucey, Turrill, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Washington, Webster, Weeks, White, T. T. Whittlesey, L. Williams, S. Williams, Yell, and Young—151.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Bailey, Beale, Bond, Borden, Briggs, William B. Calhoun, Childs, Corwin, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Denny, Evans, Everett, Granger, Haley, Hiland Hall, Hardin, Harper, S. S. Harrison, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Hunt, Ingersoll, Ingham, Jones, Lawrence, Lincoln, S. Mason, McCarty, McKennan, Milligan, Parker, D. J. Pearce, Pearson, Phillips, Potts, Reed, Russell, Slade, Sloan, Sprague, Storer, Vinton, Wardwell, and E. Whittlesey—50.

So the petition was laid on the table.

[Mr. DAWSON, on his name being called, rose in his place and declined to vote.]

Mr. ADAMS then presented another memorial of the same character, from a number of individuals in his own district.

Mr. LAWLER objected to its reception.

On this preliminary question Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. BYNUM addressed the House at some length; before the latter gentleman had concluded, he gave way to Mr. TAYLOR, on whose motion

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

TUESDAY, January 10, 1837.

The following message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. ANDREW JACKSON, jr. his secretary:

To the Senate of the United States:

Immediately after the passage by the Senate, at a former session, of the resolution requesting the President to consider the expediency of opening negotiations with the Governments of other nations, and particularly with the Governments of Central America and New Granada, for the purpose of effectually protecting, by equitable treaty stipulations with them, such individuals or companies as might undertake to open a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, by the construction of a ship canal across the isthmus which connects North and South America, and of securing for ever, by such stipulations, the free and equal right of navigating such canal to all such nations on the payment of such reasonable tolls as ought to be established to compensate the capitalists who might engage in such undertaking and complete the work, an agent was employed to obtain information in respect to the situation and character of the country through which the line of communication, if established, would necessarily pass, and the state of the projects which were understood to be contemplated for opening such communication by a canal or a railroad. The agent returned to the United States in September last, and although the information collected by him is not as full as could have been desired, yet it is sufficient to show that the probability of an early execution of any of the projects which have been set on foot for the construction of the communication alluded to, is not so great as to render it expedient to open a negotiation at present with any foreign Government upon the subject.

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, 9th January, 1837.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, stating that since his last report on the subject, he had selected, under the provisions of the act of the last session, two more deposit banks, and presenting an ex-

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

BY BLAIR & RIVES.

—WEEKLY—

PRICE $1 PER SESSION.

24TH CONG.....2D SESS.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 17, 1837.

VOLUME 4.....NO. 6.

hibit of the names and dates of the selection of both those banks.

Mr. KING of Alabama presented a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Alabama, in favor of certain settlers on the public lands, who have been deprived of their right to pre-emption: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KING of Alabama also presented the memorial of the same praying that indemnity may be made to certain citizens of that State for depredations committed on their property by the Creek Indians.

Mr. KENT presented the memorial of the widow of Daniel Day, a revolutionary soldier, praying that the pension of her late husband may be continued to her: referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HUBBARD presented the petition of Jeremiah Tyler, praying for a pension: referred to the same committee.

Mr. TOMLINSON presented the petition of Francis Allen, which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Mr. TIPTON presented the petition of sundry citizens of Berrien county, Michigan, praying for an extension of the pre-emption laws: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the memorial of a number of claimants under the French treaty, who have had awards made in their favor, praying Congress to make an appropriation to pay to them the amount of the awards respectively made to them under said treaty out of the Treasury: referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUCHANAN also presented the petition of Peter Moore and Co. contractors for carrying the United States mail, praying for additional compensation, in consideration of additional services performed by them: referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BUCHANAN also presented the memorial of a number of citizens of Pennsylvania engaged in the coal trade, protesting against a reduction of the duty on foreign coal.

Mr. B. moved that this memorial be referred to the Committee on Manufactures and printed, and said that he would respectfully ask of each member of the Senate to take the trouble to read it, as he believed that a great misunderstanding existed on the subject. The memorial was referred and ordered to be printed accordingly.

Mr. FULTON presented the petition of a number of citizens of Arkansas, praying for the extension of the military road lately opened in that State: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. FULTON also presented the petition of Obadiah Marsh, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also the petition of J. Darielle, praying indemnity for the loss of his improvements in the Choctaw country: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also the petition of Flavius Waterman, praying confirmation of title to a tract of land: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which had been referred the petitions of John Watts, Jeremiah Taylor and Caspar W. Weaver, made unfavorable reports thereon, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration thereof.

On motion of Mr. LINN, the Committee on Private Land Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John Riley.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which had been referred the memorial of Doctor John Ramsay, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. NILES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which had been referred the petition of Eneas Munson, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the amount of the two per cent. fund reserved for making roads in Alabama, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. RIVES gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill to alter the terms of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the district of North Carolina.

Mr. KING of Alabama, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize George Whitman of Alabama, to import an iron steamboat, in detached parts, with the necessary machinery and working utensils, free of duty; which was twice read, and together with the memorial of John P. Lamar on the same subject, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EWING of Illinois, on leave, introduced a bill to provide for the establishment of the Peoria Land Office in Illinois; which was read twice, and referred.

Mr. FULLERTON submitted the following resolutions, which lie on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the surrender of such of the sixteenth sections as are fractional, in any township, where the same has been granted to the township; and permitting another section to be located in lieu thereof.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the compensation of the Surveyor General in the State of Arkansas, and of the draughtsmen and clerks in his office, so as to make their compensation at least equal to that of persons performing similar duties in the southern States.

Mr. WALL submitted the following resolution which lies one day on the table for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to the Senate the survey of Crow shoal, in Delaware bay; to ascertain the expediency of constructing a breakwater or artificial harbor, male in pursuance of the act of Congress for that purpose, passed at the last session, and the report or other papers accompanying the same.

The bill from the House for the relief of O. H. Dibble, was read the second time, and ordered to a third reading.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, the bill from the House to provide payment for horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States, was taken up, and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, the bill from the House making appropriations for the payment of the revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States, was taken up, and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading.

The resolution submitted by Mr. EWING of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order, designating the funds which shall be received in payment by the United States land offices, was taken up as the special order; when

Mr. RIVES, who had the floor, addressed the Senate in a speech of some length in opposition to the resolution, and in support of the amendment offered by him as a substitute. After Mr. R. had concluded his remarks,

Mr. CLAY expressed his wish to make some remarks on the subject; but it being late in the day, he hoped the Senate would indulge him by an adjournment, or by a postponement of the further consideration of the subject till to-morrow.

The Senate then, accordingly, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 10, 1837.

On motion of Mr. ADAMS, the journal was amended, so as to state in a definite form the petitions presented by him yesterday on the subject of the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, from the Committee of Claims, reported, without amendment, the bill from the Senate for the relief of Elisha Towns, which was committed.

Mr. DAVIS moved a suspension of the rules, for the purpose of submitting a resolution that all petitions or papers presented, or hereafter to be presented, on the subject of slavery, be laid on the table, without being read, and without debate.

On this motion Mr. DAVIS asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and were—yeas 102, nays 78, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Barton, Bean, Black, Bockee, Boon, Bovee, Boyd, Buchanan, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Carter, Casey, Chapman, Chapin, Cleveland, Connor, Corwin, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Dromgoole, Fairfield, Farlin, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, Gholson, Gillet, Graham, Grantland, Hamer, Hannegan, Albert G. Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Holsey, Hopkins, Howard, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Jarvis, Jenifer, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, Benjamin Jones, Klingensmith, Lansing, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Thomas Lee, Leonard, Loyall, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Martin, William Mason, Moses Mason, May, McKay, McKeon, McKim, McLene, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Franklin Pierce, Dutée J. Pearce, Phelps, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Ripley, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Spangler, Steele, Sutherland, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Towns, Vanderpoel, Washington, Weeks, White, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Sherrod Williams, and Yell—102.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Ash, Ashley, Bell, Bond, Bouldin, Briggs, Bunch, William B. Calhoun, Campbell, Carr, George Chambers, Chetwood, Childs, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Clark, Crane, Darlington, Denny, Evans, Everett, James Garland, Granger, Graves, Grennell, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hiland Hall, Hard, Hardin, Harlan, Harper, Samuel S. Harrison, H. zeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Howell, Hunt, Ingersoll, Ing-ham, James, John W. Jones, Lane, Laporte, Lawler, Lawrence, Luke Lea, Lincoln, Lucas, Sampson Mason, Maury, McCarty, McKennan, Mercer, Milligan, Parker, Patton, Pearson, Phillips, Potts, Reed, Rencher, Robertson, Russell, William B. Shepard, Shields, Slade, Sloane, Sprague, Storer, Taliaferro, Underwood, Vinton, Elisha Whittlesey, Lewis Williams and Young—78

So the House refused to accede; two-thirds not voting in the affirmative.

FREEDOM OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. BELL wished at this time to make the motion, of which he had given notice some days since, to introduce a bill "to provide for securing the freedom of elections."

The CHAIR ruled that the motion was not then in order, but could only be made when the gentleman had a right to make a motion.

Mr. BELL appealed from that decision, and went on to assign his reasons for differing with the presiding officer, contending that, by the rule prescribing the manner of introducing bills, the motion was in order; and that it was competent for any member to do so. He complained of the harshness of the decision, and appealed to the members on all sides to set it aside.

The CHAIR gave his reasons at length for the decision, and showed, by a reference to the rules, the inevitable consequence of allowing members to introduce bills, in this way, on motion, which would have the effect of setting aside all other business.

Mr. MERCER suggested to the gentleman to allow the committees to make reports; whereupon

Mr. BELL withdrew his appeal.

Mr. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of James Cooper: read twice and committed.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Amos Thompson.

ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD.

Mr. W. B. SHEPARD, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill giving the assent of Congress to an act of the General Assembly of Virginia, entitled an act to amend an act entitled an act to incorporate the Falmouth and Alexandria Railroad company, passed February 3d, 1836; which, on Mr. S's motion, was read twice, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

FRENCH AWARDS.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a joint resolution, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to correct a clerical error in the awards of the Commissioners with France in 1831; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. JAMES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Solomon Ketchum: read twice and committed.

UNITED STATES ARSENAL AT PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. OWENS, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the following resolution, which was concurred in:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of disposing of the Passyunk arsenal, near the city of Philadelphia, the property of the United States.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of John Jeffers; which was read twice, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. WHITLSEY, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of the heirs of John Chalmers; which was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. CARR, the Committee on Private Land Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of William Ray.

Mr. DARLINGTON, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Thomas Buford; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DOUBLEDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Ezekiel Burnham; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Richard Boon; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an adverse report on the petition of — Brown's heirs; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McKIM, from the Committee of Ways and Means, made an unfavorable report on the petitions of R. Eldred and Daniel Baily; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MUHLBERG, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of the heirs of Thomas Tebbs; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Ursin Hebert; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KENNON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, made an unfavorable report on the petition of George Sallady; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURRILL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Thomas Graves; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee of Claims, made an adverse report on the claims of William Graham and George Rhodes.

Mr. BELL (the morning hour having elapsed) gave notice that he should renew his motion to-morrow to introduce the bill of which he had given notice.

Mr. McCARTY and Mr. JENIFER made ineffectual attempts to introduce resolutions.

Mr. LEWIS moved a suspension of the rules, for the purpose of proceeding with the call of the States for resolutions where the House left off at a former day (Kentucky.) Mr. L made an earnest appeal to the House to give the new States an opportunity of presenting resolutions, of which they had been debarred for the last three weeks.

Mr. MERCER suggested to the gentleman to so modify his motion as to preclude those giving rise to debate.

Mr. LEWIS had no objection.

Mr. BELL said he would protest against such a modification; for, at that rate, no resolution of an important character would ever be received.

The motion was lost without a division.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT U. S.

The following message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his private secretary, Andrew Jackson, Junior, Esq.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit to Congress, a report of the Secretary of State, with the accompanying letters addressed to him by the Commissioner appointed under the act of Congress of the last session, for carrying into effect the Convention between the United States and Spain.

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, 8th January, 1837.

The message having been read, on motion of Mr. HOWARD was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Topographical Bureau, for the improvement of the mouth of Black river, Jefferson county, New York; which, on motion of Mr. WARDWELL, was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also presented a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, notifying Congress that he has selected two more deposit banks, made in pursuance of the tenth section of the act of the 23d of June, 1836, regulating the public deposits of the United States; which, on motion of Mr. CRAIG, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. INGHAM, on leave, presented some papers in relation to a private claim.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The House then resumed the consideration of the resolution, (originally offered by Mr. WISE,) reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the "condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, the vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business in all of them, and the causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation," be referred to a select committee, to consist of nine members, with power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to inquire into the condition of the various Executive Departments, the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted, into the manner in which the public business has been discharged in all of them, and into all causes of complaint, from any quarter, at the manner in which said departments, or their bureaus or offices, or any of their officers or agents of every description whatever, directly or indirectly connected with them in any manner, officially or unofficially, in duties pertaining to the public interest, have fulfilled or failed to accomplish the objects of their creation, or have violated their duties, or have injured and impaired the public service and interest; and that said committee, in its inquiries, may refer to such periods of time as to them may seem expedient and proper.

The question pending was the following amendment submitted by Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island: "Strike out all after the word 'resolved,' and insert the following:

"That so much of the President's message as is in the following words, to wit: 'Before concluding this paper, I think it is due to the various Executive Departments to bear testimony to their prosperous condition, and to the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted. It has been my aim to enforce in all of them a vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business; and it is gratifying to me to believe that there is no just cause of complaint from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation,' be referred to a select committee of nine members, with instructions to inquire into any specific causes of complaint which may be alleged against the integrity of the administration of any of the departments, or their bureaus, or the vigilance and fidelity with which their duties have been discharged, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers."

Mr. HAWER was entitled to the floor, but gave way, on request, to

Mr. FRENCH, who said he wished to have read to the House a general proposition, which, he hoped, would meet the views of gentlemen on all sides. The paper in question was then read as follows:

"Resolved, That so much of the President's message as is in the following words, to wit:

"Before concluding this paper, I think it due to the various Executive Departments, to bear testimony to their prosperous condition, and to the ability and integrity with which they have been conducted. It has been my aim to enforce in all of them a vigilant and faithful discharge of the public business, and it is gratifying to me to believe that there is no just cause of complaint from any quarter, at the manner in which they have fulfilled the objects of their creation," be referred to five select committees, (one for each department,) to consist of seven members each, with instructions to inquire into the manner in which the duties pertaining to the several Executive Departments and their respective bureaus, have been performed, under the several laws defining and regulating the same; into all frauds, corruption, and abuses, which are, or from any quarter may be, alleged to exist in said departments, or any of them, or in their, or any of their, respective bureaus, under the present administration; and if any such frauds, corruption, or abuses exist, to inquire by whom committed or practised, and the injury thereby done to the public interest; and that each of said committees have the power to send for persons and papers."

Mr. HAMER concluded his remarks, and Mr. McKEON obtained the floor.

On motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, and by general consent, the House took up the amendment of the Senate to the bill establishing the mint, which was concurred in.

BANKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the returns of the banks in the District of Columbia; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

On motion,

The House adjourned.

The following resolution was submitted by Mr. ADAMS yesterday, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if, in his judgement, not incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to this House copies of the correspondence with the Department of State and with the Peruvian Government, of the late Wm. Tudor, jr. Consul of the United States, and their political agent in Peru, from the 27th of March, 1824, to the 15th of May, 1827. Also, the correspondence of the said William Tudor with the Department of State, and with the Government of Brazil, while he was Charge d'Affaires of the United States at Rio de Janeiro, until his decease.

IN SENATE,

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 11, 1837.

Mr. KENT presented the credentials of the Hon. JOHN L. SPENCE, elected by the Legislature of the State of Maryland a Senator from that State, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Hon. Mr. Goldsborough, which were read.

The Chair announced a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting copies of the returns rendered by the several incorporated banks of the District of Columbia, showing the state of their affairs up to the 31st December last.

Mr. LINN presented the petition of John Perry, praying confirmation of title to a tract of land; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. PRESTON presented the petition of sundry citizens of Charleston, South Carolina, setting forth the necessity of establishing a naval depot and navy yard at the South, and recommending the situation of Charleston as peculiarly suited to that purpose: read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HUBBARD presented the petition of William Yeaton; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TOMLINSON, from the Committee on Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the petitions of Peter Smith and Daniel Silley, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same.

On motion of Mr. SEVIER, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Andrew Marshall.

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which had been referred the memorial of Thomas Vowell, made an unfavorable report thereon, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill to provide for the establishment of a Surveyor General's office in the State of Illinois, reported the same with amendments; which were read.

Mr. WALKER, from the same committee, to which had been referred a resolution of the Senate, directing them to inquire into the expediency of establishing a Surveyor General's office in the State of Indiana, reported a bill for that purpose; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KING of Alabama, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the memorial of Thomas Cameron of Alabama, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which had been referred the memorial of the corporate authorities of the town of Mobile, Alabama, praying to be remunerated for advances made by them for the equipment of two companies of volunteers, who served in the late Indian wars, reported a bill making an appropriation for that object; which was read, and ordered to second reading.

Mr. RIVES, on leave, introduced a bill to alter the times of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the district of North Carolina; which was twice read, and referred.

Mr. WALKER submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the State of Texas having established and maintained an independent Government, capable of performing those duties, foreign and domestic, which appertain to independent Governments, and it appearing that there is no longer any reasonable prospect of the successful prosecution of the war by Mexico against said State, it is expedient and proper, and in perfect conformity with the laws of nations, and the practice of this Government in like cases, that the independent political existence of said State be acknowledged by the Government of the United States.

Mr. WALKER said it was not his intention to ask a departure from the rules of the Senate, in order to enter upon the consideration of this resolution at this period. The resolution (Mr. W.

stated) he would only say, at this period, was in exact concurrence with the views expressed by the President of the United States in his last message on this subject. In that message, the President declared it as his opinion, that the independence of Texas might be considered as suspended upon the issue of the threatened invasion by the army under the command of Gen. Bravo. Mr. W. said he had this morning received information direct from Vera Cruz, as late as the first of December last, that this invasion had proved entirely abortive; that the army of Bravo had been reduced, by desertion and other causes, to a very small number; that this miserable remnant was unsupplied with provisions, and that, in consequence of these events, Gen. Bravo had resigned the command of the army, and that the invasion in all probability would be abandoned. Mr. W. said he was satisfied that full reliance might be placed on the correctness of this information, and that he was fully convinced that, with the knowledge of these facts, the President would cheerfully unite with Congress in recognising the independence of Texas.

The following resolutions were also submitted, and lie on the table one day:

By Mr. DAVIS:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of making some provision for the nautical education of seamen.

By Mr. TOMLINSON:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of continuing the office of Commissioner of Pensions.

By Mr. NICHOLAS:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a tri-weekly post route on the west bank of the river Mississippi, from the city of New Orleans to Plaquemine, in the parish of Iberville.

By Mr. RIVES:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the District Judge for the Western District of Virginia, or to allow him mileage for his travelling expenses.

The bill from the House to provide payment for horses and other property lost and destroyed in the military service of the United States; and

The bill from the House making appropriations for the payment of the revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States, were severally read the third time and passed.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of Mr. Ewins's resolution to rescind the Treasury order, designating the funds which shall be received in payment for the public lands; and

Mr. CLAY, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the Senate in a speech of considerable length in support of the resolution, and in opposition to the amendment of Mr. RIVES.

After some remarks from Mr. RUGGLES,

Mr. NILES then moved to refer the whole subject to the Committee on Public Lands, accompanying the motion with some remarks in its support, and in reply to Mr. CLAY.

Messrs. CALHOUN, BLACK, TIPTON, WEBSTER, and CLAY, opposed the motion: Mr. CALHOUN, saying that the reference to the Committee on Finance, if a reference was made at all, would be the most appropriate one.

On taking the question, Mr. NILES'S motion was adopted, and the resolution and amendment were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Niles, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Strange, Tallmadge, Walker, Wall, White, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Moore, Nicholas, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Sevier, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, and Webster—19.

On motion of Mr. WALKER, the Senate went into the consideration of Executive business; after which,

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 11, 1837.

Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a bill for the survey of certain rivers therein named; read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

SURPLUS REVENUE.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means, made a report, accompanied by a bill, on the subject of the surplus revenue. The title of the latter was "a bill to reduce the revenues of the United States to the wants of the Government."

Mr. OWENS remarked that as this was a very important report, as well as the accompanying bill, he would move that both be read; which was agreed to.

The bill and report were then read by the Clerk, which are as follows:

The Committee of Ways and Means, to which was referred the message of the President recommending a reduction of the revenue to the wants of the Government; the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Finances; a memorial praying for a distribution of the surplus revenue, and many memorials praying for a repeal of the duties on foreign merchandise, submit the following report:

The balance in the Treasury on the 1st of January last, as near as it can be now ascertained, of available funds, was $42,468,859 97. There was probably placed to the credit of the Treasurer before that date, of which no account had been received, about one million in addition, and the Government held, on public account, $6,244,600, par value, of stock in the Bank of the United States, which at 114 per cent. amounts to $7,106,304. The aggregate amount of money, and other means possessed by Government on the 1st of January, was upwards of fifty millions five hundred thousand dollars. The appropriations unexpended at the close of the year, and required to complete the service of 1836, amounted to $13,561,373 35. Of this amount but $6,000,000 can be properly charged against the surplus, as about seven to eight millions remain unexpended at the end of almost every year. The surplus of means, on the 1st of January, may therefore be estimated at $44,500,000.

The revenue of the past year from customs, as nearly as it can be ascertained and estimated at the Treasury, was $23,000,000 from customs; and $24,500,000 from public lands, and from all other sources $620,000, making an aggregate of $48,120,000.

The excess of revenue beyond the proper wants of Government, though now assuming greater importance than it did formerly, has existed for some years past, and originated in the policy of revising our tariff so frequently since our war with Great Britain, without regard to the condition of the Treasury. High rates of duty were levied to protect particular branches of industry, and a very large revenue was raised, which was absorbed in our public debt, till that was extinguished.

Other causes have, however, combined to produce our present redundant revenue, and to give an impulse to trade generally. The sudden and rapid increase during the last five years, may be ascribed, in a measure, to British and American legislation. The former, after prohibiting them for a century, authorized the unlimited creation of joint stock banks, not redeeming their notes in gold or silver, but in the notes of the Bank of England, which were made a lawful tender. On our side, we have added since 1829, $45,093,207 to our metallic currency; and since 1830 we have increased our banking capital from 110,000,000 to about $330,000,000; thus extending our paper circulation probably $60,000,000. The currency of no country can be so suddenly increased, without encouraging general speculation, and producing a very considerable expansion of commercial credits. Trade and revenue have been accordingly affected.

by it. Our exports, which were at fifty millions in 1828, rose in 1835 to one hundred and one millions; and those of 1836 were more than one hundred and twenty millions. Our imports, deducting the amount exported, and excluding coin and bullion, were in 1829 $49,500,000; and in 1835 $123,000,000, and in the past year probably $150,000,000.

The annual receipts from the sales of the public lands in 1830, were less than two millions and a half; and in 1836, $24,500,000; and a much larger increase would have occurred in our revenue from customs, had not the duty on nearly one half of our imports been repealed. The produce of our agriculture, and one half in value, if not in extent, of the whole territory of the country, have become objects of speculation, contributing to enlarge very considerably the mass of commercial contracts and credits.

The revenue of forty-seven millions and a half from customs and public lands in the past year, is obviously not to be relied upon as our permanent income. The spirit of speculation is already checked, and the probable embarrassments of the winter will sensibly affect the receipts in the present and the next year. But in the actual condition of our country, sustained as its prosperity is, by powerful and permanent causes, we are not authorized to anticipate the extraordinary decline in our revenue which occurred after the disastrous revolution in 1819—the consequence of a sudden transition from war to peace. In adjusting our revenue to the future wants of Government, we should reflect that this is the first opportunity we have had, since the adoption of our constitution, to enlarge our foreign trade, and develop the resources of our extensive confederacy. At the outset we had had but four years of uninterrupted commerce. In the second period but seven, from 1800 to 1807; and even after the close of the war in 1815, the trade of the country was convulsed for six years by the change from war to peace, the sudden increase of State Banks, and the fluctuating operations of the Bank of the United States. The speculations of 1825 were very much confined in this country to one branch of trade, and were of British, not American, origin. No general prostration of our trade, internal and external, has occurred for sixteen years; and to this, more than to any temporary or legislative cause, the existing prosperity of the country ought to be ascribed.

Our revenue from customs is sustained by permanent causes, and although it will fall off during the present and in the next year, it must increase with the growing foreign trade of the country. The cotton manufactures of Europe are steadily increasing. In Great Britain the average increase from 1834 to 1836, was twenty per cent. In this country, the crop of cotton in the past year, is estimated at 1,570,000 bales; being 210,000 more than was produced in 1835. It must also be observed, that while the spirit of speculation has raised other commodities to extravagant prices, cotton, other articles of export, and foreign merchandise generally, the sources of our revenue, have not been much higher than usual. A crisis in commercial affairs could not, therefore, as in 1819, cause any very considerable reduction, and any decline would be but temporary. The rapid growth too of our wealth and population, and the extension of our settled territory, enlarge the demand for foreign supplies, and in any prospective adjustment of the tariff, the permanent increase of our foreign commerce should be more regarded than the temporary depression resulting from overtrading.

We may anticipate a great decline in our revenue from public lands, though not to the extent which has been estimated. The receipts in the last quarter, notwithstanding the extraordinary demand for money were, as nearly as they can be ascertained, four millions and a half. The revenue for the present and the next year, will fall far below that of 1836; but in estimating our future income from our public lands, we must not be governed by the annual receipts in former years. Many causes exist now, which must considerably enlarge this source of revenue. We have within six years purchased of the Indians ninety millions of acres within our settled boundaries, and removed the tribes beyond the Mis-issippi. This must accelerate the sale and settlement of these lands. We have too within a few years rapidly multiplied our internal improvements in the interior, in every direction, and in many instances, through large tracts of the public lands. It is as easy for the emigrant to reach Illinois at this time, as it was to go to Utica in New York twenty years ago. The area of settlement is thus enlarged in the south, and in the west, to an extent very far beyond its former boundaries. The States in the northwest are growing with astonishing rapidity; while the laboring population of Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina, is rapidly moving off to the southwestern States.

Should the sales of our public lands be limited to actual settlers, as is proposed by the Committee on Public Lands, some, though not a very considerable reduction in the revenue, may be anticipated. Nothing short of suspending the sales, a policy which this Government never would adopt, can prevent us from receiving a large income from this source.

One, and not the least of the evils resulting from a surplus revenue, is an extraordinary increase of our federal expenses. A part of this increase has been caused by extinguishing Indian titles, and removing the tribes. We have appropriated for these objects, since the 4th of March, 1829, $26,982,068; and our Indian wars have and will cost us not less than $13,000,000, making an aggregate of about $40,000,000. Such heavy expenditures, for similar objects, cannot be anticipated hereafter, and our federal expenses for all purposes ought not to be estimated at more than twenty millions of dollars. Even that amount is much more than we have hitherto deemed compatible with the necessary wants of an economical Government; and a just regard to economy should prevent us at least from making provision, in anticipation, for a larger Government expenditure.

Unless, however, prompt measures are taken to reduce our revenue, we may anticipate a rapid increase of our expenses, and the recurrence, in a few years, of another surplus for deposit or distribution. To avoid these evils, the only safe and prudent course is to diminish the income of the Government. The committee are of opinion that some unnecessary taxes, not yielding much revenue, may be repealed, and that a general reduction should be made in one or the other sources of our income to the extent of seven millions of dollars. The actual condition of our finances does not warrant a less reduction.

Without arresting the progress of the settlement of the country, this reduction cannot be made in our receipts from public lands. But even if such an unwise and unjust proposition were made, and the question should be presented whether we should relinquish our income from this source, or reduce our revenue from customs, there are great considerations, involving even the stability of our confederacy, why the latter should be preferred to the former.

Our public lands are the common property of the Union in the ratio of representation. No tax can ever be imposed, the burden of which will, in the spirit of our federal constitution, fall in the like ratio among the States. On the contrary, the revenue from customs is the most unequal and unjust plan of taxation that could have been devised; and the design of our constitution will never be fulfilled until it is wholly reformed. The agricultural States should never permit a common fund to be destroyed, or permanently distributed, in order that, by perpetuating our taxes upon manufactures, the chief burden of supporting the Federal Government should be thrown upon them.

In justice to the new as well as to the old States, the sales of the public lands ought not to be suspended, nor should they be converted into a fund for annual distribution among the States. Whatever reduction is made should fall upon our revenue from customs. In examining the various articles upon which duties are now levied, the Committee find very few remaining that do not directly or indirectly come in competition with some branches of our own industry. Those which are exclusively foreign do not yield an aggregate amount of duty exceeding one hundred thousand dollars. Many others, which have been heretofore classed among the non protected articles, might be included in the favored list, with quite as much justice as those which have been so considered ever since it has been the policy of the Government to make any such distinction. But if the duties on all that are classed with the non-protected were repealed, it would not reduce the revenue one million of dollars. An adequate reduction cannot be made without diminishing or repealing the duties on what are denominated protected articles; in other words, without modifying the act of the 2d of March, 1833, commonly called the compromise act.

In approaching this question, the committee are fully aware of the importance of the interests involved, and of the anxiety of capitalists who are extensively engaged in the manufacture or production of commodities which may be affected by any reduction of our taxes. But the question whether we shall continue to sustain their income by our laws, must yield to the indispensable necessity of reducing our revenue to the wants of the Government. The actual condition of our finances demands this, and makes it our duty to examine thoroughly the foundation upon which the claims of our capitalists to exclusive and perpetual protection rest, and to exhibit the very unjust operation of the compromise act upon the people and States of the confederacy.

Prior to 1816, the primary object of every duty was to support Government, and pay the public debt; every tariff and every tax originated in a want of money. The duties were levied on imports generally, and the encouragement of manufactures was wholly incidental to the power of collecting a revenue from customs. There was no distinction, then, between protected and non-protected articles; for the latter were generally taxed at the highest rates. When a duty was proposed as a tax, and defended as an incidental encouragement to some branch of industry at home, it was uniformly advocated as a temporary burthen upon the consumer, for which he would be indemnified in a few years by a cheaper domestic supply. The Government wanted money, the taxes were moderate, and the consumers seldom troubled themselves to inquire into the wisdom of the discriminations, or the soundness of the principles, of Congress.

At the close of the war with Great Britain, the manufactures of the country had been protected for eight years by an almost total prohibition of foreign merchandise, and by the sacrifices of agriculture and commerce. When peace returned, the latter interests were destined again to prosper, and there was danger that the sudden renewal of our intercourse with foreign nations, with whom we exchanged productions, would give a blow to manufactures from which they would not recover in many years. There was a general desire to moderate the shock, and the duties levied by the tariff of 1816, were in some instances higher than would have been otherwise adopted; and necessarily much higher than they were before the war, owing to its heavy expenses. From that time a struggle occurred at almost every session, for more protection, and the duties were continually raised till they reached their maximum in 1828. Various expedients were resorted to, to sustain them. Our expenditures were rapidly increased without the least regard to economy, to create a necessity for revenue. The duties on merchandise exclusively of foreign origin were repealed to preserve our protecting duties; and now, when all these expedients have failed, an attempt is made, not only to perpetuate, but to increase them by annually distributing the proceeds of our public lands.

The system was modified by the acts of the 14th July, 1832, and the 2d of March, 1833. This last act, though proposing a reduction of duty, contains some provisions to take effect in 1842, which will probably be repealed. To exact cash duties, and to deny to our foreign trade the privilege of deposit, is a policy which has never yet been introduced into any other civilized commercial country; and to assess the duty on the market value of foreign merchandise, at every port in the United States, would give us as many rates of duty as we have ports, in direct violation of the constitution. But the committee do not propose to anticipate the discussion of these questions, or any of the provisions of the act of 1833, which do not interfere with the proposed reduction of the revenue. They deem it, however, important to examine the principle of the compromise act, and to expose its unjust operation at this time.

The modern innovation upon our ancient plan of levying duties on foreign merchandise, generally by collecting our revenue, exclusively from that portion which comes in competition with our own industry, reverses the whole design of the constitution; which certainly contemplated that our taxes for federal purposes should be levied in a ratio to representation as nearly as it was practicable.

The previous acts, repealing duties on non-protected articles, and the act of March, 1833, are calculated to make our taxes as unequal as possible. There is a wide difference between the operation of a tariff on merchandise similar to our own and on that which is exclusively foreign. When we collect twenty millions on the latter, the duties are general through the Union, and the price of no corresponding commodity at home is raised by it. The tariff operates as a tax to that extent, and no further, and the whole amount goes into the Treasury for the support of Government. No man gains any advantage over another, and no State is made tributary to any capitalist, or corporation. But when twenty millions are collected on protected articles, the tax indirectly extends to the whole mass of our own productions and manufactures, which are raised in price, and a much greater amount is levied upon the consumers of the country, in addition to the twenty millions for the support of Government. In 1835 the merchandise imported for consumption liable to duty, deducting the value exported, amounted to about sixty-six millions, and yielded a duty of twenty millions. The value of similar merchandise of domestic origin in that year, may be estimated at about $250,000,000. Some of these branches, especially those beyond the mountains, are not so much affected by our duties; but the prices of far the largest proportion are regulated in a great measure by the tax we impose. Assuming that articles of the value of only $150,000,000, were so affected, and to the extent of 25 per cent. which is less than the actual duty on imported merchandise, the internal tax on the consumers in 1835, amounted to $37,500,000, in addition to the twenty millions which went into the Treasury. It is impossible to ascertain what amount of tax these protected branches of industry have for their own profit, and to pay the difference between American and European labor, thus indirectly collected from the consumers since 1789. But we know that the latter have paid on foreign merchandise, from 1789 to 1836, inclusive, (see statement A,) more than $682,000,000, besides probably thirty millions for the expenses of collection. More than one half of this aggregate has been levied on protected articles. Although we cannot ascertain the amount of this internal tax upon the consumers for the last forty-eight years, we can form some estimate of it in late years. At the manufacturers' convention in New York in 1831, they estimated the annual product of that industry, omitting some branches, at more than two hundred millions. From their great and uninterrupted prosperity since then, the annual value of their products at the present time, ought probably to be estimated at $300,000,000. If the larger proportion of this amount is not raised in value by duties on foreign merchandise, then are they, as protecting duties, wholly inoperative and unnecessary. This indirect tax upon the consumption of our own productions, cannot be estimated at less than twice the amount of duty collected on similar foreign merchandise, or forty millions annually.

The prices of protected produce and manufactures at home and abroad, are regulated by the industry of those countries where labor is uniformly cheaper than it is in the United States. Until our population resembles that of Europe, and our climate is as genial as that of the sugar islands, our consumers must pay for both foreign and domestic merchandise, a price equal to the cost of broad, the charges of importation, the duty and the merchants' profit upon all. How much the aggregate of all these amount to in the progress of near half a century, it is impossible to calculate. We know, however, that one of the items amounts to more than $350,000,000; and the princely establishments scattered over the United States, and the fact that the annual produce of their industry may be estimated at $300,000,000, afford ample evidence that other treasures than that of the Government, have drawn a much larger amount from the labor of the consumers.

Such is the operation of those protecting duties which it is proposed to continue, for the purpose of dividing our surplus revenue, hereafter. Such the system of taxation which the compromise act, as it is called, makes perpetual in a confederacy of States, three-fourths of which are not engaged to any extent in these protected branches of industry. According to the provisions and indirect operation of that act, we must levy sixty millions annually upon the consumption of the country, in order to collect twenty for the use of Government. The entire population of most, and a large majority of all the States, must be forever compelled by our laws to sustain immense and powerful establishments, which are overshadowing all other branches of industry, while our privileged capitalists and corporations are alone to be, in effect, exempt from taxation, well satisfied with a reciprocity of duties so long as they are ultimately indemnified by an indirect tax upon the other interests of the country.

In other countries, with a crowded population and a consolidated Government, this system is less expensive, though manifestly unjust and impolitic, wherever it is adopted. But whatever may be its operation elsewhere, it is wholly inconsistent with the equal, just, and free basis of our institutions; and can never be perpetuated in a confederacy of States spread over a vast continent, differing in employments, interests, soil, and climate.

It is impossible to make a protecting tax equal among the States. It is, as such, wholly inconsistent with the constitutional and political rights of the members of our confederacy. We cannot permanently make twenty of the States of the Union tributary, not to the other six, but to a small portion of their population. The produce of the labor of one State should, by law, enjoy no advantages over the produce of labor in another, whatever may be the character of its industry; nor should the foreign trade of any one State in the Union be restricted, except from political necessity.

The commerce of a confederacy, internal and external, should be wholly free. The manufactures of Europe, as well as of the United States, require the produce of our agriculture, and we have no constitutional right to restrict the mutual exchange of our commodities exclusively for the purpose of increasing the profits of individuals in other States. The planter of the south and the farmer of the interior, or of the west, cannot be effectually and perpetually compelled by our laws to purchase his supplies from the manufacturer or producer in some distant State, on terms which give the latter an advantage of thirty, forty or fifty per cent. and in some instances more. This plan of taxation is unjust in any form and to any extent, but to collect, as is proposed, millions beyond the wants of Government, merely for the purpose of distribution, would render its inequality and oppression intolerable.

These protecting duties can be no longer defended as temporary taxes upon consumption, for which the country will be indemnified by a cheap and abundant supply of domestic produce and manufactures. It will be seen, by examining the statement B, how utterly fallacious have been all such predictions and speculations, from the date of the report of our first Secretary of the Treasury, in 1790, down to the present day. That statement exhibits the quantity and value of the most important protected merchandise imported in fifteen years to September, 1835, and some for the year ending 30th June last.

Previous to 1821 our laws did not require regular returns, and little reliance can be placed on estimates. So far from redeeming the pledges, so repeatedly given to the country, that foreign merchandise would be excluded, our importations have always been and are now steadily increasing, and almost uniformly in a ratio even greater than our rapid increase of population. Our manufactures, however prosperous, cannot more than keep pace with the growth of the country, so long as our boundaries of settlement continue to be enlarged, and our agricultural population spreads in the south and west. We have never had an adequate supply of labor, and even that is comparatively diminishing, as the spirit and facility of emigration increase, and the theatre of settlement enlarges. Such is the existing demand for labor for our modern improvements and enlarged industry—for our mines, factories, railroads, and canals, that we can scarce procure sufficient to cultivate the soil. Besides, so long as we supply all Europe with raw materials, and our exports continue to increase, as they will do, we must take her manufactures in return. While peace continues, nations will exchange their surplus productions; and that commerce will constantly increase, in defiance of all our revenue laws. The consumers of this country can expect no relief from the protecting system till this continent shall have become settled, and a dense and impoverished population reduces the price of labor to the European standard. Till then, they must pay an annual tribute of millions, to add to the number, wealth, and power of our capitalists and corporations.

Statement B gives the importations for each year ending the 30th September, from 1821 to 1835. The returns are not complete for 1836, though a few are stated for the year ending the 30th June last. The aggregate imports for that year, including coin and bullion, was $185,631,410. Had the importations for 1836 been taken into the comparison, a much larger increase would have been exhibited; but the trade of that year was augmented by extraordinary causes, and is therefore excluded. The comparison made is between the seven years ending in 1821, and in 1835—the first and the last seven of the fifteen years. The real increase is much larger than the apparent, in consequence of constant improvements in machinery, and the competition among nations. The value of imports at the present day represents, in many instances, more than double the quantity the same amount would have represented twenty years ago.

In the last seven years, to 1835, the average increase over the first seven—that is, in seven years, is on the following articles, viz:

Brass manufactures	26	per cent.
Glass ware	60
China ware	150
Earthen and stone ware	25
Steel	87
Leather manufactures, the last five over the first five years, from 1826 to 1835	62½

The only article, the importation of which has not increased, is hemp; and for the very unsatisfactory reason, that the laws of other countries are more friendly to our navigation than our own, and our ships are supplied abroad.

Woolen manufactures.—Stuff goods have been admitted free of duty for three years past. Other manufactures of wool have been protected by a high duty; and, more effectually to diminish importations, cash duties are exacted, to take effect from the date of importation. The aggregate increase of worsted and woollens is in the last, over the first seven years, about $1,700,000, being 22 per cent. in seven years. The greatest amount imported in any one year of the first seven, was $11,752,595, and in the last, $16,831,557; being $4,000,000 more than had been imported in any one year since these returns were ordered. If the quantities, instead of the values, could be compared, it would exhibit a greater increase. The worsted goods imported in the year ending the 30th of June, 1836, amounted to $7,099,370; woollens, $13,614,643; making an aggregate of $20,714,013.

Cotton manufactures.—This branch was protected by a heavy square yard duty in 1816, which has been subsequently increased. The average increase annually in the last over the first seven years is more than a million. The highest amount imported in any one of the first seven years was $12,509,516; in the last, $16,090,224. The first year of the sixteen was $7,785,514, and the last, $15,367,585. While it is considered how much the price of this fabric has been reduced in every country in the last twenty years, and that the same value now generally represents twice the quantity it did formerly, some idea may be formed of the immense increase in this branch of our importations. The amount imported in the year ending the 30th June last was $18,927,250.

Iron and Steel manufactures.—By adopting specific rates of duty on many of these manufactures, the consumers are taxed much more heavily than they are aware of; besides which, the heavy charges of transportation give our own manufactures a great advantage. The importations, notwithstanding, have increased very rapidly. The aggregate amount imported in the first seven years was $19,141,183; in the last, $27,824,141; being an increase in seven years of 45 per cent. The highest annual importation in the first term, was $3,525,433; in the last, $4,827,461; and in the first year of the sixteen, $1,630,129; in the last, $4,827,461. The amount imported in the year ending the 30th June last was $7,717,910.

Bar Iron.—The aggregate quantity imported in the first seven years was 3,998,021, and in the last 7,106,381 hundredweight, or about 200,000 tons in the former period, and 355,000 tons in the latter; being an increase of 77½ per cent. in seven years. The consumption of iron was rapidly increasing in every country, owing to the application of it to a variety of new purposes. But another, and much more important source of consumption, has recently grown out of the improvement in railroads, which promises to give ample employment for years to come to iron works at home and abroad. The demand for this new use cannot even be now supplied, and the price of railroad iron has consequently risen very considerably. By devoting labor to this new and increasing branch of the iron manufacture, other branches have advanced in price. Although our iron-masters find the latter more profitable than rail-road iron, the British, by going largely into this new branch, have given an impulse to all others in every country. There will undoubtedly be a rapid increase of railroads in Europe and America, which must very much enlarge the demand. Whatever may have been the motives, heretofore, for imposing a protecting duty, none is now required; for this modern improvement has created a market for it which affords it a protection far more permanent and effectual than thrice the amount of our existing duty. As a protection, our duty is rendered wholly abortive; for all the iron-masters of Europe and America cannot, taking a series of years together, supply the demand for railroads and all other purposes.

Sugar.—This is also charged with a specific duty equal to sixty or seventy per cent. on the estimated cost of production abroad. The aggregate quantity imported in the first seven years of the statement, was 536,363,592 pounds, and in the last, 664,371,508 pounds; being an increase of about 24 per cent. in seven years. The highest importation in the first term was 94,378,814, and in the last, 126,039,239 pounds. The importation of molasses has also increased near 20 per cent. in seven years. The greatest quantity imported in the first seven years was 13,843,045, and in the last, 18,971,603 gallons. The culture of sugar is very uncertain in our climate. If the estimate made by the convention in New York be correct, there has been no increase in this branch since 1831. They estimated the crop at 40,000 hogsheds in 1823, and at 100,000 in 1831. The crop of the present year has been estimated at 90,000, but, in consequence of an early frost, it is said, will not produce over 75,000 hogsheds. Since the acquisition of Louisiana, the consumers have paid about $76,000,000, for the protecting duty on sugar and molasses, besides about $30,000,000 probably in the increased price of our domestic sugar. The quantity imported in the year ending the 30th of June last was 174,607,506 pounds.

Salt.—The duty on salt was first laid by the tariff of 1789, was afterwards increased, but subsequently repealed by the act of the 3d of March, 1807, when we had an overflowing Treasury. It was renewed during the war, as a war duty. The aggregate quantity imported in the first seven years of the fifteen was 32,019,575, and in the last, 38,779,371 bushels; being an increase of about twenty-one per cent. in seven years. Salt has been protected from 1789 to the present time; for although the duty was repealed from 1808 to 1814, our embargo, other restrictions, and war, were much more efficient than the duty. After near half a century we import about as much as is manufactured in the United States, even including those establishments in the interior with which foreign salt cannot interfere.

Coal.—The duty on coal commenced with the tariff of 1789, at two cents a bushel. The statement referred to exhibits the importation of coal for fifteen years. The aggregate quantity imported in the first seven years was 6,038,027, and in the last 12,251,642 bushels; being an increase of more than one hundred per cent. in seven years. Is it not practicable to obtain a statement of the produce of all the mines in the United States; but it will be sufficient to show the immense increase in the consumption of coal, by referring to the progress of three mines of anthracite coal; (see statement C.) The annual produce, in 1820, was 365, and in 1836, 682,429 tons. The increase of all the mines in the same neighborhood, for the present year, is estimated at 250,000 tons. While our importations of foreign coal have increased in seven years, ending in September, 1845, over the seven years ending in 1827, more than one hundred per cent. a new branch of the coal trade has grown up from nothing to 682,429 tons. The whole amount of coal imported in 1821 was but 17,000 tons; and in 1836 it was about 60,000 tons, and has been more. The increased consumption in these branches alone—but a small proportion of the coal trade of the United States—since 1820, is from about 17,000 to 750,000 tons; and, as a writer in defence of the coal duty informs us, we are in the present year to add 250,000; making a million of tons. Without this, however, the consumption in these branches has increased to forty-four times the quantity consumed sixteen years ago. It is very evident that our coal companies have a much more powerful protection than any which the duty affords them. Causes far more effectual and controlling than all our revenue laws, have, within a few years, created an extraordinary demand for coal, which must increase permanently. The destruction of our forests, the increase of our population, and the enlarged application of coal to manufacturing and other purposes, must enable the producers, taking a series of years together, not only to regulate the quantity, but the price of this commodity. With such evidence of the rapid and permanent increase of the consumption of coal, the continuance of the duty as a protection cannot be justified. The whole duty in 1835 was but about $100,000; and although that imported now is more than three times the quantity in 1821, the whole does not equal twice the annual consumption of the town of Wheeling, in Virginia. The statement below, though relating to other countries, will show the immense product of coal, and its various uses, and proves how utterly insignificant our importation of 60,000 tons is, when compared with the aggregate consumption of the United States. The following is the estimated annual produce of the coal mines in England and Wales, under the different heads of consumption:

By the population	20,804,570 tons.
Iron furnaces	3,000,000
Manufactories	4,550,000
Steamboats	3,000,000
Exported	615,925
Total	$1,970,495

Wheat.—A duty of 25 cents a bushel was imposed on wheat, in 1824. Notice is taken of this item in this report, merely for the purpose of proving its insignificance as a protecting duty. It is an insult to the agricultural interest to attach any importance to it as a measure of protection. Statement D shows that the whole quantity of wheat imported into all our Atlantic ports, from the time the duty was laid, in 1824, to the 30th of September, 1835, embracing a term of eleven years, was but 4,832 bushels—about 440 bushels a year. Notwithstanding the extraordinary state of trade, and the display made about Black Sea, Baltic, and German wheat, during 1836, the whole quantity imported in the year ending the 30th September last, at all the ports on the seaboard, (except the third quarter of the year, at Boston,) was but 317,883 bushels, paying less than $80,000 duty. In an agricultural country like this, remote as it is from other grain-growing countries, our farmers have nothing to apprehend from importations. There are but two causes that can bring wheat from abroad: a failure of crops, when importations would be desired by all; and the occasional recurrence of a redundant currency.

The importations of wheat in 1836 were not owing to the former cause. Although our crops have partially failed in some of the States, there is no famine, and the deficiency is not the sole cause of the present high price. We have had a redundant currency, which encouraged speculation, and raised the prices of commodities generally so high, as to produce importations in 1836, without regard to the actual wants of the country. A sudden and large addition to our metallic and paper currency has made us importers of wheat; and had it been practicable, the same cause might have made us importers of the soil which produced it.

The duty on wheat is of no consequence in our trade with Europe, or any other branch of our commerce abroad. By referring to the table D, it will be seen that its operation is almost entirely confined to our Canadian frontier. But even there, the importations were of very little consequence till 1835; then the duty did not amount to sixty thousand dollars, and the imports for 1836 were not half the quantity. The duty on wheat operates very injuriously on our trade with Upper Canada. When it was laid in 1824, we were the millers and exporters of the Canadians. By imposing a duty of twenty-five cents, and refusing the drawback on exportation on that frontier, we have destroyed this branch of trade, as far as the law could be executed. That, however could not be effected on the St. Lawrence and the Niagara. The most serious objection to this duty is, that it enables the British Government to carry out a policy which it wisely adopted some years ago. The produce of the United States is not only admitted into Canada free of duty, but enjoys all the advantages of Canadian produce in the consumption of Great Britain. She thus secures the carrying of our produce, while we, by our own laws, deny ourselves the profit of exporting the produce of Upper Canada, and of furnishing that country with supplies. We force trade through the St. Lawrence, instead of encouraging it through our canals, rivers and lakes; into which channels it would have long since flowed, but for our own laws. Such is the whole operation of our duty on wheat: it affords no protection whatever to agriculture, while, with the aid of other laws equally unwise, it almost destroys our commerce with Upper Canada, and increases the navigation of Great Britain.

Such is the present condition and the operation of protecting duties on some of the most prominent branches of our industry. The enlargement and the prosperity of our manufactures, and the existence of these duties for near half a century, no longer warrant a continuance of these heavy charges upon the consumption of the country, under the pretended necessity of sustaining against foreign competition, capitalists and corporations, the annual produce of whose mines, factories, and plantations is estimated at three hundred millions of dollars. The agricultural and commercial interests might with more justice claim the protection of Government; and, as an indemnity for the sacrifices of half a century, ask for a tax upon that capital, nineteen-twentieths of which has been drawn from their labor. With a surplus of fifty millions in money and stock, and an income from customs and public lands beyond the wants of Government, they have at least a right to demand that the whole burden of supporting Government, and sustaining our capitalists and corporations, should not be thrown upon them. If our protected industry, great, growing, and profitable as it is, cannot now protect itself, it never will; and it is time for every consumer to determine whether he will submit to perpetual taxation for any such purpose. The statements appended to this report prove conclusively that, notwithstanding the extraordinary increase of our own manufactures, our supplies from abroad, through natural and uncontrollable causes, are constantly increasing. We cannot apologise for the continuance of these taxes, by holding out any prospect of relief, now or hereafter. It is time, therefore, that the system, as such, should be gradually reformed; that all branches of our industry should be placed on the same footing; and that our taxes should give no advantage to one man over another. No State nor section of this confederacy should hereafter be made permanently tributary to another by the operation of our revenue laws.

Unequal and unjust as our taxes are, it is not proposed to remove them in a mode which might shock any branch of industry. The immense increase of the consumption of coal, and the comparatively insignificant quantity imported from abroad, clearly show that the prosperity of this branch is wholly independent of the duty. It is required neither for protection nor revenue, and the committee recommend its repeal. They also propose to repeal the duty remaining on salt; one-half was repealed by the act of July 14, 1832, without destroying our salt-works, as was predicted; and the remainder may be taken off, with little injury to them and great benefit to the country. Such a tax ought not to be continued with an overflowing Treasury. The committee further recommend a general reduction of our imposts, to the extent of seven millions. For the reasons stated in this report, they have not endeavored to select articles which would not affect our industry: the duties upon all these, of any importance whatever, have already been repealed. Nor were they disposed to repeal the duties upon articles paying a less duty than twenty per cent. while other branches of industry, with no higher claims, were protected by duties of 30, 50, and upwards of 100 per cent. So long as the principle of protection is continued, justice requires that they should at least be equalized. That is the basis of the adjustment in the act of the 2d March, 1833. By that act, all duties over 20 per cent. were to be gradually abolished. The committee propose the same measure, but recommend a different process of reduction. By the tariff of 1833, the excess of duties over 20 per cent. were to be reduced one-tenth on the 31st of December, 1833; one-tenth the 31st of December, 1835; one-tenth the 31st of December, 1837; and one-tenth the 31st of December, 1839: the remainder of the excess was to be taken off, one-half on the 31st of December, 1841, and the other on the 30th of June, 1842. Of these, the two first reductions have already been made. In estimating the excess for future years, 1834 is considered a better criterion than 1835 or 1836, when the importations were unusually large. The excess of duty on the gross revenue accruing in the year ending 30th September, 1834, (see statement B,) was $9,400,000; from this is to be deducted the drawback on the quantity exported, which would probably leave the excess of duty over 20 per cent. on the quantity remaining for consumption at seven millions. Assuming this as the nett excess, and that the same amount of importations should continue till 1842, the following would be the prospective operation of the act of the 2d March, 1833:

Excess	$7,000,000
Deduct one-tenth 31st Dec. 1837	700,000
	6,300,000
Deduct one-tenth 31st Dec. 1839	630,000
	5,670,000
Deduct one-half 31st Dec. 1841	2,835,000
	2,835,000
Deduct one-half 30th June, 1842	2,835,000

has the act proposes to reduce the excess

1,330,000 dollars in five years, and 5,670,000 dollars in six months. If the state of our finances did not oblige us to anticipate this reduction of our revenue, motives of policy should induce us to change this extraordinary and unequal process of reduction. With a foreign trade constantly and permanently increasing, our manufactures will be as much affected in 1842 as they will be in 1838. If they can, as is proposed, stand a reduction of near six millions of this excess in six months, they will certainly be little affected by taking off the third of seven millions every six for eighteen months. The committee, therefore, propose that one-third of the excess should be reduced on the 30th September next; one-half of the remainder on the 31st of March, 1838; and the other half on the 30th September, 1838. Assuming an excess of seven millions, the reduction would be, viz:

	$7,000,000
One-third, September 30, 1837	2,333,333
	4,666,667
One-half, March 31, 1838	2,333,333
One-half, September 30, 1838	2,333,333

Such a reduction would increase and diminish with the rise and fall of importations, and could not materially affect these branches of industry, producing annually, as is estimated, three hundred millions, and distributed, as this reduction would be, among them all. Besides, even after these high duties are reduced to twenty per cent. they will still, with the charges of importation, cash duties, and short credits, enjoy a protection of forty to fifty per cent. and, on heavy and cheap merchandise, much more. As to the proprietors of our salt-works, iron-works, and coal mines beyond the mountains, our imposts do not affect them, as they enjoy a natural monopoly, and regulate both the price and the quantity of their productions.

It is the vice of our plan of levying taxes for the support of Government, that we can make no change in our revenue laws without affecting some interest. In the progress of our legislation, and of our intercourse with foreign nations for the last half century, with our tariffs, embargoes, non-intercourse, and war, the burden and sacrifices have fallen on the non-protected, the profits on the protected, branches of our industry. A period has arrived, when a measure of an opposite character is demanded by the highest considerations. It is the duty of all interests to yield to the paramount necessity of reducing the revenue of the United States to the wants of the Government; and the committee report a bill for that purpose.

A.

Statement of the revenue annually collected from the consumers of the United States by duties on foreign merchandise.

March 4, 1793, to Dec. 31	In 1792	In 1813
1791	$4,399,473 09	$13,224,623 25
1792	3,443,070 85	5,993,772 08
1793	4,255,506 56	7,282,942 22
1794	4,861,065 28	36,306,874 88
1795	5,583,461 26	26,283,348 49
1796	6,567,947 94	17,176,385 00
1797	7,549,649 65	20,283,608 76
1798	7,106,061 93	15,095,612 15
1799	6,610,449 51	13,064,447 15
1800	9,080,932 73	17,589,761 94
1801	10,730,778 93	19,038,433 44
1802	12,318,222 75	17,878,325 71
1803	10,479,417 61	20,093,713 45
1804	11,095,565 33	23,341,331 77
1805	12,936,487 04	19,712,233 29
1806	14,667,693 17	23,205,523 64
1807	15,845,521 61	22,681,965 91
1808	16,363,550 58	21,922,391 59
1809	7,296,020 58	24,224,441 77
1810	8,583,309 31	28,465,237 24
1811	12,318,222 73	29,032,508 91
1812	8,958,777 53	16,214,957 15
		19,591,310 59
		23,000,000 00

*682,547,842 84

To which may be added the expenses of collection for 48 years.

[The other tables appended to the report are so large that they cannot conveniently be published.—Els. Globe.]

A bill to reduce the revenue of the United States to the wants of the Government.

"Be it enacted, &c. That from and after the 30th day of September next, in all cases where duties are imposed on foreign imposts by the act of the 14th of July, 1832, entitled 'An act to alter and amend the several acts imposing duties on imposts,' or by any other act, shall exceed twenty per centum on the value thereof, one third part of such excess shall be deducted; from and after the 31st of March, 1838, one half of the residue of such excess shall be deducted; and on the 30th September, 1838, the other half shall be deducted, any thing in the act of 2d of March, 1833, to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th of September next, the duties on salt and coal shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

The bill having been twice read, and the reading of the report being concluded,

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved that the bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that the bill and report be printed.

Mr. LAWRENCE said, as a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, and one of the minority of that committee upon this subject, he hoped he might be permitted, in the outset, to express his entire dissent from the principles laid down both in the bill and in the report.

Sir, said Mr. L. this is a measure of great importance—no less than a bill to reduce the revenues of this country, which were proposed by the law of 1832 not to be reduced till 1842, that is in five years and a half from this time. It was, he repeated, a bill to bring down the revenues of the country, in the short period of eighteen months, as much as was proposed by the law of 1832 in five years and a half. He wished, therefore, the members of the House to reflect for a moment upon the principles contained in that report, and those contained in the bill. He put the question to the members of that House, whether there was any serious, any abiding feeling there that that bill was to become the law of the land? This question should be answered, for the bill was of so much importance, that it was a necessary duty that House owed to the country that it should be advised that such legislation was contemplated upon the great interests of the country.

What was to be the effect, merely, of simply reporting this bill now? It was to create a panic from one end of the country to the other. What was its present state from Maine to Georgia? What was the state of our finances? How did they stand with reference to pecuniary facilities? Why that in all the great commercial cities of the east, (and he understood it to be worse and higher in the new States,) money was from 15 to 20 or 30 per cent per annum. Sir, said he, there is already a panic, growing out of the peculiar condition in which the finances of the country had been placed, and the effect of the proposition then before the House was to increase that panic, and how? You come down here, and propose a reduction upon all articles of import of 10 per cent. in six months, 10 per cent more in six months thereafter, and 10 per cent more in the ensuing six months.

Mr. MANN of New York raised the point of order, whether the merits of the bill were open to debate at this incipient stage.

Mr. LAWRENCE would go through in one moment.

(Cries of "Go on!" "go on!" "go on!" from several parts of the House.)

Mr. MANN remarked, that the debate was entirely irregular; but if the House were disposed that it should go on, it could, of course, so order.

Mr. LAWRENCE said he intended to conclude his remarks, by moving to lay the bill on the table. He proceeded. He wished to appeal to a few gentlemen of that House on the subject. He appealed, then, to the Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania, for the purpose of ascertaining whether this bill be a party measure, (he hoped it was not,) but he appealed to the members from that State, and asked them if they were ready to sanction and adopt the doctrines of that bill and report? He appealed next to the members from the State of New York. He had been told that that State was in favor of this system, but he did not believe it. He knew there were many gentlemen from that State on that floor in favor of this system, but a majority of her people, he had no hesitation in saying, so far as he knew them, never would sustain the doctrines set forth in that report.

[Mr. MANN exclaimed: He knows very little, then, about the sentiments of that people!]

Mr. L. also appealed to the State of Ohio, and to all the great and growing States of the West, if they had no interest in this question? Was there a gentleman upon this floor, truly representing his constituents, who would get up in his place, and say he was willing to place the whole industry of his country upon the same foundation as that of foreign nations? He could anticipate their answer. It would be in the negative. He appealed next to New England, to the whole of New England; he would appeal to the State of Connecticut, whose delegation composed a portion of the administration party in that House, if they would dare go home to their constituents with this report in their hands, and say to them, "this is our doctrine; we will stand or fall by it."

Sir, they would not be sustained for an hour if they did so. When he appealed to New England, he was aware there was a diversity of opinion upon this subject; but he was confident there was no difference of opinion on one point; and that was, that this extraordinary reduction, brought forward at this time, and under the circumstances, was without the shadow of a plea for it.

What had they been told by the Secretary of the Treasury? What did the departments say? Did not they tell them that, in their opinion, the revenue would fall short during the present year? Did not the Secretary of the Treasury, after making his estimates, and who knew better, state that the revenue, after the appropriation made on the 31st of December next, would be short at least three millions of dollars? And what did they know about the revenue of 1838? Who could say what would be derived from the customs or from the public lands? Who could tell what contingencies might arise in that interval?

Again he denounced the bill as a monstrous measure, fraught with the most dangerous consequences, and whose effect would be to weaken, if not break down, the bonds of confidence and credit which ought mutually to subsist between men and communities. He again and again reiterated his appeal to gentlemen of the administration party from Pennsylvania, Connecticut and New Hampshire, &c. to come out and avow if they were in favor of this bill, or that they believed it to be for the interest of the country. Mr. L. then went on to show that the principles of free trade ought not to be attempted in this country until a corresponding feeling had been exhibited by Great Britain and the continent of Europe, for they taxed foreign articles most heavily, particularly tobacco, bacon and hams, coals, &c. He was referring to the British tariff on imported articles, when,

The CHAIR interposed, and said the whole merits of the bill were not open at that stage.

Mr. LAWRENCE wished to speak of the effects of sending this bill out to the people, and, after doing so, should move to lay it on the table.

The CHAIR had merely apprised the gentleman that the merits of the bill were not open on a motion to print and refer it.

Mr. LAWRENCE inquired if a motion to reject it would be in order.

The CHAIR replied not in that stage.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Would it be in order to move its indefinite postponement?

The CHAIR. That motion would be in order; but the motion to lay on the table would take precedence.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Would that motion open the discussion?

The CHAIR replied, that a motion to postpone indefinitely opened the whole merits of a proposition.

Mr. LAWRENCE then moved the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. L. proceeded. He would assure the House that he would take up very little time, but he simply wished to show the House the inevitable effect of adopting this bill. As an instance of this, he would advert to some articles of import imported into Great Britain, showing the impolicy of introducing the free trade system into this country.

In England, ham and bacon, on importation, paid a duty of six cents a pound. Unmanufactured tobacco sixty-seven cents a pound, while manufactured tobacco paid no less than eight dollars a pound. Even coal, strange as it might seem, for it could be hardly conceived whence competition in that article could come, paid a duty of nine dollars a ton, or two pounds sterling. Tallow candles fourteen cents a pound, while spermaceti, of which large quantities were made in this country, paid no less than fifty-six cents a pound.

Mr. L. said he could go on at great length and show that on whatever interfered with the industry of Great Britain, she imposed heavy protective duties; and the continent pretty much followed her example. He would put it, therefore, to gentlemen—to practical gentlemen especially—whether, if the duties were all taken off, more would be exported than at present? It appeared to him a solecism, unless foreign countries did the same.

He did not believe the exportation of a single article would be increased, unless we first made a treaty, or some regulations, in reference to the article itself. Mr. L. then appealed to the cotton growers, and went on to show that as Great Britain was extending her importation of that article from other quarters, she would necessarily require less from the United States. The quantity, and the quality too, from other countries, imported by her was increasing every year. Up to the 30th of June last year, the quantity she imported from the East Indies was double what it was the year before. Nor was that all: she was now importing largely from Egypt, Peru, the Brazils, and other places; and the quantity and quality from those countries was immeasurably augmenting.

Mr. VANDERPOEL then rose and moved the orders of the day, remarking that it seemed as if all the business of the session had to give way to debates on propositions in their incipency.

The House refused to proceed to the orders—ayes 58, noes 74.

Mr. McKAY said before the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Lawrence) proceeded, he wished to draw the attention of the Chair to the 103d rule; and to inquire 1st, if it was necessary, under his construction of that rule, to commit that bill; and 2d, if discussion could be entertained on the day the bill was introduced. Mr. McK. then read the rule in question, which is in the following words:

"103. No motion or proposition for a tax or charge upon the people shall be discussed the day in which it is made or offered; and every such proposition shall receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House."

The CHAIR said, if any of the provisions of the bill went to create a tax or charge upon the people, it must be committed.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is quite the other way, sir, because it goes to reduce the taxes.

The CHAIR expressed some doubts, as the question was one that had not, to his recollection, ever before been decided.

Mr. MERCER remarked that the motion to postpone indefinitely rode over every other.

The CHAIR. Suppose the previous question were demanded, what would be the main question?

Mr. MERCER. The motion to postpone indefinitely.

The CHAIR. Certainly not. It would be on the engrossment of the bill. The Chair then suggested that, perhaps, the best mode of obviating any difficulty would be to proceed to the orders of the day, and suffer the subject to lie over till to-morrow, when, as a report from a committee, it would be the first business in order as soon as the journal was read.

Mr. LAWRENCE had a very few words to say, and if the House would permit him to proceed, he pledged himself not to occupy more than three minutes.

Mr. MANN of New York remarked that the former practice of the House, repeatedly decided, had been to commit such bills. He adverted to the great advantage the gentleman from Massachusetts had over the other members of the House, if, as was the obvious intention of the rule just referred to, one day's reflection were not allowed upon this bill, before debate upon it progressed, since the gentleman was a member of the committee which reported it.

Though Mr. M. was not prepared to go into the debate, he could nevertheless make a very satisfactory answer to the question propounded to the State he had the honor, in part, to represent, by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Mr. Mann then went on to contend that no other construction could be put upon the 103d rule, than that this subject, and all subjects on their first introduction should lie over a day for consideration. Any other interpretation put upon it, and it might as well be erased from the rules altogether. He could not help admiring the ingenuity with which the gentleman seemed to take time by the forelock, hurling his denunciations against a measure few but himself had seen, and sending out an inflammatory speech to the country, before any one else had an opportunity of replying to him. Mr. M. read the rule (as given above) and asked if language could be more plain or positive than that such a proposition could not be discussed on the day of its introduction. Why, the very object of that rule was—

Mr. REED here called the gentleman from New York to order, on the ground that the Chair had not as yet given its decision, and debate could only be entertained on an appeal.

The CHAIR repeated his former suggestion, as the best mode of obviating the difficulty.

Mr. LAWRENCE had no objection to give way to the orders of the day, if it should be the pleasure of the House.

Mr. CRAIG hoped the House would order the report to be printed; so that at least other members might be put in possession of the subject they were discussing.

Mr. ADAMS inquired if the House could proceed to the orders before the question on the rejection of the bill had been decided. Besides the bill had not yet been ordered to a second reading.

The CHAIR remarked that it had.

Mr. ADAMS. It has not.

The CHAIR stated the question. A bill had been reported, and read twice. The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Owens) called for the reading of the report; after which a motion was made by the gentleman who introduced it, to refer it to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Pending which motion, the gentleman from Massachusetts moved the postponement of the bill. The Chair said that it was perfectly competent for the House to proceed to the orders of the day, and the Chair would take the sense of the House upon that motion.

Mr. BELL contended that the Chair had no right to entertain any motion so reiterated.

The CHAIR replied that it was repeatedly done. Motions were frequently made to proceed to the orders of the day; which, being unsuccessful, were afterwards repeated.

Mr. BELL. I remember no instance of the kind.

Mr. CAMBRELENG. I have done it twenty times within my immediate recollection; and I have known it done when the gentleman from Tennessee himself (Mr. Bell) filled the chair, and always entertained the motions.

The CHAIR. The House can go to the orders of the day at any time, and if the motion be unsuccessful at one time, it may be renewed at another. Such has been the known practice of the House.

Mr. BELL. I enter my protest against it now, whatever may have been the practice heretofore.

The CHAIR. The Chair decides the motion to proceed to the orders of the day to be in order.

Mr. BELL appealed from that decision, in order, he said, to make a few remarks against it. Mr. B. then went on to argue that by the decision, of the Chair, the whole business of the House might be arrested, since a few members might continually renew the motion and weary the House until it assented, or arrest any discussion then going on. It did not follow, that because a certain practice, which was wrong per se, could be right because it had been occasionally indulged in, and suffered to pass sub silentio, to use the Speaker's words the other morning. Having concluded the few words he had to say, he withdrew his appeal.

Mr. THOMAS inquired by whom the motion had been made to proceed to the orders of the day?

Mr. MANN said he had made the motion.

Mr. THOMAS appealed to Mr. Mann to withdraw the motion that the House proceed to the orders of the day. He said it appeared to him to be but reasonable to permit the members who composed the minority of the Committee of Ways and Means, to make explanations verbally in lieu of a report. Such a course had been often pursued in the House on grave occasions. It was but a courteous and customary indulgence. Let the speeches of the minority go forth with the report of the majority, and the public would be put in possession of both sides of the question.

The CHAIR reminded the gentleman that the question was not debatable.

Mr. THOMAS asked permission to remind the gentleman of an instance in which the members of a committee, who were in the minority in the House, had been indulged. He referred to the case of the Bank Committee in 1832. In that case, the four members of the committee who were against the bank, had been permitted, by almost a unanimous vote of the House, when the friends of the bank had a decided majority, to submit verbal explanations. Other instances could, with great facility, be referred to, but it was unnecessary.

Mr. MANN said he wished the same opportunity afforded to him that had been given to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIR remarked, that if appeals were taken to enter into debate, that debate must be confined to the question of order.

Mr. MANN wished the same indulgence extended to him as to others.

The CHAIR would put the motion on proceeding to the orders of the day.

The House again refused—ayes 73, noes 86.

Mr. MANN then made the point of order on the 103d rule, (as given above.)

The CHAIR said: It did not appear to him upon the face of the bill, that it required commitment. Did it propose an imposition of duties, and thereby a tax or charge upon the people? It appeared to him not; and he could not, therefore, take upon himself to decide that it must necessarily go to a Committee of the Whole. That, however, was a matter for the sound discretion of the House, who would decide it upon reasons of expediency or propriety, as it saw fit.

Mr. MANN observed that, from this decision, he felt himself bound to take an appeal, and upon that appeal he was not disposed to enter largely into the question, because it seemed to him that it was so obvious, under the 103d rule of the House, and former decisions made thereon, which must be within the recollection of every gentleman who has had the honor of a seat there for any length of time, that this subject ought to be committed. Mr. M. then said that the case was not a parallel one with that which the gentleman from Maryland had alluded to. It would be recollected by the gentleman from Maryland, (Mr. Thomas,) that in the case of the Bank Committee, the minority brought in their report at the same time with the majority; and this had been the practice so long as he recollected. That case, then, was not a parallel one with this.

Mr. CAMBRELENG observed that it was proper for him to state, that no report of the minority of the committee had ever been presented to the consideration of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The CHAIR remarked that that fact would have no bearing on the question before the House.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by the permission of the House, stated that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means was correct in what he had said. Mr. I. had been instructed to prepare a report on the part of the minority; but the minority determined, subsequently, that, because the measure might have the appearance of being brought in on party considerations, they would make no minority report; but leave every member of the committee to give his own views, when the subject came before the House.

Mr. MANN said that on this question of order, he would like to inquire of honorable gentlemen or the Chair, if they did not consider this proposition to be a charge upon the people? Suppose it be passed into a law, what would be its operation? Would any gentleman rise and tell him that under the law, if it ever became a law, that it would not collect a tax, or raise a revenue, from the people of the United States? Could you collect the tax without this law, if you pass it? The provisions of the bill are, that after such and such dates and times, the revenue to be raised will be such and such sums? He asserted, then, that it was as much a bill to raise revenue as it would be possible for the Committee of Ways and Means to draw up. On its face it had the appearance of being a bill to reduce the revenue; but when you come to apply its provisions, in its broadest terms, it would be seen that its purpose and object was to raise a revenue. Was it not by its title a revenue bill? Now, judging from the course adopted by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Lawrence) on the introduction of this bill, it must be supposed that he considered it a revenue bill; and a bill which to him, being largely engaged in the manufacturing business, was extremely odious, so much so that that gentleman found it necessary to promulgate his sentiments to the House, and to the world, even before the provisions of the bill were understood. Mr. M. considered that by the rule, this bill ought to be committed, so that gentlemen might have time to prepare their sentiments; and as a member of the House who was, perhaps, to be in the minority on this question, he must claim the protection of those rules, so that he might have time to prepare his sentiments, and send them out to the world along with those of the gentleman from Massachusetts; and refute the assertions of the gentleman that Mr. M.'s constituents were opposed to this measure.

Was he to sit there and hear the gentleman from Massachusetts send out to the world, a statement that his (Mr. M.'s) constituents were opposed to this bill, and have no opportunity to refute it? He hoped not. Mr. M. had been long enough on that floor to find out that there were indirect as well as direct means of getting an opportunity to express one's sentiments.

M. VINTON rose to a point of order. He considered the gentleman was not in order in this debate.

The CHAIR said he considered the gentleman from New York was taking too wide a range.

Mr. MANN hoped, as the gentleman from Massachusetts had been permitted to express his sentiments so fully, he might have leave to proceed. With a view to give the Chair an opportunity to search for precedents, Mr. M. had moved that the House proceed to the orders of the day; but as the House had seen fit to decide otherwise, and this debate was continued, he hoped gentlemen would not complain if the debate was a little extended on this appeal; and if they did complain, he asked them to apply the rules upon which they uttered the complaint to themselves. He asked gentlemen to put their hands upon their own breasts, and say whether they had any just grounds of complaint. This bill had been met with the most bitter and unusual opposition. Important as the character of it was, motions had been made to lay it on the table on its first reading. Why not let it take the ordinary course, and let it go to the Committee of the Whole? Were they to understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts was totally opposed to a reduction of taxes on the people? If so, he should like to hear the gentleman proclaim it on that floor. He considered that this rule was misconstrued and misapplied at a time when it should have the most liberal construction.

Mr. OWENS stated that when the bill was sent to the Chair, he had moved that the bill and report be read in extenso; and when the reading of the report had been concluded, the bill went immediately to its second reading. After that the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, (Mr. Cambreleng) rose and moved that it be committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and upon that motion being made, the gentleman from Massachusetts made his objections. He presumed that this fact must be within the recollection of every member.

Mr. MANN was aware that this bill had been read a second time by its title, because he had paid particular attention to it at the time; therefore to reject it without a single moment's consideration would be treating this important question with great disrespect. He had taken the appeal for the purpose of preserving a correct administration of the rules of the House, and he trusted that the Chair, upon reflection, would decide in accordance with Mr. M.'s views.

Mr. VANDERPOEL said that there could be no doubt that the decision of the Speaker was correct; but before he said what he had to say upon the point immediately under discussion, he would remark that he was not at all surprised at the sensibility which many gentlemen had discovered at the introduction of this bill. It was a bill which, if it became a law, would materially, if not vitally, affect great interests, that had sprung up under, and been fostered by, the past legislation of the country; and no gentleman, who had a faint idea of the force and magnitude of the manufacturing interest of the country, could have reasonably imagined that a bill of this description could be here introduced, without producing much ferment and agitation. It was not, therefore, strange that the minority of the committee should be anxious that their views in relation to this all-important subject should go forth with the report of the majority. An elaborate and able report, assailing the whole protective policy recognised by past legislation, had just been read to us; and for his part, without, at this stage of the bill, avowing himself either for or against it, he thought it but just and reasonable that the minority of the committee should be permitted, if they desired to do so, to express their dissent to its doctrines and conclusions, that they thus might be able to send forth to the people the antidote to what they evidently conceived to be a bane. They surely, according to all parliamentary usage, had the right to present a minority report; and if, instead of availing themselves of this privilege, they saw fit to give us here an oral exposition of their grounds of dissent, we ought not, when we considered the importance of the subject, to deny to them this privilege. He owed it to himself to explain the motive that had impelled him, a few moments ago, to submit the motion that the House proceed to the orders of the day. He surely did not make this motion with the view of muzzling the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Lawrence,) who then had the floor, but because there was another subject before the House, which, in justice to the Executive Departments of this Government, ought to be immediately disposed of. It had already contributed to the consumption of too much of the precious time of this House; and, until it was finally acted upon, it would frustrate every effort to enter upon, or execute, the important matters that demanded our attention. There was poor Michigan knocking at our door, with a perfect right to be admitted, and yet postponed, day after day, to the stale standing dish that was presented to us by the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Wise.) Here was just interposed a new subject of infinite moment, that might possibly consume the residue of the session; and, important as it was, he felt anxious when he made the motion to proceed to the orders of the day, to rid ourselves, before we entered upon a new matter, of that great look to hang interminable speeches on. [He meant the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia.] The days of this Congress would very soon be numbered; and if we continued, as we hitherto had done, to rush into new subjects before we had finished the one on hand, we would, at the end of the session, be entitled to the merit of having been very busy without having accomplished any thing.

He would now add a remark or two in relation to the appeal now under consideration. It was contended by his colleague, (Mr. Mann,) that this bill could not be discussed to day, because one of the rules of this House provided, that "no motion or proposition for a tax or charge upon the people, shall be discussed the day on which it is made or offered; and every such proposition shall receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House." Mr. V. said he knew not what the precedents were upon the point, whether this bill must, under this rule, be committed, but he knew what they ought to be. The bill under consideration surely was no proposition "for a tax or a charge upon the people." It was the very opposite of this. It was a proposition to relieve the people from charges and taxation, as its very title indicated. It was a bill "to bring down the revenues to the wants of the Government," and did not, therefore, come either within the letter or spirit of the rule. It was obvious that it did not come within the spirit of the rule; for no one could doubt as to the reason upon which the rule was founded. It had its origin in a belief, that it was best to give all propositions to increase the burthens of the people such a direction as would secure to them the utmost care and deliberation. It was well known, that in a Committee of the Whole House we were more at liberty to amend, to discuss, and, if you please, expostulate, than in the House; and it was to guaranty this great privilege of free discussion, that it had been wisely ordained, that every proposition to tax or charge the people should receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House. But this being a proposition not to tax, but to relieve from taxation, is surely not subject to this rule.

But while he was very clear that the bill need not, ex necessitate, be committed to a Committee of the Whole House, he would certainly, when the proper time arrived, vote for its commitment, because he deemed it right that a bill of this importance should be committed. The question whether, as matter of expediency, it ought to be committed, was, however, very different from the question, whether it must be committed, and thus preclude all debate on this day. He had not a doubt that the decision of the Speaker was right.

The point of order was further discussed, and the decision of the Chair advocated, by Messrs. SUTHERLAND and TOUCEY.

The CHAIR then reiterated the grounds of his decision, and

Mr. MANN withdrew his appeal.

Mr. TOUCEY then renewed the motion that the House proceed to the orders of the day; which motion was lost without a division.

Mr. LAWRENCE resumed. He was very sorry, he said, that any remarks of his should have been the cause of consuming so much time of the House; and nothing but the peculiar position which he occupied, as a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, would have induced him to trespass on its attention. Occupying that position, he felt himself bound to protest against this bill, as being a project as monstrous as any that had ever been presented to the people of the United States. When interrupted, Mr. L. said, he had remarked that he had a word to say to the cotton growers of the country in relation to this bill. What he meant to say to them was, that they have some interest in this great question. They have a common interest, as well as the manufacturers, in the prosperity of the Union; and they have a particular interest in this bill besides, in regard to their own staple. From data before him it was demonstrable that the quantity of cotton consumed in the United States, at this moment, is equal to what the whole crop of the country was in the year 1820, some sixteen or seventeen years ago. This he stated as a fact not to be disputed. And the consumption here, moreover, is at this time as great as the consumption was in England two or three and twenty years ago. We consume now, in the manufactures of this country, more than a fifth, and nearly a fourth, of the whole present crop of cotton. Was it nothing, besides, to the growers of cotton, that Great Britain, the great consumer of our cotton, is actually now importing it from every country that produces it? Is that nothing to the producer of it in this country? And is this a time to reduce and almost destroy the consumption of it here?

But (Mr. L. said) he would not now go into this subject at large—he might do so on some other fitting occasion: he had risen this morning, not with a view to make a speech, but to wash his hands, as a member of the Financial Committee, of any share in the production of this bill, or the report which accompanies it. He owed it (he said) to himself—he owed it to his constituents—he owed it to his country, to do so, because he believed the bill fraught with every sort of mischief, amongst which was its direct tendency to increase the existing embarrassment in the commercial communities. For himself (he said) he had no ulterior political objects to serve by his course in this House on this or any other question: he asked for nothing—he feared nothing: he was neither an office-holder nor an office-seeker. But his object in addressing the chairman was to ascertain, and let the country know, whether this bill was or was not a political measure. He had had no opportunity to ascertain that fact. I would like to know (said he) whether there is any concert of action here, upon this bill, among the administration party. The country ought to know, and to know at once, whether this be a party measure or not. I hope, sir, that it is not. For that reason, sir, it was that I appealed to the Representatives from Connecticut, as deeply interested in this question as any State in the Union—to the Representatives from New Hampshire, from Rhode Island—from all New England, and from Pennsylvania, the latter the authors (I was going to say) and the consistent supporters of the protective system. I now call upon them all to rise in their place, and say whether they are going for this bill. I want the country to know this. It is due to the people that they should know whether a bill is going to pass this House by the votes of those Representatives, which will prostrate to the earth most important interests of the country. I profess, sir, some practical knowledge of the subject; and I pronounce this bill fraught with consequences fatal to thousands of individuals. It has been said that a bill embracing such provisions as the bill now before the House, is a bill for the benefit of the poor. Sir, I deny the truth of the proposition. This is a bill the title of which should be a bill to make the rich richer, and the poor poorer.

Mr. L. here traced the passage of such a bill as this to its probable consequences. He supposed the case of an individual in Pennsylvania, or in Connecticut, engaged in manufactures, the cost of whose buildings and fixtures has been ten thousand dollars, upon which (a common case) there was a mortgage for one-half the cost. To pay off this mortgage, when his employment for his machinery fails, his property is sold. Who buys it? Is it the poor man who purchases in such cases? Not at all: but he who has redundant capital. What is now the case, Mr. L. asked, in those parts of the country where pecuniary pressure is felt? Go into your cities, and you will find that the men who have a small or a middling property are paying at the rate of from 15 to 30 per cent. per annum for money. Who is it that is reaping the profit? Is it the poor man? No, sir, it is the rich capitalist, or those who are allowed to use his capital. If there was ever a system devised on earth to throw the property of the country into the hands of the few at the expense of the many, it is the present financial system of the United States. I know it, sir, and I am willing that my judgment of the matter shall go to the country, for every practical man will know that what I say is true. Ay, sir, and the bill on your table goes to a much further extent than this, for it reaches the labor of the country. In one month after the passage of this bill, the business of every manufacturer and dealer in the country will be contracted. It is not the large capitalist, protected by his money-bags, who will feel its direct effects, but the laborer—the mechanic, who now gets two dollars or two dollars and a half a day. To him the employer says, on receiving information of the passage of this bill, I must stop my work! Oh, no! says the laborer, for you will take from me my means of support. Well, says the employer, I will, in order to keep you at work, give you henceforth a dollar a day instead of what I have heretofore given you. Gentlemen may flatter themselves that they are exempt from the operations of this bill; but no man, whatever his condition in life may be, is beyond the deleterious effects of this bill if it become a law. Mr. L. was sure, he said, that the representatives from the Western States, or from the Southern, were not going for this bill. The representatives from the Southern States especially would not go for it when the profits of their cotton crops were already in a process of reduction; for, although he knew that the crop of this year was a large one, the proceeds of that crop will fall far short of the proceeds of the crop of last year.

Mr. L. said it was not only to protest against the principles of this bill that he had risen, but to ask of the gentlemen in this House who have the power to do what they will—to pass this bill or to defeat it—whether this bill was to be considered as a proclamation issued by the present dastly in the Government, or as a decisive token of the course of measures which we have to expect at the hands of the coming administration. For, he did not hesitate to say, if it is produced as a party measure, it will become the law of the land; but, if not, by the aid of the representatives of Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Ohio, and Maine, whose constituents were so deeply interested in the matter, with those from at least a portion of the South, the bill might providentially be defeated. But, be that as it might, it was the imperative duty of the House to declare to the country, at once, immediately, whether or not it was probable that any bill like this would pass during the present Congress.

Mr. L. said that, whilst he was up, and as he might not have another opportunity, he would say one word on the state of the currency of the country. In the first place, said he, the domestic exchanges of the country are far greater in amount than all the gold and all the silver and all the bank notes in circulation—a vast deal greater. These exchanges are not now available to any great extent. To a very large amount they cannot be used, in consequence of the position in which, by its measures, the Government has placed the country. He meant no reflections upon the banks; for it is their interest to do all the business that they can, and they do it. But the channels of domestic exchange are obstructed, from the want of ability on the part of the banks; and a considerable proportion of our commercial difficulties arises out of that circumstance. Add to this and other causes the introduction of this bill, with the expectation that it is to become the law of the land, and you will produce a state of things the like of which very few members of this House have ever seen.

Mr. CORWIN of Ohio obtained the floor, but gave way to a motion for adjournment by Mr. PARKER, and the House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

Thursday, January 12, 1837.

Mr. HUBBARD presented the petition of Hannah Roberts; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LINN presented the petition of sundry inhabitants of Michigan city, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a harbor at the mouth of Root river, in Wisconsin: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LINN also presented the petition of sundry merchants of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for an appropriation for the same object: referred to the same committee.

Mr. NICHOLAS presented the petition of Hazzekiah L. Thistle; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been referred the bill for altering the times of holding the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of North Carolina, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the same committee to which had been referred the resolution of the Senate, directing them to inquire into the expediency of erecting suitable buildings for the accommodation of the courts of the United States at Jackson, Mississippi, moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to which had been referred the bill to authorize George Whitman of Alabama, to import an iron steamboat, with the necessary machinery in detached parts, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the same committee, to which had been referred the petition of certain citizens of Philadelphia, praying that the awards made to them under the French treaty may be paid to them, moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be laid on the table, as a bill providing for the objects prayed for has been already reported. This motion was carried.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which had been referred the bill for the relief of Robert P. Letcher and Thomas P. Moore, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which the memorial on the subject had been referred, reported a bill providing payment for a regiment of Vermont militia who served at the battle of Plattsburg.

Mr. KING of Alabama, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, without amendment, the bill to reward the captors of the privateer Lydia.

Mr. CALHOUN moved to postpone the previous order, for the purpose of taking up the bill to renew in part the deposit bill of the last session.

Mr. GRUNDY observed that the special order of the day was the bill to regulate the sales of the public lands, and it seemed to him that that bill had better be disposed of first, for if it were passed in any shape there would be a great reduction of the public revenue, and no occasion for dividing a surplus. It seemed to him proper to take up and dispose of this bill, or indeed of any other which looked to a reduction of the revenue, and they could then see whether there would be a surplus in the way contemplated by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CALHOUN expressed his acquiescence in the course proposed by the Senator from Tennessee. He said that he should be much governed in the course he should pursue, not only by what was done in regard to the honorable Senator's bill, but also the action of the Committee on Finance. He (Mr. C.) was anxious to see what they intended to do in the way of a reduction. He wished to know from the chairman of that committee, whether they proposed making a report on that subject, and if so, at what time. He desired to make the action on his own bill subordinate to that on the land bill, and to the report of the Finance Committee.

Mr. WRIGHT replied that ever since the reference of this subject to the Committee on Finance, it had not, at any time, escaped their attention. The committee were proceeding with it as rapidly as they could obtain information to govern their action; but it was impossible for them to say at what time they would be able to come to a conclusion, or for him to say when they would make a report. This very day they had had the subject under consideration, and had obtained some information with regard to it. He could assure the Senate that every member of the committee was exceedingly anxious to make a speedy report.

Mr. CALHOUN observed that he would be willing that the subject should be postponed to this day week. He wished for all the information possible, and greatly preferred a reduction of the revenue, than to depositing the surplus with the States. All gentlemen should have a fair opportunity of examining the subject. He must say that, when he looked at the state of things here, he felt but very little faith that a reduction would be made this session, as the time had now so far advanced that there would scarcely be an opportunity of acting on the subject. He had made a call upon the Secretary of the Treasury some days since, by resolution, requesting him to furnish some valuable information which we wished to be in possession of before the Committee reported; but that information had not yet been received by the Senate. He trusted it would be at an early day.

The consideration of the bill was postponed, by general consent, to this day week.

The following motion, submitted by Mr. BENTON some days since in reference to Mr. Ewing's resolution to rescind the Treasury order, was considered and agreed to:

To instruct the committee to which the resolution shall be sent, with authority to inquire into the effect and operation of the Treasury order of July 11th upon the business of the country and the banking institutions of the States, and into the conduct of banks in relation to that order, and into their attempts (if any) to withdraw specie from circulation, and to embarrass the exchanges and business of the country; the committee to summon witnesses before them, if any such are near at hand, and to conduct their inquiries at a distance by interrogatories.

Mr. WRIGHT submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee appointed to audit and control the contingent expenses of the Senate inquire into the necessity of an increase of the number of documents printed for the use of the Senate, denominated the "usual number," so as to make the same conform to the increased number of members of the body.

Mr. PRESTON submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing an examination to be made, by a board of officers of rank and experience, of the improvements in fire arms made by Hall, Cochran, Colt and the Baron Hacker, and that the general results be presented in tabular statements, showing the advantages of each in all important military points of view, and especially as

1. The celerity of fire;
2. The extent of recoil;
3. The efficiency of the fire;
4. The inconvenience from heated barrels in rapid firing;
5. The capacity of being used as a rifle;
6. The simplicity and cheapness of construction;
7. Durability;
8. Saving of ammunition and appendages;
9. The number of charges which may be carried by an infantry soldier;
10. The advantages when used against a charge of cavalry; and
11. The advantages when used by cavalry.

Mr. PRESTON offered the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Militia be instructed to inquire into the expediency of having printed at the expense of the United States, an edition of Gen. Macombs' book on tactics, &c. sufficient for the supply of each commissioned militia officer in the United States with a copy.

Mr. LINN submitted the following resolution; which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the completion of the military road from Fort Crawford, by Fort Winnebago, to Fort Howard, at Green Bay.

Mr. CRITTENDEN offered the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the propriety of making compensation to the regiment of Kentucky militia that, during the last summer, were duly called for, and required to engage in the military service of the United States; and, after being at considerable expense, equipped, and prepared for said service, were discharged, by order of the President of the United States, before they had marched for Camp Sabine, the point of their destination.

The resolutions lying on the table were considered and adopted.

SPECIAL ORDER.

The bill to limit the sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, having been announced as the order of the day:

Mr. CLAY expressed the hope that a bill of this importance would not be taken up at this time. The bill proposed an entire change in the whole land system of the country, and it so happened that by the organization of the Committee on Public Lands, the only member opposed to the bill was absent. He did not think that the Senate ought to take up a bill of such importance in the absence of a member of the Land Committee who possessed so much valuable information, and was so intimately acquainted with the subject. He believed that the Senate would derive great aid in their deliberations on the subject from the experience of that gentleman; and as other subjects of importance demanded the attention of the Senate, he hoped some one of them would be taken up and the bill for the present postponed. Mr. C. alluded to the illness of the lady of the Senator from Ohio, as the cause of that gentleman's absence, and stated that, from information lately received by him, he had reason to believe that he would be in his seat in the course of a few days.

Mr. WALKER hoped the motion would not prevail. About half of the session had now passed away, and consequently there was no time to lose. This bill was one which would be debated, and opposed at every point; and judging from the sentiments to which the honorable Senator (Mr. Clay) had given utterance, he presumed that there would be no want of opposition to the bill, notwithstanding the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Ewing) might be absent.

There were many gentlemen in that body and the House of Representatives, who were desirous that this subject should be disposed of as speedily as possible; and if the bill should be postponed to this day week, it could not, for want of time, be passed at the present session. He felt the deepest conviction that the subject should be acted upon without delay, and therefore he felt it his duty to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky. With regard to the melancholy event which had called away the Senator from Ohio, he would state, that he had seen a paragraph in the National Intelligencer of yesterday, stating that that member of the Senator's family who was said to be dangerously ill, had entirely recovered; and he (Mr. W.) considered that ample time had elapsed since the gentleman left the city for his return to it. Mr. W. concluded by expressing his hope that the motion of the Senator from Kentucky would not prevail.

Mr. CALHOUN regretted to hear that the chairman of the committee intended to go on with the bill. He had not the slightest idea that it would be taken up so soon, and had not, therefore, given any examination to the subject of it; he had not even had time to read the bill itself. He deemed it to be one of the most important subjects that could engage the attention of Congress, not only as regarded the revenue, but as it regarded the future policy of the country; and he hoped the Senate would not go on with it until every member had had an opportunity of obtaining all the information necessary to a full understanding of the subject. He himself wished time for an examination, the better to enable him to understand the arguments that might be used either for or against the measure, and therefore proposed that the subject be postponed till Monday next.

Mr. BUCHANAN said: For one I should be very unwilling to pursue any course which would prevent the Senator from Ohio from speaking on this subject; and, so far as my vote is concerned, if he returns in any reasonable time, I shall hear him. But this is a very important subject indeed. I feel the importance of it as much as the gentleman from South Carolina. And it is for that very reason I wish to hear the views of the Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

Let the honorable chairman proceed to-day, and give his views; and, so far as respects my individual vote, I will agree to postpone the consideration of the bill till Monday morning, and take such a course in regard to it as may be satisfactory to all parties.

Mr. BENTON wished to say to the Senate that there was now one-half of a short session gone, and that it would be impossible for them, if they wished the business to progress, to go on as they had heretofore done; that is to take up a subject, hear a speech on it, and adjourn at 3 o'clock, and so go on from day to day. He was fully aware of this at the commencement of the session, and therefore, in his first speech, he refused to adjourn, and preferred rather to omit some things that he wished to say, than to consume two days with one speech. The rule which he had thus laid down for himself, he wished to see applied to all, and when a subject is taken up, he wished to go on with it like business men.

He would be willing to come early in the morning, and sit late in the evening; but he could not give his consent to the delay of business by taking up a subject, hearing one speech on it, and then laying it over. He would remind these gentlemen, who were the friends of the administration, that they not only had the numerical strength, but the organization of the committees in their favor; and therefore that it was incumbent on them to see that the business was carried on without delay. Last session, though they had the numerical strength in their favor, yet the organization of the committees was against them; and when the question was asked why the business of the Senate did not go on, they could readily answer, that this organization of the committees deprived them of the control of the business. But now, when the friends of the administration had every advantage in their favor, when the question should be asked, why the business of the Senate did not go on, the public might draw what inference it pleased.

Mr. CALHOUN remarked, that as one of the opposition, and being desirous of as little delay as possible, still he would tell gentlemen on the other side that he would afford them every opportunity of discussing the subject. But whilst he said this, he claimed from the majority that they should hear gentlemen of the opposition patiently, and give a reasonable time for discussion. He would not have asked the delay of one day, had it not been absolutely necessary; and he was not disposed to allow so important a subject as the present to be hurried through the Senate, without bestowing on it all the attention it deserved.

Mr. BENTON said that he would sit there early and late; and no gentleman should be deprived by his vote of proceeding in the transaction of the public business. He wished gentlemen to go on; keep moving.

Mr. BUCHANAN observed that he was a member of the party friendly to the present administration, and that he felt the responsibility of his situation just as much as the honorable Senator from Missouri did; and, so far as regarded himself, he, for one, need not be reminded of his duty. He was responsible for it. In regard to this bill to regulate the sales of the public lands, he considered it a most important measure. He did not know how he should vote on it. He knew the evils of speculating in the public lands, and wished much to put them down; but he wished to put them down with care. There were interests of his constituents involved; farmers who go to the west to purchase lands to make a provision for their children, (and he considered this description of persons the most desirable settlers on the public lands,) and those interests he should take care to see attended to, so far as his vote was concerned.

He wished to hear the member from Mississippi, because he knew that he should derive much valuable information from him, and then he, for one of the friends of the administration, should take the responsibility of voting for such a reasonable postponement as would allow other gentlemen an opportunity of giving their views. He had no objection to a postponement till Monday next.

Mr. KING of Alabama expressed the hope that the postponement might not be quite so long as the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Clay) wished. He was willing to give a reasonable time, in order that gentlemen might be prepared to express their opinions on this very important subject. This was confessedly known on all hands to be a most important bill—one that required to be examined with care, and amended in a way that would give every interest in the country its fair proportion of the public domain, as far as practicable. Now, he was one of the Committee on the Public Lands, and he had concurred in reporting this bill, but it had some defects, and it was brought forward with the hope that by a full discussion in the Senate, sufficient light would be thrown on the subject to render it perfect as the nature of it would permit. He was disposed to give the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Ewing) who was known to be in opposition to the bill, and to all other gentlemen who were anxious to speak on it a full opportunity of being heard; and he for one, as a friend of the administration, thought that in all matters of legislation there should be a sufficient and a perfect understanding of the subject. This was necessary, if they wished the business to be well done. If the chairman of the committee wished to go on to-day, let him (said Mr. K.) go on, and then, by a postponement, give a reasonable time to other gentlemen who wished to be heard on the subject. This indulgence, though a member of the majority, he would never hesitate to give.

Mr. CLAY said, that although he should prefer that the Senator from Ohio had been present to hear the exposition of the Senator from Mississippi, (Mr. Walker,) yet, after the manly and independent sentiments he (Mr. C.) had heard expressed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the Senator from Alabama, he would not hesitate to withdraw his motion. Under all the circumstances, if the Senator did not see the propriety of a postponement till Monday, perhaps he would go on with his remarks.

Mr. WALKER, after some remarks, then submitted an amendment from the Committee on Public Lands, which was ordered to be printed with the bill; and

The further consideration of the subject was postponed till to-morrow, with the understanding, that after the conclusion of Mr. WALKER'S speech, it is to be further postponed till Monday next.

The resolution submitted by Mr. BENTON, to expunge from the Journals of the Senate the resolution in censure of the President for removing the public deposits from the Bank of the United States, was taken up.

Mr. BENTON addressed the Senate in a speech of considerable length, in support of the resolution.

Mr. CRITTENDEN followed in reply, in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. DANA then commenced a speech in its support; but, after speaking for about fifteen minutes, without concluding, yielded the floor to

Mr. GRUNDY, on whose motion
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

THURSDAY, January 12, 1837.

Mr. THOMPSON, of South Carolina, on leave, moved that a bill from the Senate for the relief of Captain Samuel Warren, be taken up on its reference. Mr. T. prefaced his motion by a few remarks on the extraordinary merits of the claim.

The motion was agreed to nem. dis. and the bill was accordingly read twice and committed to the Committee on Pensions.

NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. McKEON, on leave, submitted the following resolution which was agreed to.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of placing light-boats on Flynn's Knoll and the Roamer, near Sandy Hook; and also into the expediency of publishing the charts now in the office of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

On motion of Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, the amendment of the Senate to the bill from the House, "to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the service of the United States," was taken up, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

THE TARIFF.

The House then resumed the consideration of the "bill to reduce the revenues of the United States to the wants of the Government," and the "report" accompanying the same, reported by Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means.

There were two motions pending; first, by Mr. CAMBRELENG, to commit the bill and report to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and printed; second, by Mr. LAWRENCE, to postpone the whole subject indefinitely.

Mr. CRAIG asked leave to make a motion that the report be printed, but it was objected to.

Mr. CORWIN, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the House at some length in opposition to the bill and the report.

Mr. CUSHMAN followed in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Lawrence.) As that gentleman had propounded an inquiry to the Representatives from New Hampshire, and in expressing his own entire approbation of the report under consideration, Mr. C. would assure him, that, so far as he understood the sentiments of the people of that State, it would meet theirs. They were opposed to levying taxes upon the people for purposes of distribution. They were opposed to taxing for purposes of internal improvement, to be carried out by the aid, and under the auspices of, the General Government. They were opposed also to a continuation of burdens upon the people, for the sake of making the State treasuries the depository of the public revenues. They believed the essential principles of our Government was the faith inculcated by the principles of democracy of Thomas Jefferson. It was true that the opinions of that apostle of democracy had been alluded to as having expressed a favorable opinion in relation to domestic manufactures. Mr. C. accorded to that opinion in a limited sense, and in the sense in which he believed Mr. Jefferson intended to convey it, viz: the domestic manufactures round the fireside. That distinguished statesman had no reference to your Birminghams and Manchesters; for he said, most emphatically, that large cities were public nuisances. Mr. C. continued for some time in defence of the principles of the propositions before the House.

Mr. GALBRAITH moved to postpone the further consideration of the subject till Tuesday next, and that the bill and report be printed.

Mr. MUHLENBERG said it appeared to him that this measure would lead to a discussion which would consume the whole of the balance of the session, without leading to any decision on the subject. Therefore, he moved to lay the bill and accompanying report on the table, and that they be printed.

Mr. CALHOUN of Kentucky asked for a division of the question on laying on the table and printing.

Mr. PATTON asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

Mr. CAMBRELENG appealed to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw the motion. (Cries of order! order!)

Mr. MANN of New York said: Mr. Speaker, as this is a very important question, (loud cries of order! order!) I wish, sir, to make a motion under the rules of the House, and when gentlemen have done calling me to order—(cries of order! order! renewed,) I repeat, sir, continued Mr. M. this being a very important question, I wish a call of the House, and I make that motion.

The CHAIR said the motion was perfectly in order, and would take precedence of the other.

Mr. OWENS called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and were—yeas 105, nays 91.

So the call was ordered, and proceeded in for some time, when it was dispensed with.

Mr. MUHLENBERG observed that, before the question was taken, he wished to say a word in reply to a request of the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, who had asked Mr. M. to withdraw his motion to allow him to reply to the argument of the gentlemen of the minority of that committee who had spoken on the subject. Mr. M. would withdraw his motion, provided the gentlemen would pledge himself to renew it when he concluded his remarks.

Mr. CAMBRELENG did not ask the gentleman to withdraw it, but only to have the title of the bill read.

Mr. OWENS inquired whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania wished to prevent the printing of the bill?

Mr. MUHLENBERG said certainly not; for he had included the printing in his motion.

Mr. SMITH inquired if the question had not been divided?

Mr. CALHOUN withdrew his call for a division of the question.

The CHAIR remarked, that could only be done by the general consent of the House.

Mr. BRIGGS hoped consent would not be withheld.

The CHAIR was about propounding the question to the House, when

Mr. MERCER rose and dissented.

Mr. McKEON inquired if, before being called upon to vote, he might not ask whether it was on a bill to reduce the revenues of the country.

The CHAIR was understood to decide, that the gentleman could not ask it as a right.

Mr. WISE. May I know what I am voting upon, sir? I have not heard the bill read as yet.

The SPEAKER read the title of the bill as follows:

"A bill to reduce the revenues of the United States to the wants of the Government."

Mr. WISE said if there was no objection he wished to hear the bill read, so that he might know if its provisions corresponded with its title.

The bill was then read by the Clerk, and the question was taken on laying the bill and report on the table—yeas 94, nays 119, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, C. Allan, H. Allen, Anthony, Ashley, Bailey, Beaumont, Bell, Black, Bond, Borden, Briggs, Buchanan, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chetwood, Childs, Clark, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Denny, Evans, Everett, Fowler, French, Galbraith, R. Garland, Granger, Grennell, H. Hall, Hard, Harlan, Harper, S. S. Harrison, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Howell, Hubley, Hunt, Ingersoll, Ingham, Jones, Jenifer, Richard M. Johnson, Henry Johnson, Kilgore, Lansing, Laporte, Lawrence, Thomas Lee, Lincoln, Job Mann, Sampson Mason, Maury, McKennan, Mercer, Miller, Milligan, Morris, Muhlenberg, Parker, Dutee J. Pearce, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phelps, Phillips, Pickens, Potts, Reed, Russell, Schenck, William B. Shepard, Slade, Spangler, Sprague, Steele, Storer, Sutherland, Toucey, Turner, Vinton, Wagener, Wardwell, Washington, Elisha Whittlesey, Thomas T. Whittlesey, and Young—94.

NAYS—Messrs. Ash, Barton, Bean, Boon, Bouldin, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Campbell, Carr, Carter, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, N. H. Claiborne, J. F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Dawson, Deberry, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Efner, Elmore, Fairfield, Forester, Fry, Fuller, J. Garland, Gholson, Gillet, Glascock, Graham, Grantland, Grayson, Griffin, Haley, J. Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, A. G. Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Huntington, Huntsman, Jarvis, C. Johnson, J. W. Jones, B. Jones, Klingensmith, Lane, Lawler, J. Lee, L. Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Logan, Love, Loyall, Lyon, A. Mann, Martin, W. Mason, M. Mason, McComas, McKay, McKeon, McKim, McLene, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Patton, F. Pierce, Peyton, Pinckney, Rencher, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, A. H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Smith, Standefer, Taliaferro, Thomas, John Thomson, Waddy Thompson, Turrill, Vanderpoel, Ward, Webster, Weeks, Lewis Williams, Wise, and Yell—119.

So the motion to lay the bill and report on the table was decided in the negative.

On motion of Mr. HALSEY, the two were then ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALSEY moved an adjournment, but withdrew at the request of the Chair.

STATE BANKS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statements of the dividends and surpluses of certain banks; which, on motion of Mr. GARLAND, of Va. was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER, on leave, presented a communication from the Executive of Tennessee, in relation to the Tennessee volunteers; which, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, was referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion of Mr. GARLAND of Virginia, the Select Committee on the subject of the deposit banks, the Treasury Department, &c. had leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. HANNEGAN, on leave, laid the following amendment to the bill for reducing the revenue on the table, which he gave notice of his intention to move at a proper time.

Strike out the second section, and insert the following:

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act, all sales of the public lands shall be governed by such provisions of any existing laws as are not inconsistent with the restrictions and regulations herein after prescribed.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That hereafter no one person shall be permitted to purchase, by entry, or at public auction, more than two sections of any land of the United States; and before making any entry hereafter, or bid at public auction, every applicant to purchase or enter, shall have filed the affidavit of such applicant with the register and receiver of the land district in which the lands sought to be purchased are situate, declaring that said lands are sought to be purchased by said applicant for the use of such applicant, and not in trust or for the benefit of any other person, nor for the purpose of sale or speculation, and that no written or verbal contract has been made by said applicant, to sell, lease, or mortgage said land or any part thereof; that said applicant is at least eighteen years of age, and has not previously purchased, under the provisions of this section, any public land, which, with the quantity then sought to be purchased, would exceed two sections; whereupon, on payment of the purchase money, the receiver, by and with the consent of the register endorsed on said affidavit, shall issue a receipt to the applicant for said purchase money.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That if said applicant shall fail within five years from the date of said receipt, to prove to the register and receiver aforesaid, by the oath of at least two competent and disinterested witnesses, that said applicant has erected a dwelling-house on said land, and used or occupied the same within the said period of five years, no patent shall be issued for said land, and such failure shall operate as a forfeiture of the title to the United States, unless said applicant has died within said period of five years; but on making the proof required by this act within said period of five years as aforesaid, or upon proof within six years from the date of said receipt, of the death of said applicant within said period of five years, to the register and receiver, a patent shall be issued for said land, and any sale, lease, or mortgage, or contract for sale, lease, or mortgage of said land, made before the emanation of the patent, shall be null and void.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That any applicant who shall prove by at least two competent and disinterested witnesses, sworn by and examined before the register and receiver, that said applicant has, before the first day of December, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, actually occupied and cultivated any tract of the public lands never yet offered for sale at public auction, shall be permitted to purchase at the price now authorized by law, said land so occupied and cultivated by said applicant, to an extent not exceeding a quarter section, embracing the improvements of said applicant: Provided, said proof is made to said register and receiver before the commencement of any land sale at which said land is advertised for sale at public auction by the President of the United States: And provided, further, That before making said purchase, said applicant shall also first file with said register and receiver the affidavit required by the fourth section of this act, said applicant declaring also in said affidavit, that said applicant had erected a dwelling house on said land and used or occupied the same before the first of December, eighteen hundred and thirty-six; whereupon, the register shall make his endorsement on said affidavit, and a receipt shall issue as aforesaid, but no patent shall be issued for said land, unless upon proof made within the time and in the manner prescribed in the fourth section of this act, as a prerequisite for the emanation of the patent, and upon failure to make the proof required by said section within the time therein limited, said land shall be forfeited to the United States, and any sale, lease, or mortgage, or contract for the sale, lease, or mortgage of said land, made before the emanation of the patent, shall be null and void.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That any owner of any farm or plantation may enter any adjoining land subject to sale at private entry, not exceeding in the whole one section, and upon payment of the purchase money, obtain the receiver's receipt therefor, but no patent for said land shall issue until three years after the date of said receipt, and any sale, lease, or mortgage, or contract for sale, lease, or mortgage of said land, made before the emanation of the patent, shall be null and void: Provided, also, That said receipt shall not be issued by said receiver, without a previous affidavit made by said applicant before said register or receiver, that said land is sought to be entered for the purpose of enlarging the farm or plantation of said applicant, and not for sale or speculation, the consent of the register to the issuing of said receipt being first endorsed on said affidavit.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That either the register or receiver of the district where the lands sought to be purchased or entered are situate, may take any proof or administer any oath or affirmation required by the provisions of this act, and any person who shall falsely, knowingly, wilfully, and corruptly, swear or affirm under the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of perjury; and any person who shall procure another to swear or affirm falsely, knowingly, wilfully, and corruptly, under the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of subornation of perjury; and on conviction of perjury, or subornation of perjury, under the provisions of this act, before any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished accordingly.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That all the lands of the United States shall hereafter be subject to purchase at public auction or private entry, in subdivisions not less than a quarter-quarter section; that all receipts hereafter issued by any receiver, shall state under what section of this act said receipt is issued; that all lands of the United States sold five years from and after the taking effect of this act, shall be liable to taxation by State authority from the time of the original entry or purchase; that this act shall go into effect on the first day of May next; and that all the proof required by any provision of this act, shall be forwarded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and subjected to his supervision, and who shall not cause a patent to issue in any case, unless he shall be satisfied that the prerequisites in this act prescribed have been complied with substantially.

On motion of Mr. HANNEGAN the House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

FRIDAY, January 13, 1837.

The CHAIR communicated the credentials of the honorable THOMAS CLAYTON, elected, by the Legislature of the State of Delaware, a Senator from that State, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the honorable John M. Clayton.

The CHAIR also communicated a report from the Treasury Department, in answer to the resolution of the Senate calling for a survey of Crow's Shoals, on the coast of New Jersey, to ascertain the practicability of constructing a harbor, stating the inability of the Department to comply with the call, no survey of the Crow's Shoals having been made under the orders of the Department.

Mr. GRUNDY presented the petition of Walker, Caruthers and Co. praying compensation for services rendered to the Post Office Department: referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. LINN presented an "act to incorporate the Miner's Bank of Dubuque," chartered by the Legislative Assembly of Wisconsin Territory; which, under a provision of an act of Congress, of July, 1836, requires the assent of Congress before the same can take effect.

Also, a communication to the Delegate on the subject, which was, with the act, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PRENTISS presented the petition of ———, praying for arrears of pension: referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RUGGLES presented the petition of David Filmore, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORRIS presented the petition of ———, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of sundry citizens of Philadelphia and its vicinity, interested in the coal trade, remonstrating against a repeal or reduction of the duty on imported coal: referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TALMADGE from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which had been referred the petition of Commodore Charles Ridgely, reported a bill for his relief, which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. PRENTISS from the Committee on Claims, to which had been referred the petition of George J. Knight, reported a bill for his relief, which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KING of Alabama, from the Committee on Commerce, to which had been referred the petition of a number of merchants and other citizens of New Orleans on the subject, reported a bill providing for the extension of the limits of the port of that city, which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which had been referred the memorial of Francis Allen, master of the ship Cadmus, reported the bill providing payment for bringing General Lafayette to this country in 1824; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the same Committee moved that it be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John Lamb; which motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. TOMLINSON, the petition and prayers of Lucy Bond and Nathaniel Goodwin, presented at the last session, were again referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. ROBBINS, on leave, introduced a joint resolution, providing that, in the distribution about to be made of the documents printed by Gales and Seaton, a certain number of copies shall be given to each of the judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. GRUNDY gave notice that he would tomorrow ask leave to introduce a bill to prevent abatement in certain cases in the courts of the United States.

The following resolutions were submitted, and lie on the table one day:

By Mr. DAVIS:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to send to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, any communications received by, or correspondence had between the Executive of the United States and General Santa Anna, or any other person claiming to act in behalf of Mexico, respecting the independence and future disposition and civil condition of Texas, if any such communications have been made, or any such correspondence has been had; also such communications, if any, as have been made from any other foreign Government or Governments, touching the same subject.

By Mr. EWING of Illinois:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Chicago by Geneva, the county seat of Kane county, Oregon county, seat of Ogle county, to Galena, in the State of Illinois.

By Mr. CRITTENDEN:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate any report or letter of explanation of the military operations of the army in Florida, under the command of the Governor of that Territory, made by him to that department since the report of the Secretary which accompanied the President's message.

By Mr. ROBBINS:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency of procuring suitable books for the blind.

By Mr. TIPTON:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to the corporation of Michigan city a strip of land along the shore of Lake Michigan, within the limits of the corporation, and situate between the surveys of the lands sold by the United States and the water of the lake.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PRESTON, directing examinations to be made by a board of officers to test the value of the improvements made in fire arms by Hall, Cochrane, and others, was considered and adopted.

The bill for the relief of William East, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading.

The resolution submitted by Mr. BENTON, to expunge from the Journal of the Senate the resolution censuring the conduct of the President for removing the public deposits from the Bank of the United States, was taken up as the unfinished business, and

Mr. DANA concluded his speech in its favor began yesterday.

The debate was further continued by Messrs. PRESTON, MOORE, and CALHOUN, in opposition, and by Messrs. RIVES and NILES, in support of the resolution.

Mr. SOUTHWARD expressed the wish to address the Senate on the subject; but, as it was late in the evening, he hoped the Senate would indulge him with an adjournment; and, after a few observations, concluded with a motion to adjourn, which was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster, White—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Niles, Page, Rives, Robinson, King of Georgia, Sevier, Strange, Talmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, Wright—22.

Mr. MOORE, after a few remarks, moved an adjournment; which was lost—yeas 20, nays 22, as in the preceding vote.

After a few remarks from Mr. CLAY, in which he expressed the wish to address the Senate at large on the whole subject,

Mr. MOORE made another motion for an adjournment, which was successful, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

FRIDAY, January 13, 1837.

THE TARIFF.

The consideration of the bill and report from the Committee of Ways and Means, on the subject of a reduction of the tariff, the title of which was as follows: "A bill to reduce the revenues of the United States to the wants of the Government," being first in order this morning,

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio moved its postponement; in order, he said, to give an opportunity for the committees to report; and with the further design, also, that, as soon as the reports were gone through, to take up the private calendar, and act on such bills only as would not elicit debate.

Mr. JARVIS inquired how they could know before hand what bills would elicit debate?

Mr. BELL had no wish to throw any obstruction in the way of the motion; but he had frequently pointed out to the House the impropriety of departing from the ordinary business of the House; and its inconvenience had been often seriously felt. Unless they pursued the ordinary course of business, general subjects would never be reached. He had no objection to the subject adverted to being postponed, but he preferred its postponement to a day certain; and he suggested Wednesday or Thursday next.

The CHAIR remarked that there was already a motion to postpone pending, made yesterday by a member from Pennsylvania (Mr. Galbraith).

Mr. BELL thought it better to make it the order of the day for some day next week.

Mr. HOLSEY (who was entitled to the floor on the general discussion) said he had no objection to the postponement.

Mr. CAMBRELENG preferred the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee to that of the gentleman from Ohio, for he wished a few days of the early part of next week to be devoted to the consideration of some of the appropriation bills. He added, that it was not the intention of the Committee of Ways and Means hastily to press the consideration of this measure upon the House. He would therefore suggest that it be postponed till Thursday next.

Mr. BELL had no objection to that motion, and would, indeed, prefer that course, so that it be made the special order for the day named.

Mr. LAWRENCE said he would withdraw his motion for the indefinite postponement of the bill and report, [made by him on its first introduction,] and, if in order, substitute a motion to commit them to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The CHAIR said the motion to postpone would take precedence.

Mr. LAWRENCE then withdrew his motion.

The CHAIR. Then the question recurs upon the motion to postpone till Thursday next, and to commit to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BELL had no objection to let it go to the Committee of the Whole, and then let the House or committee take it up when they thought proper.

The CHAIR suggested that the better mode, in that case, would be to withdraw the motion to postpone.

Mr. BELL accordingly withdrew his motion.

The question then recurred upon Mr. GALBRAITH'S motion.

Mr. THOMAS proposed Monday week, in order, as he said, to afford an opportunity of disposing of one of the most important bills before the House—that of the admission of Michigan into the Union, in which the interests of upwards of 200,000 were deeply involved.

Mr. ADAMS hoped the gentleman from Maryland would name some other day than Monday, as that was the only day open for presenting petitions.

Mr. THOMAS substituted Tuesday week.

Mr. JARVIS preferred its taking the usual course, by being committed.

Mr. WARDWELL inquired if the bill required commitment.

The CHAIR had decided that point the other day.

The House refused to postpone till Tuesday week, and also rejected the motion to postpone till Tuesday next.

Mr. McKAY then moved Thursday next.

Mr. BELL thought the best course would be to commit it.

Mr. CAMBRELENG hoped the House would agree to his motion to commit.

The motion of Mr. INGERSOLL was rejected, and the question recurring on Mr. CAMBRELENG'S original motion to commit to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union,

Mr. PARKER moved its commitment to the Committee on Manufactures. Lost.

The bill and report were then committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, without a division.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of H. W. Russel: read twice and committed.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, from the same committee, also reported back the bill "to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States," which had been returned from the Senate with an amendment limiting its operation to the next session of Congress. The committee reported that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in; which was agreed to by the House.

NAVY RATIONS, &c.

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill to establish and regulate the navy rations, to regulate the pay of pursers, and to improve the condition of seamen in the service of the United States; which was read twice, and referred to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BEAL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Silvester Tiffany: read twice and committed.

Mr. BEAL, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Daniel P. Perkins: read twice and committed.

LAND SCRIP.

Mr. DUNLAP, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill to extend the time of issuing scrip certificates on United States Military land warrants; read twice (and at the suggestion of Mr. HARLAN) referred to the same Committee of the Whole having bill 185 under consideration.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a resolution ordering ten thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee of Ways and Means, relating to the reduction of the tariff, to be printed for the use of the House.

The resolution, under the rule, would lie over one day.

Mr. SMITH moved its consideration at that time.

Mr. BELL inquired if it was in order to consider such a resolution then.

The CHAIR replied that it was, as it was a report from a committee.

Mr. LAWRENCE really hoped that objection would be withdrawn, for it was a most important document, and ought to be extensively circulated among the people.

Mr. BELL had made no objection, but only an inquiry on the point of order. No motion being made to consider, the resolution was read.

Mr. MANN of New York suggested a larger number, for that ordered would be inadequate to the wants of the members for their constituents. He moved that 20,000 be printed.

Mr. DENNY. Why, that's enough to poison them!

Mr. CRAIG thought the original number proposed sufficient.

Mr. MANN would meet the views of gentlemen on both sides, and he therefore proposed 15,000. Lost.

Mr. WILLIAMS of N. C. moved to strike out 10,000, and insert 5,000. Lost.

Mr. BRIGGS moved to include the bill with the report, which was agreed to; and, so amended, the resolution was concurred in.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of L. Allen, deceased: read twice and committed.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill increasing the compensation of the public Ministers, of the Consul General, and for other purposes: read twice and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Kentucky, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the benefit of Charles Coffin: read twice and committed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Kentucky, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the benefit of Thomas Collins: read twice and committed.

Mr. FRY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of William Harper of South Carolina: read twice, and committed.

Mr. GARLAND of Virginia, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of General John E. Wool; which, being read twice, Mr. G. moved that it be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana moved its commitment: lost. The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of James Finney, or his assigns: read twice, and committed.

Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Philip Barbour, deceased; which, having been read twice, Mr. G. moved its engrossment for a third reading.

Mr. VINTON moved its commitment to a Committee of the Whole House. He had no doubt the Chair would decide that it must be committed.

The CHAIR, upon referring to the bill, said that it substantially contained an appropriation, and would require to be committed. The bill accordingly took that course.

Mr. MANN of New York moved a suspension of the rule, for the purpose of offering the following resolution; but the motion was disagreed to.

Resolved, That hereafter the daily hour of meeting of this House shall be 11 o'clock, A. M. until otherwise ordered.

On motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, (after a variety of suggestions from Messrs. JARVIS, TALIAFERRO, L. WILLIAMS, and WARDWELL,) the House agreed to take up the private orders by a vote of 104 to 44, excluding those which would elicit debate.

Mr. OWENS made an ineffectual attempt to call up the resolution offered by him some days ago, on the subject of the resignations of officers of the Army of the United States.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Ways and Means, made an unfavorable report in the case of Paul McCormick; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made an unfavorable report in the case of William Baker; which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the Marshal of New York on the subject of buildings for the Courts of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of William Sloane; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report in the case of Daniel Safford; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Kentucky made unfavorable reports in the cases of John B. Briggs, James Duncan, and Isaac Runnells; all which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Daniel H. Crockett; which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. ROBERTSON, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Willard Earl; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MUHLENBERG, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report in the case of the heirs of Captain Reuben Lipscomb; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made an unfavorable report in the cases of Charles Stewart and George Feal, of Florida; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report in the case of Z. Harrison; which was ordered to lie on the table.

PRIVATE ORDERS.

The House then took up the bill for the relief of the representatives of Colonel Anthony Walton White; and, on motion of Mr. MUHLENBERG, it was postponed until Friday next.

The House then took up the bill for the relief of Robert Allison, a lieutenant in the revolutionary war; and, on motion of Mr. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania, was postponed until to-morrow.

The bill for the relief of Henry Lee was then taken up; and, after some explanations by Messrs. PARKER and TALIAFERRO, on motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, was postponed until to-morrow.

The bill for the relief of Daniel Whitney and others was taken up, and postponed until to-morrow.

The bill for the relief of N. and L. Dana & Co. was taken up, and, on motion of Mr. M KAY, was postponed until to-morrow.

The bill for the relief of Philip and Eliphalet Grealey was taken up, and, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, was postponed until to-morrow.

The bill for the relief of Ebenezer Breed, was, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, postponed until to-morrow.

The bill for the relief of David Kilbourne, was, on motion of Mr. WARDWELL, postponed until to-morrow.

The bill for the relief of S. Morris Wain, was, on motion of Mr. D. J. PEARCE, postponed until to-morrow.

The bill allowing rations to Gen. Wool was, on motion of Mr. MANN of New York, postponed until Friday next.

The following bills were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow:

A bill for the relief of John P. Becker.

A bill for the relief of Hannah Hazard.

A bill for the relief of Findley Kellock.

A bill for the relief of Alexander Gibson.

A bill for the relief of Josiah Strang.

A bill for the relief of Philip Voorhes.

A bill for the relief of Wealthy Baker.

A bill granting a pension to Wm. C. Beard.

The bill giving the assent of Congress to the act of the General Assembly of Virginia, entitled an act to incorporate the Alexandria and Falmouth Railroad company, was read a third time and passed.

The bill granting the right of way through lands of the United States, to certain railroad companies in Florida, was taken up, and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time to-morrow.

On motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, the House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. McKEN-NAN in the chair; and after spending some time therein, rose and reported the following bill:

The bill to amend the charter of the Potomac Fire Insurance Company of Georgetown; which was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time to-morrow.

The House then again went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. WARD in the Chair; and after some time spent therein, reported the following bills:

A bill for the relief of William Christy.

A bill for the relief of F. A. Parker.

A bill for the relief of Green Prior, and others.

A bill for the relief of James Brown and John Brown, half-breed Indians.

A bill for the relief of the representatives of Isaac Williams.

A bill for the relief of Charles W. Pickering.

A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Joseph Young.

A bill for the relief of Jerah Fenner.

A bill for the relief of H. & D. Cothral.

A bill for the relief of Peter Harmony.

A bill for the relief of James Keytes.

A bill for the relief of Samuel Sanderson.

All the above bills, excepting the one for the relief of Samuel Sanderson, were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

The bill for the relief of Samuel Saunderson, was, on motion of Mr. WHITTESEY, postponed to Friday next.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the number and compensation of the clerks employed in that Department; which, on motion of Mr. M'KIM, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report on the subject of the insolvent debtors of the United States; which, on motion of Mr. R. M. JOHNSON, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. PINCKNEY,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

SATURDAY, January 14, 1837.

The CHAIR laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, in compliance with the provisions of the "act for the relief of certain insolvent debtors."

Also, a communication from the War Department, in relation to the number of clerks employed in the said department, with the compensation paid to each.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, they were ordered to be printed.

Petitions were presented by Messrs. WRIGHT, HENDRICKS, WALL, KING of Alabama, PRES-TON, and LINN.

Mr. KENT presented a memorial from sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying Congress to extend the jurisdiction of the corporation of Washington over the Potomac bridge and causeway, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TALLMADGE presented a memorial from a number of citizens of Newburg, praying that a survey be made of the Hudson river up to the head of tide water, for the erection of buoys and beacons, &c.

Also, a memorial from another place, on the same subject.

Also, a memorial from the Board of Trade, of the city of New York, praying the creation of a national bank, to be located in that city.

Mr. T. said, he presented this memorial at the request of the committee deputed by the Board of Trade to convey it to Washington. The memorialists stated that in consequence of the derangement existing in the currency and exchanges of the country, it was important that a national bank should be created by Congress. They entertained the opinion that that was the only remedy for the evils growing out of that state of things. They prayed that Congress would create such an institution according to the plan set forth by the President of the United States in his message of 1832. Whilst he (Mr. T.) bore testimony to the high character of the gentlemen composing the Board of Trade, and who had sent the memorial here, he felt it due to himself to say that he did not concur in the views of the memorialists on the subject. His views had been often expressed here and elsewhere, so that it was unnecessary that he should say any thing on the subject.

The memorial was then referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KING of Alabama gave notice, that on Monday, he would ask leave to introduce a bill to incorporate the Howard Institution of this city.

Mr. HENDRICKS offered the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of paying to William Marshall, late Indian agent in Indiana, the amount of certain vouchers and accounts unsettled at the War Department.

Mr. HENDRICKS reported, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, a bill for making a survey, and the construction of certain roads in the Territory of Wisconsin; which was read a first time and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. TIPTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of John H. Hall; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KENT, from the committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill to amend the charter of the Franklin Insurance Company; which was read a first time and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. GRUNDY, in pursuance of notice given, introduced a bill in relation to the abatement of suits in the courts of the United States and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolutions lying on the table, were all taken up, considered, and adopted, except that offered by Mr. Davis, which was ordered to lie on the table for the present.

The joint resolution to supply the Judges of the Supreme Court with copies of Gales and Seaton's reprint of public documents, was read the second time and ordered to a third reading.

The bill for the relief of William East was read a third time and passed.

The bill to amend the act for the better organization of the District Courts for the District of Alabama, was laid on the table.

The following bills were read the second time, and ordered to a third reading:

The bill giving the assent of Congress to the act of the Legislature of Virginia incorporating the Alexandria and Fredericksburg Railroad company;

The bill for the relief of Samuel Miller;

The bill to authorize the Washington county Turnpike company, in the State of Missouri, to locate a road through the public lands;

The bill to authorize the East Florida Railroad company to construct a railroad through the public lands; and

The bill to alter the times of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the fifth circuit holden at Raleigh, North Carolina.

On motion of Mr. KING of Georgia, the special order was postponed, and the Senate took up the bill to limit the sales of the public lands unless to actual settlers, and in limited quantities.

Mr. WALKER (the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands) explained and advocated the bill in a speech of some length; after which,

On motion of Mr. MORRIS, it was postponed to and made the order of the day for Monday next.

The resolution introduced by Mr. BENTON to expunge certain proceedings from the journal of the Senate was then taken up.

The Senate then adjourned—yeas 22, nays 18.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

SATURDAY, Jan. 14, 1837.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

As soon as the reading of the Journal was concluded,

Mr. ADAMS said he wished to make an inquiry. On the third of June last (last session of Congress) a resolution of the House was adopted, upon a report made to that effect by the Committee for the District of Columbia, requiring the Secretary of State to ascertain and report to the House the number of persons imprisoned for debt in the District of Columbia, since the year 1820; the time for which they have been respectively imprisoned; the amounts of their respective debts; expenses attending their imprisonment, &c. Mr. A. now wished to inquire of the Speaker, or of the chairman, or any other member of the Committee for the District, whether any report or response to that resolution had come from the Secretary of State.

Mr. W. B. SHEPARD (chairman of that committee) replied, that the Secretary of State had made a voluminous report on the subject, some time ago, which had been ordered to be printed by the House. The reason it had not yet come from the printer was doubtless owing to its bulk.

The CHAIR was informed by the Clerk of the House that it had been sent to the public printer some time ago, but had not yet been returned.

Mr. ADAMS felt it necessary to state that the reason of his inquiry was that there was an individual then incarcerated for debt when this resolution was adopted last session, who was still in confinement. Although confined for debt at the instance of the Government, Mr. A. firmly believed that he was there only for having been too zealous in the execution of his duty as an officer of the Government, and that the debts against him were far inferior to what was due to him if he had justice dealt to him. Mr. A. was therefore exceedingly anxious to know what that return was, and that there should be some action of the House upon it.

TEXAS.

Mr. PICKENS was desirous of some information from the Committee on Foreign Affairs in relation to the subject of Texas. He wished to inquire of the honorable chairman of that committee (whom he saw in his seat) if he could give the House some information when a report on the subject of the President's special message in relation to Texas might be expected from that committee, or if any report at all was to be made. He hoped the chairman would respond to his inquiry.

Mr. HOWARD (chairman of the committee) said he had no objection at all to reply very cheerfully, so far as he knew, to the question propounded by the gentleman from South Carolina. The committee had been very industriously engaged in the consideration of that subject, and had held repeated meetings upon it. As yet they had come to no conclusion. He could only repeat that the House had lost no time in the investigation, for it had occupied their almost undivided attention since it had been referred to them, to the almost exclusion of every thing else.

Mr. PICKENS. Was he to understand that the committee had come to no conclusion whether they would report or not?

Mr. HOWARD. They had come to no conclusion whatever.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of James Francis: read twice and committed.

Mr. CRAIG, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made unfavorable reports upon the petition of John Sutton, and the petition of Robert Craddock; ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. FRY,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Hannah Gordon, and that the same be laid upon the table, and the report printed.

On motion of Mr. FRY,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Nathaniel Holmes, and that the same be laid upon the table, and the report printed.

On motion of Mr. KLINGENSMITH, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were discharged from the consideration of the cases of Wm. Thompson, Elizabeth Nutter, Robert Tucker and wife, heirs of Benjamin Lawson, James Conant, Silas Winchester, Anne Pierce and others, Elias Snyder, Solomon Prewett, David Russell, and Joseph Hackelbender, and that said cases do lie on the table.

Mr. TURRILL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made unfavorable reports on the petitions of James Wood, representative of Capt. Edward Wood, and heirs of Doctor Miles King; which reports were laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN,

Ordered, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be discharged from the case of Thomas Armington, and that it lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. WARDWELL,

Ordered, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be discharged from the consideration of the petitions of Paul James, Christopher Stockman, and William Walker, and that the same do lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. TOUCEY, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the consideration of the case of Cynthia Ruggles and others, heirs at law of Adin Ruggles, deceased, and that the same do lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. CRAMER, the Committee on Foreign Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the petition of William B. Hodson, and that leave be given them to withdraw the same.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

BY BLAIR & RIVES.

—WEEKLY—

PRICE $1 PER SESSION.

24TH CONG.....2D SESS.

MONDAY, JANUARY 23, 1837.

VOLUME 4.....No. 7.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the case of Samuel Weeks; which report was laid on the table.

Mr. MUHLENBERG, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made unfavorable reports on the cases of the heirs and representatives of Reuben Butler, the heirs of William Camp, and of Joseph Fay alias Facy; which reports were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GRAYSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, made unfavorable reports on the cases of Edward L. Young, Zebulon Wade, and James Wyman, which reports were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LEA, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the cases of Lewis Hatch and Leslie Malone, which reports were ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. LEA, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the case of the heirs of Colonel Thomas Blackburn, and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. JAMES, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Stephen Freeman, and that the same do lie on the table.

Mr. HOWARD said, as the reports from committees had been all gone through, he wished to submit an arrangement in reference to the presentation of petitions on Monday next; for it was obvious that, unless a different mode were adopted, there were petitions now in the possession of members that could never be presented. He therefore asked leave to submit a resolution, proposing to commence calling the States in their reverse order.

Mr. CHILTON ALLAN objected to it, on the ground that he wished the House to dispose of the resolution he had offered on the subject of the public lands.

Mr. DAVIS was much impressed with the necessity and justice of the resolution of the gentleman from Md. It was now several weeks since the new States had had an opportunity of offering resolutions, and two or three weeks since they had been called for petitions. He therefore moved for a suspension of the rule.

Mr. ADAMS hoped the rules would not be suspended, until the House had decided the question of the reception or rejection of the [abolition] petition presented by him on Monday last: the object of the resolution proposed to be introduced was, he presumed, to give the "go-by" to that question.

The motion was not agreed to, Ayes 88 Noes 46 (not two thirds.)

Mr. BOON inquired if it was then in order to move that the House go into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The CHAIR replied in the negative.

Mr. LEWIS called for tellers, remarking that the question had not been understood in his part of the House.

The CHAIR said it was too late, inasmuch as the decision had been announced, and the House had passed to another subject.

Mr. LEWIS intimated that the result of the vote would have been different, if the question had been more generally understood.

Mr. BELL, adverting to the notice he had given the other day to renew his motion from day to day for leave to introduce a bill "to secure the freedom of elections," said he would withhold it, if the House were desirous of disposing of the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, (Mr. Allan;) otherwise, he should press his motion.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The House then resumed the consideration of the following preamble and resolution, submitted on the 4th instant by Mr. C. ALLAN, as modified:

Whereas, Congress has heretofore made donations of the public lands for the purposes of internal improvement and education:

To the State of Ohio,	1,737,838 acres.
Indiana,	1,112,592
Illinois,	1,712,225
Missouri,	1,181,248
Mississippi,	733,244
Alabama,	1,216,450
Louisiana,	920,053
Ter. of Michigan,	599,973
Arkansas,	996,338
Florida,	947,724

In the aggregate amounting to 11,057,685 acres.

And whereas, each of the United States has an equal right to participate in the benefit of the public lands, the common property of the Union; and every wise and good American having agreed in the opinion that the cause of general reduction is indissolubly identified with the cause of general liberty: Therefore, to do equal and exact justice to all the States; to aid in diffusing among the rising generation intelligence enough to comprehend, and spirit enough to defend their rights, and thus to elevate the national character, and insure the perpetuity of our free institutions,

Be it resolved, That a select committee, to consist of one member from each State, be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the justice and expediency of making to each of the thirteen original American States, together with each of the States of Maine, Vermont, Kentucky, and Tennessee, such grants of the public lands for the purposes of education, as will correspond in a just proportion with those heretofore made in favor of the first named States and Territories, and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise. But, to avoid the objection of one State holding land in another, the committee is directed to insert a clause in the bill which they may report, providing that the grants to be made thereby shall be subject to sale under the laws of the General Government now in force, and that the proceeds arising therefrom shall be paid over to the States entitled to the same.

Resolved further, That the said inquiry be extended to all the States.

The following amendment was moved by Mr. VINTON:

"That said committee be further instructed to inquire into the expediency of inserting a clause in said bill to pay said new States the value of the improvements made by them on the public lands, or to pay to them the amount the public lands would have been assessed for taxes, if they had been private."

The question pending was the amendment to the amendment moved by Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi, providing that no grant should interfere with the land of any actual settler.

Mr. LANE concluded his remarks in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. BELL submitted the propriety of bringing this discussion to a close. He thought the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky too narrow for the period in which it was brought forward. It was, he thought, expedient, and had been demonstrated, that broader and fuller action should be determined on by Congress, and a more general proposition than the individual one under consideration.

The time had come when the question in relation to the subject of the public lands should be permanently disposed of. If it was the sense of Congress and the country that the proceeds of the lands should be distributed among the several States, in any proportion or degree, or if an opposite principle prevailed, let it be declared by the House, by a vote which, on its face, should bear a settled permanency.

Again, the scheme of graduating the price of public lands would be found intimately connected with this. It was also very important that that question should be determined, not that he considered it so very important that the public lands should be sold for $1 25 at first, 75 cents after a certain lapse of time, 50 cents some years thereafter, and 25 cents at the end of another period, &c. That was not so important a question as the other, but still it was one that should be settled in one way or the other. The inhabitants of the new States should be emancipated from their present state of uncertainty in regard to this subject; if, in place of that, they should be assured they need no longer rationally expect the relief for which they had been petitioning for years. He considered prompt action of more importance either way, though he himself would give his voice for the graduation system, provided it could settle the question.

There was also another question of very grave importance which ought to be determined, and that was, the right of the first settlers or "pre-emptioners," as they had been termed. Were they to suffer these settlers to become accumulated on their western borders until they became too strong to be controlled by legislative action? That question ought to be settled. Was it not equitable and just that the inhabitants of every State in the Union should know if this was to be the policy of the country, so that they might, by pushing their young families out to the west, in their turn be entitled to this privilege? He was himself not prepared to sustain that practice, but still it was better that the principle should be settled, either by adopting or by abolishing it. Justice to that class of settlers also demanded it, as well as justice and equity to the other inhabitants of the States.

Mr. B. repeated that he regarded the permanent settlement of these questions as of far more importance, in a legal and economical point of view, than how the question should be settled. He was ready to reduce the price of the public lands, according to some ratio of time in which they had been in market, for he believed it to be the only way by which they could get rid of the land in the new, or rather in the old new States; and he thought he could show gentlemen, who had stood out against that system, that it was their interest to do so no longer.

Mr. B. said he was about to move either to postpone this subject, or to lay it upon the table, in order that the States might be called for resolutions, and he would give the members from States behind Tennessee the assurance that he would, himself, waive a resolution he himself was desirous of submitting. Mr. B. then moved that the subject be postponed till this day fortnight, or he would move to lay it on the table, if any gentleman thought it better.

Mr. BOYD, thereupon, made the latter motion.

Mr. C. ALLAN asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Before taking the question, the House passed to the orders of the day.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, embracing a statement of the names of the officers of the navy who, during the year 1836, have received orders for service and asked to be excused; which, on motion of Mr. BRIGGS, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were taken up, read the third time, and passed:

- An act for the relief of John Jeffers.
- An act for the relief of John E. Wool.
- An act for the relief of Wealthy Baker, widow of Isaac Baker, deceased.
- An act for the relief of Philip F. Wolf.
- An act granting a pension to Captain William Beard.
- An act for the relief of John P. Becker.
- An act for the relief of Hannah Hazzard.

An act for the relief of Findley Kellock.
 An act for the relief of Alexander Gibson.
 An act for the relief of Josiah Strong.
 An act to authorize certain railroad companies to construct railroads through the public lands in the Territory of Florida.
 An act to amend the charter of the Potomac Insurance company of Georgetown.
 An act for the relief of William Christy.
 An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Joseph Young, dec'd.
 An act for the relief of Capt. F. A. Barker.
 An act for the relief of Green Prior, heir of Peter Prior.
 An act for the relief of James Brown and John Brown, half-breeds of the Cherokee nation of Indians.
 An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Isaac Williams, dec'd.
 An act for the relief of Charles W. Pickering.
 An act for the relief of Jerah Fenner.
 An act for the relief of Peter Harmony of New York.
 An act for the relief of H. and D. Cotheal of N. York.
 An act for the relief of James Keytes.
 The bill for the relief of Robert Allison was then taken up and rejected.
 The bill for the relief of Henry Lee, was taken up and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.
 The House then took up the bill for the relief of N. and L. Dana and Co., and after a debate, on motion of Mr. BRIGGS, the House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

MONDAY, JANUARY 16, 1837.

The CHAIR laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the 6th instant, and showing the amount of undrawn appropriations remaining in the Treasury on the 1st of January.
 On motion of Mr. HUBBARD the communication was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Petitions were presented by Messrs. WRIGHT, ROBINSON, TALLMADGE, RUGGLES, GRUNDY, TOMLINSON, DAVIS, WHITE, PRENTISS, and KING of Georgia.

Mr. TALLMADGE presented a memorial from the citizens of Waterford, New York, praying that a survey may be made of the ship channel of the Hudson river, from the city of New York, to the head of tide waters and for the erection of buoys and beacons: referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented a petition from Samuel Raub, jun. of Wilkesbarre, Pa. stating that he has made such an improvement in the construction of steam boilers, as to prevent their explosion, and he asks the attention of Congress to his invention: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Also, a memorial from a number of hardware dealers of Philadelphia, asking for the repeal of certain provisions of the tariff act, which bear unequally upon them.

Also, a memorial from a number of individuals interested in the coal trade, similar to those which he had already presented. Both these memorials were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FULTON presented a petition from a number of citizens of Arkansas, praying Congress to pass a law granting a quarter section of land to each settler upon the western frontier of the State of Arkansas, for the purpose of giving security and protection to that frontier, and for the purpose of defence: referred.

Mr. CLAY presented a memorial from R. J. Johns, of New York, praying a repeal of the duty on watches: referred.

Mr. KENT presented a memorial from several insurance companies of Baltimore, praying Congress to pass an act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to discount their certificates issued by the commissioners under the late treaty of indemnity with France: referred.

Mr. SEVIER, from the Committee on Private

Land Claims, to which had been referred the petition of General Nathan Arbuckle, reported a bill for his relief; which was read a first time, and ordered to be printed, together with the report of the committee.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, moved that it be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of James E. Bayard: which motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the same committee, to which had been referred a resolution to inquire into the expediency of establishing a Board of Commissioners to examine claims before their presentation to Congress, reported a "bill to establish a Board of Commissioners to hear and establish claims against the United States;" which was read the first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KING of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to extend the jurisdiction of the District Court of the United States in the State of Arkansas; also, a bill for the relief of the heirs of Francis Caszo; both of which bills were read the first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which had been referred the petition of L. D. Goody, reported a bill for his relief; which was read the first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WALL offered the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to the Senate "the survey of Crow Shoal in the Delaware, to ascertain the practicability of erecting a breakwater or stone pier," made in pursuance of the law of the last session, and the report of the Engineer, and other papers relating to the same.

Mr. PRESTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to make examination into the improvements in fire-arms made by Cochran and others, in accordance with the resolution offered by Mr. P. a few days ago.

Mr. SWIFT offered the following resolution, which was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing the name of William Cooley, an officer of the army of the revolution, on the pension roll.

Mr. RUGGLES offered the following resolutions, which lie on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing a sale of the building in Bath, in the State of Maine, occupied for a custom-house, and an application of the proceeds, with other necessary sums, to the erection of a custom-house at that place.

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Patents be included among the privileged persons entitled to admission on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. KING of Alabama, in pursuance of notice given, introduced a bill to incorporate the Howard Institution of the city of Washington; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The following bills were read the third time and passed:

The bill giving the assent of Congress to the act of the Legislature of Virginia incorporating the Alexandria and Fredericksburg Railroad company;

The bill for the relief of Samuel Miller;

The bill to authorize the Washington county Turnpike company, in the State of Missouri, to locate a road through the public lands;

The bill to authorize the East Florida Railroad company to construct a railroad through the public lands; and

The bill to alter the times of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the fifth circuit holden at Raleigh, North Carolina.

The resolution submitted a few days since by Mr. DAVIS, asking information from the President of the United States in relation to Texas, was taken up, considered, and agreed to.

The hour of one having arrived, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the special order, which was Mr. BAXTON's resolution to expunge from the journal of the Senate the resolution of the 28th March, 1834, censuring the President for having removed the deposits from the Bank of the United States.

Mr. CLAY addressed the Senate at great length against the resolution.

Mr. DANA, in reply to some remarks of Mr. CLAY, said: I rise, sir, only to reply to a single observation from the honorable gentleman from Kentucky. He has been pleased to call the attention of this honorable body to the remarks of a six weeks Senator—to one, no inconsiderable part of the territory of the State he represents is in the possession of a foreign power—and gratuitously advised him to exert his talents in the benevolent act of reclaiming it. Sir, said Mr. D. I admit that I hold my seat on this floor by a temporary appointment; but, sir, I would have that gentleman to know, and distinctly to understand, that whether I hold my seat for six weeks or six years, I am not to be intimidated from a performance of my duty by him, nor any other gentleman. No, sir: the State from which I come, has stamped her disapprobation on this resolution—she has, sir, instructed her Senators to vote for expunging it; and I considered it my duty to express my views on the subject. I have done so; and now, sir, am I to be pointed out publicly as a Senator of six weeks, and be called to an account for not expelling a foreign power? Such remarks were not to be expected from the once popular Mr. Clay. Nor can I conceive of any reason for his doing it, unless it be that he had totally failed of shaking the legal and constitutional positions I had laid down, and thus escaped from them, in a personal attack. But, sir, the gentleman mistakes me. I shall fearlessly and conscientiously discharge the duties and responsibilities I owe to my State. Sir, I regret that a part of its territory is in the possession of a foreign power; but that gentleman is the last who should name it; for if I mistake not, sir, the misfortune is to be traced directly to the measures of that honorable gentleman himself, when he held a different station from the one he now occupies—when, sir, if he held not the throne, he was greater than the throne. But, sir, that day is gone—for ever gone—never to return.

The debate was further continued by Mr. BUCHANAN; and Mr. DANA made a few remarks in reply to what fell from Mr. PRESTON the other day.

Mr. FAYARD next took the floor, and moved an adjournment.

On which motion Mr. BENTON asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, Knight, Moore, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Strange, Sevier, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, White Wright—26. So the motion to adjourn was lost.

Mr. BAYARD then addressed the Senate, and was followed by Messrs. HENDRICKS, STRANGE, and EWING of Ohio.

Mr. HENDRICKS said: That at this late hour it would be out of place to attempt an argument or a speech to the Senate, and such was not his purpose in the few words he had at present to say. It had been his intention, some time ago, to have troubled the Senate with his views somewhat at large on this subject, but he would content himself with saying a very few words, and this was perhaps necessary, owing to the peculiar position he occupied in relation to the proposition before the Senate. It would be recollected that he had voted against the resolution of 1834, so much complained of, and which it was now proposed to expunge from the journals of the Senate. He did so for many of the reasons contained in the preamble now before us. In some of the reasons, however, contained in that preamble he did not concur, and of course could not vote for it. For some of the reasons contained in that preamble he could most cheerfully vote. No member of the Senate more than himself (said Mr. H.) regretted the passage of that resolution; no one could have been more opposed to it. He viewed it as an apple of discord set in motion—a firebrand thrown into the community, calculated to do more harm than any other measure proposed at that eventful session; and he now believed that it had done more harm, in exciting party spirit to its present dangerous height, than any other measure which could have been proposed.

The danger apprehended to the Constitution by this act of expunging, (said Mr. H.) is a natural consequence of the measure of 1834; as much so, as that one act of violence should succeed another. A party in power to-day, and who shall use that power indiscreetly, will be sure to meet with retaliation as soon as the opposite party shall triumph. Hence, violent measures of this kind are sure to succeed each other in the mutations of party power, as effect is to follow cause.

Much, however, as he was opposed to the resolution of 1834, he could not vote to expunge it from the journals. That was a question, in his opinion, having nothing to do with the merits of the original proposition. The question before the Senate was one of power to expunge the journal, no matter what that journal might be. He thought that no such power existed in the Senate or anywhere else; and his oath to support the Constitution of the United States was imperative, and prohibited him from giving any such vote, whatever may have been his opinion of the resolution proposed to be expunged. It was, in his view of the Constitution, as much our duty to keep and preserve the journals of our unconstitutional proceedings, if such there be, as of any other. Our constituents have as much right to know our bad acts as our good ones, because it is for these they will call us to account; and it would be strange doctrine to say that we could shield ourselves from responsibility by expunging them from the journal. The argument, then, of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the resolution of 1834 was unconstitutional, and, therefore, ought to be expunged, did not, in the least, relieve his mind. He understood, too, that this was the basis of the votes of other members of the Senate in favor of expunging. Much as he disapproved of the resolution of '34, he believed that it was constitutional, and that it was such a proposition as the Senate might entertain and adopt. He saw nothing unconstitutional about it. It might, or it might not be considered an abstract proposition. It had indeed remained as a mere declaratory expression of the Senate, but it might have been the basis of legislation. Whether it be true or false was a matter of opinion. Those who voted for it, unquestionably believed its affirmations to be true. They believed that the President had, in relation to the revenue, exercised authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both. They who had voted against it, believed that the authority and power exercised by the President was not in derogation of the constitution and laws, and however much he might have dissented, on the ground of expediency, from that which had been done, he never doubted the constitutional and legal power of the President to do what he did.

It had been said, continued Mr. H. that the resolution of 1834 contains impeachable matter against the President, and that on this account it is not entitled to a place on the journals. He did not think, however, that it contained any impeachable matter. It charged no evil or corrupt intention, which was the essential ingredient of impeachable matter. He referred to the case of Peck's trial before the Senate, and stated that the absence of proof of corrupt intention was the basis of his acquittal by the Senate. This had been the reason of his own vote of acquittal, and this he had good reason to believe was the reason of the votes of acquittal generally.

In voting against expunging, he did not vote to affirm the truth of the resolution of '34. He had already stated the reverse. He believed that the President had the power, whatever he might think of its exercise under the circumstances of that case. But his opinion that the resolution proposed to be expunged was untrue, had nothing to do with his duty in the present case, and could not, in any degree, influence his vote. The Senate had no power to expunge the journals. He could, without the least difficulty, vote upon the journals of the present session a resolution to rescind that of 1834, or to affirm a contrary proposition. This, while it would clearly assert the opinion of the Senate in relation to the proceedings of '34, it would not obliterate the journals of that day, and would have the same effect.

Mr. H. here referred to the Constitution, which says that "Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may, in their opinion, require secrecy," and said that the obligation of his oath to support the Constitution of the United States, made, in his conscience and judgment, his duty on the present occasion clear and imperative. The Constitution required the journal to be kept: he could not vote to destroy, or expunge, or obliterate it. But it is contended, said Mr. H. that the black lines proposed to be drawn around the journal of '34, will not expunge it in reality; that they will take nothing away from it. It will not, however, be contended that writing the words required to be written across the face of it, will not deface and obliterate it.

But suppose these black lines, and this writing upon the journal of the Senate of 1834, takes nothing away from that journal, it will surely not be denied that a material addition will be made to it. The constitution requires the journal to be published, but how was this to be published? Could it be published as the journal of 1834? No. That had been published three years ago. There was in that publication no black lines; no writing across the face of the record. If you publish it as the journal of 1834, you falsify the former publication. You cannot publish it as the journal of 1837, because it is the journal of 1834. There, and there only, are the black lines, and the libellous writing, to be found. No page of the journal of 1837 contains any thing like it. In what shape, or form, or manner then, will you obey the injunction of the Constitution in publishing a journal of these proceedings. The truth is, said Mr. H. the more we look at this thing, the more difficulty we must see in it; the more certainly will it appear to be a proceeding, not contemplated by the Constitution, but incompatible with it. It makes a case which, in the simple publication of the journal, the Constitution will not carry out.

Mr. STRANGE moved to amend the preamble to the resolution, by striking out of the last paragraph of the first page, the words "irregularly, illegally, and unconstitutionally," and inserting in lieu thereof, "was not warranted by the constitution, and was irregular and illegally." In the second page, strike out the word "unconstitutional," and insert the words "unauthorized by the constitution." And in the third page, strike out "violation of the constitution," and insert "not warranted by the constitution."

Mr. BENTON observed that he saw some difference between the words proposed to be inserted, and those already in the preamble; however, he was not, he said, at all tenacious on the subject; and he expressed his willingness to accept the amendments.

The question being then taken on them, they were agreed to.

Mr. WEBSTER rose and briefly addressed the Senate.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the blank in the resolution was filled by inserting therein the words "16th of January."

The question then recurred on agreeing to the resolution, and Mr. BENTON having asked for the yeas and nays, they were ordered.

YEAS.—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Hives, Robinson, Ruggles, Strange, Sevier, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, Wright—24.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Moore, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster, White—19.

So the resolution was agreed to; and,

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the Secretary of the Senate brought to the table the Journal of the Senate of 1834, and, in pursuance of the terms of Mr. B's resolution, expunged from it the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President, in the late Executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the Constitution and laws, but in derogation of both.

Just as the Chair was announcing the fact of the Secretary having executed the order of the Senate, a disturbance took place in the gallery whereupon,

Mr. BENTON rose and said, that he would not ask that the gallery should be cleared, as it would be acting unjustly towards those who had not participated in offering this contempt to the Senate.

The Sergeant-at-Arms was then directed to bring the offender or offenders to the bar. In a few minutes he returned with an individual.

Mr. BENTON moved that he be placed at the bar of the Senate.

Mr. MORRIS asked for the yeas and nays. It seemed to him that there was no use in bringing him to the bar, for the individual was unapprized of the charge against him.

YEAS.—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Niles, Page, Hives, Robinson, Ruggles, Tallmadge, Walker, Wall, and Wright—18.

NAYS.—Messrs. Buchanan, Hendricks, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Sevier, and Tipton—7.

The motion being carried, the offender was accordingly placed at the bar.

Mr. MOORE moved that the Senate adjourn: lost.

Mr. BENTON remarked that, as the individual who was committed for disorderly conduct must, by this time, be pretty well rebuked in his feelings by being exposed to the gaze of the whole Senate, he would move that he be discharged.

Mr. MORRIS said that he considered it a most unjust thing, that a person brought before this body should not be permitted to be heard in his defence. He ought to have an opportunity of explaining, or of denying the charge made against him.

Mr. SEVIER moved an adjournment, which motion did not prevail.

Mr. ROBINSON observed that the individual should have an opportunity given him of being heard, as it was to be presumed that every man was not guilty of the charge made against him, until it should be proven.

Mr. BENTON said if the individual wished to be heard let him go to the table and make his statement. If he did not choose to do so, let him be discharged.

Mr. ROBINSON observed that the individual stood near him, and was ready to answer any interrogatories which the Senate might wish to put to him.

Mr. BENTON said, then he would withdraw his motion to discharge him, so that he might go to the table.

The CHAIR observed, that the Senator had not the power to withdraw it.

Mr. MORRIS remarked, that it was but reasonable the Senate should give him until to-morrow morning, to prepare himself to answer the interrogatories; and, he might too, require the aid of counsel. Mr. M. hoped the Senate would now adjourn.

Mr. BROWN asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. LINN would ask the Senator from Illinois, whether the person in custody was willing at this time to answer any question which might be put to him. If so, then he was the best judge whether he could answer the questions, and therefore it was not necessary that any Senator should become his advocate.

Mr. BENTON said, if the individual wished to purge himself of the contempt, he was willing that he should now answer the interrogatories which the Senate might think proper to propound to him. But he (Mr. B.) was totally against his going to a lawyer for the purpose of learning whether or not he meant to commit a contempt here.

The CHAIR said that parliamentary usage sanctioned the course which the Senate were now taking. It had the right of protecting itself, and there was no occasion for any specific charge to be made against the individual as to the manner in which he had committed a contempt.

In answer to a question from Mr. LINN, Mr. ROBINSON replied that the individual wished to be heard, but he did not say that he was prepared to answer questions.

Mr. MORRIS renewed his motion that the person in custody be forthwith discharged, and asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, White, Wright—23.

NAY—Mr. Wall.

[The person in custody here called out that he wished to be heard.]

The CHAIR told him to begone; and ordered the Sergeant-at-Arms to discharge him forthwith.

The Senate then adjourned, at ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

MONDAY, JANUARY 16, 1837.

The first business in order, (this being the day assigned, under the rules, for the presentation of petitions and memorials,) was the consideration of a memorial, presented on Monday last, by Mr. J. Q. ADAMS, from certain citizens of Dover, Massachusetts, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

The question pending was the objection raised by Mr. LAWLER to the reception of the petition, and

Mr. BYNUM being entitled to the floor, yielded it to

Mr. HOWARD, who stated his object in having made the request of the gentleman, was to renew the effort made by him on Saturday last, to give a chance to more than one half the States of this Union to present petitions, of which they had been deprived for some weeks. He, therefore, moved a suspension of the rule, in order to introduce a resolution, that upon this day the Speaker call the States for petitions in their reverse order. The only effect of this would be to enable the States who had not been called upon for two or three weeks to get in their petitions, and the House would then come round to the point where they then were [as stated above].

Mr. BYNUM would yield the floor with great pleasure for that object, on the understanding that he did not lose his right to the floor when the subject again came up.

Mr. ADAMS hoped the rules would not be suspended. He begged the House to recollect that this state of things—

Mr. W. B. SHEPARD rose to order. The motion to suspend was not debatable, and he hoped the Chair would enforce the rule.

The CHAIR accordingly did so.

Mr. ADAMS thereupon asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and were—yeas 123, nays 58.

So the rules were suspended, and the resolution being received and read,

Mr. ADAMS asked for the yeas and nays on its adoption, but the House refused to order them, and the question being taken by tellers, was decided in the affirmative—yeas 125, nays 33.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Mr. JONES of Wisconsin.

[Mr. JONES presented the petition of the citizens of Michigan City, in the State of Indiana, who pray for the construction of a harbor at the mouth of Root river, in Milwaukee county, Wisconsin Territory. Also, a petition of citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, who pray for the same improvement. Also, petitions of the citizens of the several cities of Albany, New York, and Oswego, praying for the construction of a harbor at the mouth of Root river, in Racine county, Michigan Territory. Also, the petitions of the citizens of Oswego, New York, and Sandusky City, Ohio, who pray for the same object. Also, the petition of the citizens of Pike, who pray for the construction of a harbor at the mouth of Pike river, in Racine county, Wisconsin Territory. Also, a bill and report of the Committee of Private Land Claims, on the petition of the heirs of John Campbell. Also, a communication from the Commissioner on Indian Affairs, transmitting certain information from the Governor of Wisconsin, in relation to the subject of holding treaties with the Sioux Indians of Wisconsin, for the purchase of a part of their country: referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.]

Mr. WHITE of Florida.

Mr. YELL of Arkansas.

[Mr. YELL presented a memorial from the Legislature of Arkansas, praying the passage of a law to authorize the location of a part of the seventy-two sections granted to the Territory of Arkansas for colleges and academies, and to be permitted to re-locate them on any public lands not otherwise appropriated: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.]

Memorial, praying the appointment of Commissioners to review and mark out a road; a continuation of the Cumberland road from St. Louis, Missouri, to Fulton, on Red river, Ohio, Little Rock, via the seat of Government in Arkansas.

Memorial, praying an appropriation to complete the road from Helena to the mouth of Cache, where it intersects the Memphis and Little Rock roads.

Memorial, praying an additional appropriation to complete the Memphis and Little Rock roads.

Memorial, praying an additional appropriation to complete and repair the military road from Little Rock to Fort Gibson, via Fort Smith, &c. referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

And, also, the petition of Lewis Evans, for remuneration for property taken by a party of the Cherokee Indians: referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.]

Mr. ASHLEY of Missouri.

[Mr. ASHLEY presented the petition of sundry citizens of Clay county, asking the establishment of a Superintendency of Indian Affairs on the western frontier: petition of Messrs. Duncan and Taylor, for remuneration for goods illegally seized by the United States: petition of Catharine Lowe: petition of Lewis Berthons: petition of Thomas Wasson.]

Messrs. LEWIS, CHAPMAN, and LYON, of Alabama.

[Mr. LEWIS presented the memorial of the General Assembly of Alabama, asking indemnity for spoils committed by Creek Indians, on the property of the citizens of Alabama, during the last year; referred to the Committee of Claims: memorial of certain citizens of Alabama on the same subject; referred to the Committee of Claims: petition of George Whitman, asking the right to import the iron of certain iron steamboats, free of duty; referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. Mr. L. also presented several other petitions of a private nature.]

Messrs. MAY, CASEY, and REYNOLDS, of Illinois.

[Mr. MAY presented several petitions from a number of the inhabitants of the State of Illinois and of Wisconsin Territory, praying that mail route No 3199, may be extended from George McClure's, on Fox river, to the mouth of the Pickatonica, on Rock river; also, petitions from the inhabitants of Schuyler and Adams counties, Illinois, praying that mail routes be established as follows, to wit: From Meredosia to Warsaw; from Quincy to Peoria, and from thence to Burlington, in Wisconsin Territory; also, the petition of John Newman, praying that the right of pre-emption to a certain tract of land be granted him for reasons therein set forth; also, a petition from a number of citizens of Illinois, praying that an appropriation be made for a survey of the great western lakes.]

[Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois presented the petition and papers of General Hargrave of Illinois, praying a pension for the time after he became disabled by the wound until he received pension; also the papers and petition of Major M. Hall of Washington county, Illinois, praying compensation for property lost in the battle of 1815 at New Orleans; also the petitions of sundry citizens of Randolph and Jackson counties, Illinois, praying for in exchange of section sixteen, in township seven south, range five west, in the Kaskaskia land district in that State; and also the petition of Mrs. Ann Temple Green, praying for the arrearages of pay due her father, the late Commodore Nicholson for naval services performed by him. All the foregoing petitions and documents were, on motion of Mr. R. referred to the appropriate committees.]

Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi.

Messrs. LANE and DAVIS of Indiana.

[Mr. LANE presented the memorial of James W. Borchon, on the subject of French spoliations prior to 1800: referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.]

[Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of Lewis Wernag & Co. Of the members of the Indiana Legislature, praying for a stage route from Orleans to Terre Haute; also, the petition of Mathew Stewart.]

Messrs. GARLAND and JOHNSON of Louisiana.

Messrs. BOND, VINTON, THOMSON, CORWIN, KENNON, CRANE, JONES, STORER, McLENE, WEBSTER, WHITTLESEY, and HAMMER of Ohio.

[Mr. THOMSON of Ohio presented a petition from the President and Trustees of the North Union School Association of Carroll county, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.]

Also, two petitions, praying for a mail route from Wellsville, in Columbiana county, to Bolivar, in Starke county, in the same State; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a letter from the Third Auditor, establishing the claim of Wm. B. Irish; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.]

[Mr. JONES of Ohio, presented a memorial from the managers of the Colonization Society of Fredericksburg, Wayne county, Ohio, asking the aid of Congress in carrying into effect the objects of said society; which memorial he moved to refer to the Committee for the District of Columbia.]

Mr. PINCKNEY moved that the memorial be laid on the table.

Mr. ADAMS called for its reading, and it was accordingly read by the Clerk.

Mr. PINCKNEY then called for the yeas and nays on his motion to lay on the table, which were ordered, and were—yeas 130, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. C. Allan, Anthony, Ash, Ashley, Barton, Beale, Bean, Beaumont, Bell, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Bunch, John Calhoun, Cambreleng, Campbell, Carr, Carter, Casey, Chaney, Chatwood, N. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Connor, Craig, Cushman, Deberry, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Efner, Elmore, Fairfield, Farlin, Forester, French, Fry, Fuller, James Garland, Rice Garland, Gholson, Graham, Grantland, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Harlan, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Howell, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Jarvis, Jenifer, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, John W. Jones, Kennon, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Luke Lee, Leonard, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, Abijah Mann, Martin, Moses Mason, May, McKay, McKeon, McKim, McLene, Miller, Moore, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Page, Parks, Patterson, Franklin Pierce, Pettigrew, Peyton, Phelps, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Spangler, Standefer, Steele, Taliaferro, Taylor, Turner, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Washington, Weeks, White, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, Yell, and Young—130.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Bailey, Bond, Borden, Briggs, Childs, Clark, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Deany, Evans, Everett, Grennell, Hardin, Harper, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Hunt, Ingersoll, Jones, B. Jones, Lawrence, Lay, Lincoln, Love, Job Mann, Sampson Mason, McCarty, McKennan, Miligan, Parker, Dutee J. Pearce, Pearson

Phillips, Potts, Reed, Russell, Slade, Sloane, Sprague, Storer, John Thomson, Wardwell, Webster, and Elsiea Whittlesey—49.

So the memorial was laid on the table.]

[Mr. WEBSTER presented several petitions from the citizens of Miami county, praying the removal of the land office from Lima to Defiance.]

[Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio stated to the House that he had in his possession several petitions on the subject of the abolition of slavery, but as the House had suspended the rules on to-day for the purpose of getting in other petitions which would not occasion debate, he should, for the present, withhold the petitions in his possession; with the hope, however, that, at the time he should present them, he would have the privilege of giving his views as to the course which he thought these memorials ought to take.]

Messrs. the SPEAKER, FORESTER, and CARTER, of Tennessee.

[The SPEAKER presented a memorial from the Grand Jury of Washington county, D. C. remonstrating against the efforts of certain societies in regard to the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, and praying that these petitions be not received by Congress.]

The reading of the paper was called for by several members, and was accordingly read by the Clerk.

Mr. PINCKNEY moved to lay the memorial on the table.

Mr. GRAHAM called for the yeas and nays on this motion, which were not ordered; and the motion to lay on the table was agreed to without a division.

Mr. JENIFER and Mr. WISE expressed a wish that the memorial be ordered to be printed; but the Chair decided, under the rule, that the motion to lay on the table was not amendatory.]

Messrs. ALLAN, BOYD, HAWES, JOHNSON and FRENCH of Kentucky.

[Mr. BOYD presented a petition, praying for an increase of the pension of Nathaniel Walcott.]

A petition for a post route from Smithland by the way of Eddyville in Ky. to Nashville in Tennessee.

A petition for post route from Eddyville by way of Livingston Forge, to Salem in Kentucky.

A resolution instructing the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Fort Jessup in Louisiana, to Gaines's Ferry on the Sabine river.]

Messrs. HAYNES, and CLEVELAND, of Georgia.

Messrs. PINCKNEY and RICHARDSON of South Carolina.

[Mr. PINCKNEY presented the memorial of certain shipowners, shipmasters, and pilots, for a harbor light at the port of Mount Desert, in the State of Maine: referred to the Committee on Commerce.]

Also, the petition of Benjamin F. Hard, praying for compensation for extra services in the transportation of the mail: referred to the Committee of the Whole to which a resolution submitted by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, on the same subject, had previously been committed.

Also, on motion of Mr. PINCKNEY, the memorial of Mrs. Frances Moore, (on file in the department of the clerk,) praying remuneration for the revolutionary services of her husband, was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.]

Messrs. W. B. SHEPARD, GRAHAM and MONTGOMERY, of North Carolina.

Messrs. WISE, JONES, GARLAND, LOYALL, LUCAS, DROMGOOLE, MORGAN, BEALE, JOHNSON and TALIAFERRO, of Virginia.

Messrs. JENIFER, WASHINGTON, HOWARD, McKIM and TURNER, of Maryland.

Messrs. MUHLBERG, ANTHONY, HEISTER, SUTHERLAND, BUCHANAN, FRY, ASH, WAGENER, HARRISON, GALBRAITH, MANN, KLINGENSMITH, INGERSOLL, HAUPER, DENNY and POTTS, of Pennsylvania.

[Mr. ANTHONY of Pennsylvania, presented the petitions of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, asking an appropriation for the purpose of rendering the Alleghany river navigable for steam vessels, between Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and Olean, New York.]

[Mr. HEISTER presented sundry memorials from his District praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, which he moved to have referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.]

[Mr. W. SHEPARD objected to and raised the question of their reception, and moved to postpone its consideration till Monday next, intimating his intention to address the House thereon when it would not interfere with his colleague (Mr. Bynum,) who had the floor on the same subject under another memorial to the same effect.]

Mr. DAVIS moved to lay the preliminary motion of reception on the table: agreed to—ayes 89, noes 37.]

[Mr. HARRISON of Penn. presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for aid to improve the navigation of the river Alleghany from Pittsburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, to Olean, in the State of New York.]

[Mr. GALBRAITH presented several memorials praying for an appropriation to improve the harbor at the mouth of Twenty Mile creek, on Lake Erie, and moved to refer them to the Committee on Commerce.]

Also sundry memorials praying for an appropriation to improve the Alleghany river from Pittsburg to Olean.

Also, another memorial of similar import with the last, which Mr. Galbraith said contained a very full and brief statement of the facts connected with the memorial, and therefore asked that it may be printed; agreed to, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.]

[Mr. FAY presented the petition of Peter P. Dawson, of Juniata county, Pa. praying a pension for services in the revolutionary war: referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

Mr. FAY said, that he had a petition from sundry citizens of Upper Providence, Pa. praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia. Mr. F. said he did not wish to interrupt the proceedings of the House at this time, but that at some future and more auspicious period he should present the same, of which he now gave notice.]

[Mr. WAGENER presented a memorial of the citizens of Mauch Chunk and its vicinity, in Pennsylvania, which sets forth that there are a large number of workmen employed in mining coal; and complains that the necessities of life, viz: woolen and cotton goods, salt, sugar, &c. are so very high, that, unless the same reductions are made upon those articles as upon coal, their interests will be most severely affected. They also ask that the duty on hardware and machinery of all kinds may be modified, in order that they may have the same facilities for producing coal as are possessed by foreign competitors, and to have the right of employing foreign or domestic shipping coastwise, for the transportation of their products. In a word, they claim an equal reduction upon all the other necessary articles of consumption as upon coal.]

[Mr. DENNY, of Pa. presented the application of Chr. Doughty, for an increase of his pension: referred to the Committee on Pensions. Also,

The memorial of the Pittsburg and Allegheny Orphan Asylum, asking Congress for the grant of a lot of ground in Pittsburg: referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Also,

Sundry memorials, signed by 675 ladies of Pittsburg, and 381 citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia.]

Mr. JOHNSON, of La. objected to the reception of the memorials; and, on motion of

Mr. PARKS, that preliminary motion was laid on the table.]

[Mr. MANN presented the petition of Valentine Gruber, of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, praying for arrears of pension; which, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

Also, the petition of William Hall, of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, praying that a pension might be granted him; which, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

Messrs. PARKER and CHETWOOD of New Jersey

Messrs. GRANGER, MANN, M'KEON, WARDWELL, HARD, FAIRLAN, CAMBRELENG, CRAMER, BOVEE, TURRILL, LEONARD, DOUBLEDAY, CHILDS, GIDEON LEE, LOVE, HUNT, TAYLOR, REYNOLDS, and LEY, of New York.

[Mr. MANN of New York presented the petition of Archibald C. Cray, an invalid pensioner, praying for the passage of a law to allow certain invalid pensioners to commute their pensions for certain grants of lands by the United States. Also the petition of Catharine Rollins and Conrad Widrig, praying revolutionary pensions. Also in behalf of his colleague (Mr. Gillet) of certain citizens of Staten Island, praying a repeal of the duty upon fishing twine; and of inhabitants of Milwaukee, and of John McRhea, and Henry Wakefield.]

[Mr. LEONARD presented the petition of Thomas Look, a revolutionary soldier, praying to be placed upon the roll of revolutionary pensioners.]

[Mr. McKEON presented the petition of citizens of New York and New Jersey, for a light-house on Robbins's reef; also the inhabitants of the city of New York, praying for a repeal of the duty on coal.]

[Mr. WARDWELL presented memorials for appropriations to improve the harbors of Big Sandy Creek and Sacket's Harbor, on Lake Ontario.]

Mr. JAMES of Vermont.

Messrs. TOUCHEY, INGHAM and HALEY, of Connecticut.

[Mr. INGHAM presented a memorial of sundry inhabitants of the State of Connecticut, asking for an appropriation to improve the harbor of Guilford in that State: referred to the Committee on Commerce.]

[Mr. HALEY presented the petition of Amy Smith, praying for a pension, which her late husband, Job T. Smith, was entitled to, under the act of 1813.]

Also, the petition of sundry inhabitants of Stonington and Groton, praying for an appropriation for the erection of buoys, to be placed at or near the mouth of Mystic river, in the State of Connecticut.]

Mr. H. also presented two petitions, one from upwards of one hundred citizens of New London, the other from Elias Sharpe and others, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.]

Mr. PINCKNEY objected to the reception of one, and Mr. COSMAN to that of the other, and both these preliminary motions were, on motion of Mr. PARKS, severally laid on the table.]

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island.

Messrs. LAWRENCE, CUSHING, REED, and CALHOUN of Mass.

[Mr. REED presented six memorials praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.]

Mr. PINCKNEY objected to their reception, and on motion of Mr. MANN of New York, the preliminary motion was laid on the table.]

[Mr. CALHOUN also presented a similar petition, which, on motion of the same gentleman, was disposed of in the same manner.]

On motion of Mr. GRAVES,

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill authorizing Captain James Hunter of Kentucky to draw his pension from the time he might, under an act of 1812, have done so, up to the time of the commencement of his drawing it.

On motion of Mr. GRAVES,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from New Castle, Henry county, Kentucky, to Wallaeville, in said county.]

On motion of Mr. FRENCH,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a mail route from the Little Sandy Saline, in Greenup county, Kentucky, via, Charles N. Lewis's and Big Blair, to Paintsville, in Floyd county.

On motion of Mr. BOYD,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a mail route leading from Fort Jesup, in Louisiana, and to the Sabine, at Gaines's Ferry.

On motion of Mr. DAWSON,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to investigate and inquire into the expediency of establishing a mail route from the court-house in Walker county, Georgia, to Rossville, in the same county; also into the expediency of establishing a mail route from Milledgeville, Georgia, by the way of Monticello, McDonough, Fayetteville, Campbelltown, Villa Rica, Paulding court house, Rome, Chattahoochee, to Mufreesboro, in Tennessee.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of Kentucky,

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of passing a law for the benefit of Joshua Buster, brigadier general of the 16th brigade Tennessee militia, re-funding and repaying to him the amount he advanced and expended in raising two companies, under the Governor's proclamation, of Kentucky, in the month of July last, to raise a thousand troops in the State of Kentucky, to defend the southwestern frontier of the United States.

On motion of Mr. MAEN of Pennsylvania,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting a pension to Frederick Hill, of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, a soldier of the revolutionary war.

On motion of Mr. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania,

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, to consider the propriety of allowing a pension to Sarah Pemberton, widow of John Pemberton, deceased, a soldier of the revolutionary war.

On motion of Mr. MANN of New York,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing the name of Conrad Widrig, a revolutionary soldier, on the pension roll of the United States.

On motion of Mr. CHAPIN,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of Port Jay, in the county of Wayne, and State of New York.

On motion of Mr. GIDEON LEE,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so far extending the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States as to include therein all cases of robbery, larceny, and theft, on property driven on shore (or illegally taken) from vessels, or wrecks of vessels, on the coasts of the United States whether above high water mark or below that line.

On motion of Mr. PARKER,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of restoring to the pension list John Carhart and Joseph Walling of New Jersey, the payment of whose pensions has been suspended.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to the heirs of Henry Moose the pension which may have been due to him at the time of his death.

On motion of Mr. CRAIG,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 17, 1837.

The Journal of yesterday was amended, on motion of Mr. WHITE, so as to show that he voted against bringing the individual (who was last evening brought before the Senate) to the bar.

The CHAIR communicated a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate on the 29th ultimo, exhibiting an account of the exports and imports, and distinguishing between the foreign and domestic, &c. which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

A message was received from the President of the United States, calling the attention of Congress to the necessity of making a revision of the statute of limitations in the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, it was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

A number of bills from the House were taken up, read twice and referred.

Petitions were presented by Messrs. LINN, EWING of Ohio, WHITE, RIVES, BUCHANAN, DAVIS, and TIPTON.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to create the office of Surveyor of Public Lands in the Territory of Wisconsin; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KENT presented a paper from the Grand Jury of Washington county, in this District, couched in strong, respectful and feeling language, protesting against the interference of citizens from distant States in the local concerns of this District, more especially the abolition of slavery. Mr. K. bore testimony to the intelligence and respectability of the character of the signers of the protest, and concurred with them in deprecating the interference complained of; and expressed his opinion against the power of Congress to interfere with their property in any respect but for public purposes. Mr. K. considered there was a wide difference between the citizens of this District making known to Congress their wishes and feelings in relation to their own local concerns. Congress being their only Legislature, and that of the citizens of a distant State, who had their own local Legislature to address, and, notwithstanding, claimed the right to call upon Congress to permit their opinions to have an influence in regulating the affairs of this District, and those of an entirely local character. It was upon those grounds he objected to the interference complained of.

Mr. K. moved that the bill be laid on the table, and printed.

Mr. MORRIS asked for the yeas and nays on printing; which were not ordered.

Mr. HUBBARD suggested to the Senator from Maryland the printing of an extra number of copies for the purpose of distribution.

A debate then ensued on printing an extra number, in which Messrs. CALHOUN, HUBBARD, WALL, NILES, BROWN, KING of Alabama, MORRIS, KENT, and LINN, participated.

The question was then taken on printing the usual number.

Mr. MORRIS renewed his motion for the yeas and nays; which were ordered:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Illinois, Ewing of Ohio, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Knight, Kent, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robinson, Robbins, Sevier, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tipton, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, White, and Wright—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Linn, Niles, Page, Ruggles, and Strange—5.

So the usual number was ordered, and the memorial laid upon the table.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill in addition to an act for the relief of Walter Loomis and Abel Gay; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. TIPTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of David Stone; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. PRESTON, from the joint committee on the library, reported the following joint resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the Joint Committee on the Library be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to contract for and purchase, at the sum of thirty thousand dollars, the manuscripts of the late Mr.

Madison, referred to in a letter from Mrs. Madison to the President of the United States, dated the 15th of November, 1836, and communicated in his message of the 6th of December, 1836, conceding to Mrs. Madison the right to use copies of the said manuscripts in foreign countries.

Mr. ROBINSON from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported the following joint resolution:

A resolution to enable the Postmaster General more readily to change the commencement of the contract year in the Post Office Department.

Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, that the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby authorized and empowered to let the contracts for the transportation of the mails in those sections of the United States where they expire on the 31st December, 1837, 1838 and 1839, respectively, for four years and six months, so as to cause them to terminate on the 30th day of June, 1842, 1843 and 1844, to the end that the contract may commence on the first day of July, instead of the first day of January.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the same committee, reported a bill to provide for the transportation of the mail on railroads; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WHITE offered the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with one copy of the documents compiled and printed by Gates and Seaton.

Mr. KING of Alabama offered the following resolution, which was considered and adopted.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for removing the obstacles at Dog river bar, so as to enable all vessels drawing twelve feet water to get up to the city of Mobile.

Mr. RIVES offered the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the claim of the heirs of Doctor Thomas Carter, a surgeon in the war of the revolution, and the expediency of making provision by law for the payment thereof.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the special order, which was the bill to limit the sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers, in limited quantities.

Mr. MORRIS said he wished to be heard on the subject, but that he would rather it should be postponed for the present.

Mr. EWING of Ohio then moved that the further consideration of the bill be postponed to Friday next.

Mr. WALKER asked for the yeas and nays on that motion, and they were ordered—yeas 14, nays 18.

Mr. MORRIS then moved to add the following (to come in after the fourth line) as an amendment to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands:

"That all lands which have been offered for sale for more than ten years at seventy-five cents, and all lands that have been more than five years and less than ten, one dollar; and all other lands at one dollar and seventy-five cents per acre."

Mr. WALKER expressed his approbation of the amendment, and hoped it would prevail.

After a few words from Mr. CLAY and Mr. MOORE,

Mr. BLACK asked the yeas and nays on the amendment, which were ordered—yeas 19, nays 18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRIS moved to amend the section, but before the amendment was submitted,

On motion of Mr. BUCHANAN, the further consideration of the bill was postponed till tomorrow.

The Senate then, on motion of Mr. BUCHANAN, went into the consideration of Executive business, and when the doors were opened, Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 17, 1837.

Mr. VANDERPOEL moved a suspension of the rule, for the purpose of offering a resolution, granting the use of the Hall of the House of Representatives on Friday evening next, to the American Historical Society, for the delivery of its annual address, which was agreed to, ayes 100, noes not counted, and the resolution was agreed to without a division.

EXPUNGING THE JOURNAL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD asked a similar indulgence of the House, for the purpose of submitting a resolution which he deemed to be of very great importance. He would ask that it be read by the Clerk.

Mr. JARVIS objected to the reading.

Mr. UNDERWOOD can I not read it, sir?

The CHAIR said the gentleman could only make a brief statement of the object of his motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The reading of the resolution itself would be the shortest statement he could make.

Mr. ADAMS hoped that the gentleman would be permitted to read his resolution, as a "brief statement," and that hereafter the same indulgence would be extended to petitions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD made a motion to suspend the rule, and inquired of the Chair if it were not in order to state the object he had in view.

The CHAIR said it was usual, by the courtesy of the House in such cases, to permit a very brief statement to be made, but (adverting to the rule) it was not in order for the gentleman to read a paper or make a speech, without the leave of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will state my object very briefly. It is to submit a series of resolutions declaring the sense of this House that it is not compatible with the Constitution of the United States to change, alter, expunge, mutilate, or destroy the journals of either house of Congress; that the preservation of the journals of either House is an object of national importance, and a fit subject for national legislation; that after these journals had been faithfully kept and preserved—

Mr. CUSHMAN called the gentleman to order, on the ground that he was proceeding beyond the limits of a brief statement.

The CHAIR reminded the gentleman that he must confine himself to a mere statement of the object of his motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD had not stated the whole of his object yet. Mr. U. was again proceeding, when

The CHAIR again reminded him that he must not debate the question, but make his motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, sir, my motion is to suspend the rules of the House to allow me to offer the following resolution. Can I read it, sir?

The CHAIR thinks not, since objection has been made to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I cannot state my object so well as by reading it.

The CHAIR remarked that the reading by the Clerk had been expressly objected to, and it would be an evasion of the rule prescribing that no paper should be read without consent, if the gentleman could himself read that which had been objected to the Clerk doing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD would then, as briefly as he could, state his object. It was—

Mr. CUSHMAN said it was entirely irregular, and had been repeatedly objected to.

The CHAIR. The gentleman will make his motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well then I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of submitting to the consideration of the House these resolutions now before me.

The CHAIR. The motion is in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, can I state sir, in substance, the contents of these resolutions?

The CHAIR again repeated his decision.

Mr. BOYD expressed a hope that the paper might be read for the information of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I just want to state their object and I will do it briefly. The first—

Mr. JARVIS said, rather than let the gentleman get further out of order, he would withdraw his objection to the reading.

The resolutions were then read, as follows:

Resolved, by the House of Representatives, that the third clause of the fifth section of the first article of the Constitution, in the following words, to wit: 'Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the members of either House, on any question, shall, at the desire of one fifth of those present, be entered on the journal,' confers no power whatever on either House of Congress, at a subsequent session, to change, alter, deface, expunge, or destroy its journal or any part thereof, when the same has been regularly and faithfully kept during a previous session, and duly published.

*Resolved, further, That the journals of both Houses of Congress, kept and published as aforesaid, after the adjournment, sine die, become national archives, and that all attempts and acts of either House separately, or of both, by joint resolution, to change, alter, deface, expunge or destroy either journal, or any part thereof, are violations of the Constitution.*

Resolved. That the preservation of the national archives from mutilation, disfiguration and destruction, is a fit subject of legislation.

*Therefore, Resolved. That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to report a bill providing for the deposit of the original journals of each House, after their adjournment, sine die, in the office of the Secretary of State; and for the punishment of every and all persons, their aiders and abettors, who shall alter, change, deface, expunge, or destroy any part of either journal after such adjournment.*

Objections were raised in all parts of the hall.

Mr. MORGAN asked for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend, which were ordered, and were—yeas 77, nays 118, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Abbot, Allen, Heman Allen, Ashley, Bailey, Bond, Briggs, William B. Calhoun, Carter, John Chambers, Chetwood, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Clark, Corwin, Crane, Cushing, Dawson, Deberry, Denny, Elmore, Evans, Everett, Granger, Graves, Grayson, Greenell, Griffin, Hiland Hall, Hard, Hardin, Harlan, Harper, Hazeltine, Heister, Hoar, Howell, Ingersoll, James, Henry Johnson, Lawrence, Lay, Luke Lea, Lewis, Lincoln, Sampson Mason, Maury, McKennan, Mercer, Milligan, Patton, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Peyton, Phillips, Pickens, Potts, Rencher, Robertson, Russell, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Shepperd, Sloane, Spangler, Standefer, Steele, Taliaferro, Waddy Thompson, Underwood, Vinton, Washington, White, Eliza Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrard Williams, Wise, and Young—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Ash, Barton, Bean, Besumont, Black, Bockee, Boon, Bouldin, Bowce, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Doubleday, Efner, Fairfield, Farlin, French, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, James Garland, Gholson, Giller, Glascock, Graham, Grantland, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Benjamin Jones, Kenner, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, Gordon Lee, Joshua Lee, Leonard, Logan, Loyell, Lucas, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Martin, William Mason, Moses Mason, May, McKay, McKee, McKim, McLane, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Mullenberg, Owens, Page, Parker, Parks, Patterson, Dutee J. Pearce, Finckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Rogers, Seymour, Sheld, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Sprague, Sutherland, Thomas, John Thompson, Toucey, Turner, Turill, Van derpool, Wagener, Wardwell, Webster, Weeks, Thomas T. Whittlesey, and Yell—118.

So the House refused to suspend the rule.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, from the Committee of Claims, reported Senate bill for the relief of William Earl, without amendment; which was committed.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported an amendment to the Civil List Bill, which was committed.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, under instructions from the Committee of Ways and Means, gave notice that, as soon as the Michigan bill was disposed of, he should ask the indulgence of the House to take up some of the appropriation bills. They had no wish to interfere with that bill.

On motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG,

Ordered, That the Committee of Ways and Means be discharged from the further consideration of the subject of an increase of the salary of the Receiver of the General Land Office, communicated to the committee by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill making appropriations for erecting light-houses, light-boats, and buoys, and making surveys for the year 1837: read twice and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARLAND of Virginia, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill supplementary to the act of 1830, in relation to the exchange of lands with the Indians: read twice and committed to the same committee as the foregoing.

Mr. CASEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a resolution ordering the bill and report in relation to the Illinois Central railroad to be printed for the use of the House; which was concurred in.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Charles G. Ridgley: read twice and committed.

Mr. HOWARD, from the same committee, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, any information in his possession, showing the condition of the political relations between the United States and Mexico; and also, any further information that he may have received on the condition of Texas.

On motion of Mr. H. (the resolution under the rule, being required to lie over one day for consideration) was taken up, then considered, and concurred in.

Mr. BOND, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Josiah Clark: read twice and committed.

Mr. WASHINGTON, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill, entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the corporation of the city of Washington;" read twice and committed.

Mr. CRAMER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of J. B. Hutchinson: read twice and committed.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the case of James Chalmers; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the case of Albert Vanderveer; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURRILL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report on the case of James Saterly; which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. PATTON the Committee on the Library were discharged from the further consideration of the resolution in relation to printing extra copies of the Geological Reconnaissance; which was read entire, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CRAIG, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made unfavorable reports upon the petition of Martin Durham, the petition of Thomas Johnston, the petition of Lawrence Simpson, the petition of William Johnston, and the petition of Josiah Hayden: ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee on Claims, made an unfavorable report in the cases of Wiley Harbin, Matthews and Roads, and J. Hall; which were ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Elizabeth H. Newman.

On motion of Mr. STANDEFER, the Committee on Revolutionary Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of James B. Rice, and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. BOND, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the case of Joseph Patterson; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LINCOLN, from the Committee on Public Lands, made an unfavorable report in the case of Wilson Thorp; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANN of New York, made an ineffectual attempt to introduce a resolution changing the daily hour of the meeting of the House to 11 o'clock, A. M.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The House then resumed the consideration of the following resolution and amendments:

Whereas, Congress has heretofore made donations of the public lands for the purposes of internal improvement and education:

To the State of Ohio,	1,737,838 acres.
Indiana,	1,112,592
Illinois,	1,712,225
Missouri,	1,181,248
Mississippi,	733,244
Alabama,	1,216,450
Louisiana,	920,053
Ter. of Michigan,	599,973
Arkansas,	996,338
Florida,	947,724

In the aggregate amounting to 11,057,685 acres.

And whereas, each of the United States has an equal right to participate in the benefit of the public lands, the common property of the Union; and every wise and good American having agreed in the opinion that the cause of general education is indissolubly identified with the cause of general liberty; Therefore, to do equal, and exact justice to all the States; to aid in diffusing among the rising generation intelligence enough to comprehend, and spirit enough to defend their rights, and thus to elevate the national character, and insure the perpetuity of our free institutions,

Be it resolved, That a select committee, to consist of one member from each State, be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the justice and expediency of making to each of the thirteen original American States, together with each of the States of Maine, Vermont, Kentucky, and Tennessee, such grants of the public lands for the purposes of education, as will correspond in a just proportion with those heretofore made in favor of the first named States and Territories, and the said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise. But, to avoid the objection of one State holding land in another, the committee is directed to insert a clause in the bill which they may report, providing that the grants to be made thereby shall be subject to sale under the laws of the General Government now in force, and that the proceeds arising therefrom shall be paid over to the States entitled to the same.

Mr. VINTON moved to amend the resolution by adding thereto the following:

Resolved, That the said inquiry extend to all the States, and that the said committee be further instructed to inquire into the expediency of inserting a clause in said bill to pay said new States the value of the improvements made by them on the public lands, or to pay to them the amount the public lands would have been assessed for taxes, if they had been private property.

The last amendment was that of Mr. CLAIRBORNE of Mississippi, proposing that no grant should interfere with the improvements, &c. of any actual settler.

The question pending, when it was cut off by the orders of the day on Saturday last, was the motion of Mr. BOYD to lay the whole subject on the table.

This question being then taken, was decided in the affirmative—yeas 114, nays 82, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ash, Ashley, Barton, Bean, Beaumont, Bell, Black, Bockee, Bond, Boon, Borden, Bouldin, Bovee, Boyd, Bunch, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Efner, Farlin, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, Rice Garland, Gholson, Granger, Grantland, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Holt, Howard, Hubley, Huntington, Jarvis, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Leonard, Lewis, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, William Mason, Sampson Mason, Maury, May, McCarty, McKay, McLene, Miller, Moore, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Patton, Dutee J. Pearce, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, Sickles, Sloane, Smith, Spangler, Sprague, Sutherland, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turill, Vanderpoel, Vinton, Wardwell, Weeks, Elisha Whittlesey, Thomas T. Whittlesey, and Yell—114.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Chilton Allan, Heman Allen, Anthony, Bailey, Briggs, Buchanan, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, Carter, John Chambers, Chetwood, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Clark, Connor, Corwin, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Dawson, Deberry, Denny, Elmore, Evans, Everett, French, Graham, Graves, Grayson, Grennell, Griffin, Hard, Hardin, Harlan, Harper, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Holsey, Hopkins, Howell, Huntsman, Ingersoll, James, Jenifer, Laporte, Lawrence, Luke Lea, Lincoln, McComas, McKennan, McKim, Mercer, Milligan, Montgomery, Parker, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phillips, Pickens, Potts, Rencher, Richardson, Robertson, Russell, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shinn, Slade, Standefor, Steele, Taliaferro, Waddy Thompson, Turner, Underwood, Wagener, Washington, White, Sherrod Williams, and Young—82.

So the whole subject was laid on the table.

ADMISSION OF MICHIGAN.

Mr. THOMAS said, however reluctant he might feel to interfere with the ordinary business of the House, yet he felt constrained to move a postponement of the orders, in order to take up the "bill providing for the admission of the State of Michigan into the Union."

Mr. PICKENS wished it to be distinctly understood that among the business proposed to be laid aside, was the resolution (of Mr. Wise) proposing an investigation into the Executive departments of the Government.

Mr. CALHOUN of Massachusetts asked for the yeas and nays on the motion, which were ordered, and were yeas 127, nays 71.

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Anthony, Ash, Barton, Beale, Bean, Black, Bockee, Boon, Borden, Bouldin, Bovee, Boyd, Buchanan, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Denny, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Efner, Fairfield, Farlin, Fowler, French, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, James Garland, Rice Garland, Gholson, Gillet, Glascock, Grantland, Grayson, Haley, Hiland Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Samuel S. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Heister, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Hubley, Hunt, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, Jarvis, Richard M. Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Leonard, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Job Mann, Martin, William Mason, Moses Mason, May, McKeon, McKim, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parker, Parks, Patterson, Patton, Dutee J. Pearce, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Sprague, Standefor, Sutherland, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turner, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Wardwell, Webster, Weeks, Thomas T. Whittlesey, and Yell—127.

NAYS—Messrs. Chilton Allan, Heman Allen, Bailey, Bond, Briggs, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, Carter, John Chambers, Chetwood, N. H. Claiborne, Clark, Corwin, Crane, Dawson, Deberry, Elmore, Evans, Everett, Forester, Graham, Granger, Graves, Grennell, Griffin, Joseph Hall, Hard, Hardin, Harlan, Harper, Hazeltine, Hoar, Howell, Ingersoll, James, Jenifer, Cave Johnson, Lawrence, Luke Lea, Lewis, Lincoln, Sampson Mason, Maury, McCarty, McComas, McKennan, Mercer, Milligan, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phillips, Pickens, Potts, Rencher, Robertson, Russell, William B. Shepard, Slade, Sloane, Spangler, Steele, Storer, Taliaferro, Underwood, Vinton, White, Elisha Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, and Sherrod Williams—71.

So the orders were not set aside, two-thirds not voting in the affirmative.

EXECUTIVE ADMINISTRATION.

The House then resumed the consideration of the resolution, originally submitted by Mr. WISE, and the amendment proposed thereto by Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island, for an inquiry into alleged abuses of the Executive Departments of the Government.

Mr. MCKEON, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the House at some length in support of the proposed amendment, and was followed by Mr. JENIFER in opposition.

Mr. VANDERPOEL said, he was about to submit a motion as to which he anticipated the most unprecedented unanimity. He took it for granted that the author of this resolution, and those gentlemen of the opposition who had favored us with such elaborate and ardent speeches in favor of its passage, were really "in earnest;" that they actually wanted a committee to look into the alleged corruptions of the day; and if their object was what they professed it to be, they would certainly be apt to favor any movement that would ensure an immediate determination of this question; not protract its decision with their speeches till near the end of the session, and then tell us that they had not time enough to make the necessary investigation. If they were intent upon making discoveries, it was surely very important that the committee of inquiry should commence its labors without delay. He could not, therefore, but look for entire concurrence in the motion he was about to submit from the opponents of the administration. And as to the friends of the administration, he had but a single word to say: It was due to the administration, and particularly to that venerable man, who was soon to return to that home from which, eight years ago, the voice of a grateful people called him, that the question now under debate should be immediately disposed of. Let not the creation of this proposed court of inquiry be postponed to so late a period that his opponents will attempt to avoid the responsibility they have assumed, by telling us, that they had not time enough to render their labors efficient. Though the original resolution was as broad as the English language could make it, and the effect of the motion, he was about to submit, if it prevailed, would be to cut off the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. Pearce) yet he felt it his duty to move the previous question.

Mr. V. withdrew the motion at the request of Mr. WISE, with the understanding that Mr. W. would renew it.

Mr. WISE then, after addressing the House for a short time, renewed the demand for the previous question; which was seconded by the House—yeas 94, nays 51.

Mr. MORGAN called for the yeas and nays on ordering the main question; which were ordered, and were—yeas 121, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Chilton Allan, Anthony, Ash, Bailey, Bean, Black, Borden, Bouldin, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Bunch, Bynum, Cambreleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, John F. H. Claiborne, Connor, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Doubleday, Dunlap, Farlin, Fowler, Fry, Fuller, James Garland, Gholson, Gillet, Glascock, Grantland, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Hardin, Harlan, Samuel S. Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Hazeltine, Heister, Holley, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, Janes, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, Lay, Joshua Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Martin, William Mason, Sampson Mason, McKim, McLean, Montgomery, Morgan, Owens, Page, Patterson, Patton, Peyton, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Rogers, Schenck, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Spangler, Standefer, Storer, Sutherland, Taliaferro, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turner, Turril, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Wardwell, Washington, Webster, Weeks, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, and Yell—121.

NAYS—Messrs. Heman Allen, Bell, Bond, Briggs, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, John Chambers, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Clark, Corwin, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Dawson, Deberry, Denny, Dromgoole, Elmore, Evans, Graham, Granger, Graves, Grennell, Harper, Hoar, Howell, Ingersoll, Jenifer, Lawrence, Luke Lea, Lincoln, Maury, McCarty, McKennan, Mercer, Milligan, Dutee J. Pearce, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phillips, Pickens, Potts, Reed, Robertson, Russell, Steele, Waddy Thompson, Vinton, Elisha Whittlesey, Wise, and Young—52.

So the House determined that the main question be now put.

Mr. BOYD called for the yeas and nays on the main question, (which was on the adoption of the original resolution;) which were ordered, and were—yeas 165, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Chilton Allan, Heman Allen, Anthony, Ashley, Bailey, Bean, Black, Bond, Bouldin, Bovee, Boyd, Briggs, Brown, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, Bynum, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, John Chambers, Chaney, Chapman, N. H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Clark, Connor, Corwin, Craig, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Davis, Dawson, Deberry, Denny, Doubleday, Dunlap, Elmore, Evans, Farlin, Forester, Fowler, French, Fry, James Garland, Gholson, Glascock, Graham, Granger, Grantland, Graves, Grayson, Grennell, Griffin, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Hardin, Samuel S. Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Hazeltine, Heister, Hoar, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Howell, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingersoll, Ingham, Janes, Jarvis, Jenifer, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, C. Johnson, Henry Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Klingensmith, Lane, Laporte, Lawler, Lawrence, Lay, Joshua Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Lincoln, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Martin, Sampson Mason, Maury, McCarty, McComas, McKay, McKennan, McKim, McLene, Mercer, Milligan, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Parker, Patterson, Patton, Pearson, Pettigrew, Peyton, Phillips, Pickens, Pinckney, Potts, Reed, Rencher John Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Russell, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Slade, Spangler, Standefer, Steele, Storer, Taliaferro, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turner, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Vinton, Ward, Washington, Webster, Weeks, Elisha Whittlesey, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Wise, Yell, and Young—165.

NAYS—Messrs. Ash, Cushman, Fuller, Lansing, Parks, Schenck, Taylor, Turril, and Wardwell—9. So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BELL renewed the notice of his motion for leave to bring in a bill to secure the freedom of elections.

Mr. THOMPSON of Ohio made an ineffectual attempt to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting a township, or other quantity of land, to each of the States of this Union, for the purpose of enabling them to erect suitable buildings, and to print or purchase all necessary books for the instruction of the blind within their respective limits.

On motion of Mr. GRAVES, adjourned.

IN SENATE,

WEDNESDAY, January 18, 1837.

Mr. CUTHBERT of Georgia appeared and took his seat.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting a report from the Register of the Treasury, prepared in compliance with the act to regulate and fix the compensations of the clerks employed in the public offices.

Also, a communication from the Postmaster General, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the last session directing a report to be made of the number of deputy postmasters in service, with the emoluments received by each, stating that, in consequence of the destruction of the Post Office building by fire, nearly all the information procured during the recess for the purpose of complying with the resolution has been lost, and that there will not be time enough left of the present session to obtain the information in lieu of that destroyed.

Mr. MOORE of Alabama presented two memorials from the Legislature of Alabama, praying for the extension of pre-emption rights in certain cases; also, a memorial from the same in relation to the two per cent. fund belonging to said State; all of which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Memorials and petitions were also presented by Messrs. LINN, KENT, SOUTHARD, DAVIS, STRANGE, and PRESTON.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which had been referred the memorial of sundry Choctaw Indians on the subject, reported a bill providing for the adjustment of certain claims to lands under the 14th article of the Choctaw treaty; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a bill to continue in force, for a limited time, the act for carrying into effect the convention between the United States and Spain.

Mr. NILES, from the Committee on Revolutionary claims reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry Fisher, deceased; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a bill to authorize the payment of invalid pensions in certain cases; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the resolution introduced by Mr. Ewing of Ohio, to rescind the Treasury order, designating the funds to be received in payment at the Land Offices, reported the same without amendment, and said that he was instructed by the committee to move to lay the resolution on the table when it should come up.

Mr. WALKER, at the same time, from the same committee, reported a bill designating and limiting the funds which shall be receivable for the public revenue; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KING of Alabama, on leave, introduced a bill to establish an additional land district in Alabama; which was read twice and referred.

Mr. LINN, on leave, introduced the following bills; which were severally twice read and referred:

A bill to authorize the President of the United States to run and mark the line dividing the Territory of the United States on the north from the State of Missouri; and

A bill providing for the execution of certain surveys of the public lands.

Mr. SEVIER submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing patents to be issued to James Smith of the Post of Arkansas, for the southwest fractional quarter of section eighteen south, in range two west; also, for the east part of the northwest fractional quarter of section nineteen, in township eight south, in range two west; and also the west half of the southwest quarter of section nineteen, in range two west, which appeared to have been entered by said Smith on the 23d March, 1835, at Little Rock, in the Territory of Arkansas.

Mr. EWING of Ohio offered the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate a statement of the amount of moneys received for public lands in each month of the year 1836, so far as he has returns thereof.

Also, resolved, That he inform the Senate what amount of money has been expended in each month of the year 1836, in removing gold and silver from the land offices to the deposite banks; and whether any, and if any, the amount of losses sustained thereby.

Mr. CRITTENDEN offered the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate, in addition to the report or letter of explanation of Gov. Call concerning the military operations in Florida, required by resolution of the 14th inst. the communication calling for that report, and any other communication from or to the said Governor on the subject thereof.

Mr. KING of Georgia offered the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence in his department, not heretofore communicated, or so much thereof as may be communicated without injury to the public interest, showing the present relations between the United States and Texas.

The bill to limit the sales of the public lands except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, came up as the special order.

Mr. WALKER proposed, as no gentleman seemed ready to go on with the discussion, to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. CLAY expressed a wish for a postponement to a later period. He expressed his opposition to the bill throughout, and said that he would be able to demonstrate conclusively, that instead of preventing speculations in the public lands, and limiting the sales, it would increase the sales to a great degree, and operate as an encouragement to speculation.

Mr. EWING of Ohio, after a few remarks, moved to postpone the bill until Monday.

Mr. WALKER objected to the postponement to so late a day as Monday, on the ground that this being a short session, it would endanger the passage of the bill. He wished the bill to be taken up to-morrow, and for the discussion to go on while gentlemen were preparing their amendments. He knew that it could not be passed without considerable discussion; and, therefore, the sooner that discussion commenced, the better the chance the bill would have of being brought to a final decision before the close of the session. If a postponement should be ordered, he hoped that it would not be to a later day than Friday next.

Mr. KING of Alabama did not wish to prevent any gentleman from having a fair opportunity of expressing his opinions on the subject, and was willing to allow a reasonable time to make the bill as perfect in its details as possible. With regard to what had fallen from the Senator from Kentucky, (Mr. Clay,) he presumed that it was not his intention to throw any unnecessary impediment in the way of passing this bill. It was not to its details, but to the great principle of it, that the Senator objected; and he would take the occasion to say that it would puzzle that gentleman's ingenuity to show (as he had said he could do) that there were provisions in the bill that would lead to more speculation than was practised under the present system of conducting land sales. No matter what measure should be devised, it was more than any man could do to prevent speculation altogether. But the friends of the bill believed that much could be done towards limiting its extent, and therefore were anxious to give their plan a fair trial.

Now, as to disposing of the bill, he would prefer that the Senate should go on with it to-morrow, and gentlemen could, in the meantime, prepare such amendments as they might wish to offer,

He would now repeat, what he had said when he arose, that he was willing to give a reasonable time for the discussion; but beyond the time he had mentioned, he was not disposed to go. He hoped the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Walker) would consider it his duty to the Senate, and to the country, to take up the bill as early as possible, and then gentlemen would have an opportunity of discussing the subject.

The question was then taken, and the further consideration of the bill was postponed till Friday next.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, the previous orders were postponed, and the Senate took up the bill anticipating the payment of the indemnities due to American citizens under the French and Neapolitan treaties.

A debate ensued, in which the bill was advocated by Messrs. WRIGHT and BUCHANAN, and opposed by Messrs. CLAY, CALHOUN, and BAYARD.

After which, the question was taken, Shall this bill be engrossed and read a third time? and decided in the negative—yeas 19, nays 22, as follows.

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Buchanan, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, Linn, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, and Wright—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Illinois, Ewing of Ohio, Hendricks, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Moore, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Strange, Swift, Tomlinson, and White—22.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, the bill to repeal the 10th and 12th clauses of the second section of the tariff act of 1832 was taken up, and considered as in Committee of the Whole; and after an explanation from Mr. WRIGHT, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The following bills were severally read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill to authorize Peter Warner of Indiana to purchase a certain half section of land.

The bill to allow a drawback of duties on imported hemp, when manufactured into cordage and exported.

After the consideration of Executive business, The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 18, 1837.

Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Reuben Brady: read twice, and committed.

Mr. FORESTER, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution for the relief of the legal representatives of Michael Fenwick, deceased: read twice, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

CUMBERLAND ROAD.

Mr. MERCER, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a bill to continue the National road from the Mississippi river to Jefferson city in the State of Missouri: read twice, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MERCER, from the same committee, reported a bill to continue the National road from Vandalia to the Mississippi river, in the State of Illinois: read twice, and committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JAMES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of William Fitzgerald: read twice and committed.

Mr. FRY, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Hannah Eldridge of Maine: read twice and committed.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the case of Ellis Tycer; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Resolutions were then called for, commencing with Kentucky, the point where the House last left off.

On motion of Mr. BOYD,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing an examination to be made by a board of officers of rank and experience of the improvements in fire-arms by Cochran, Hall, Colt, and Baron Hackett, and that the general results be presented in tabular statements, exhibiting the advantages of each in all important military points of view, and especially as to

1. The celerity of fire;
2. The extent of recoil;
3. The efficiency of the fire;
4. The inconvenience from heated barrels in rapid firing;
5. The capacity of being used as a rifle;
6. The simplicity and cheapness of construction;
7. Durability;
8. Saving of ammunition and appendages;
9. The number of charges which may be carried by an infantry soldier;
10. The advantages when used against a charge of cavalry; and
11. The advantages when used by cavalry.

Mr. HAWES submitted the following, which was read:

Resolved, That all petitions, memorials, resolutions, propositions, or papers, relating in any way, or to any extent whatever, to the subject of slavery, or the abolition of slavery, shall, without being either printed or referred, be laid upon the table, and that no further action whatever shall be had thereon.

Mr. HAWES said, he thought it was time the House should adopt a resolution of this kind, after the time which had been lost by discussions on abolition petitions. He wished to raise no debate, because he thought they had had enough on this subject; and therefore, to test the sense of the House, he moved the previous question.

Mr. ADAMS raised the question of the consideration of the resolution, and

After some conversation between the CHAIR, Mr. MERCER and Mr. ADAMS, the CHAIR entertained the motion, and the question was put, "shall this resolution be now considered."

Mr. PHILLIPS called for the yeas and nays which were ordered and were yeas 115, nays 57, as follows:*

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Barton, Bean, Black, Bockee, Boon, Boyce, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Burch, Burns, Cambreleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Crane, Cushman, Davis, Deberry, Doubleday, Dunlap, Eifer, Farlin, French, Fry, Galbraith, Gholson, Graham, Grandland, Graves, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Hardin, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Holsey, Hopkins, Huntington, Hunt, Ingersoll, Ingham, James, Kennon, Lawrence, Lincoln, Job Mann, McCarty, McKennan, Mercer, Parker, Dutee J. Pearce, Phillips, Read, Robertson, Russell, W. B. Shepard, Slade, Sloane, Sprague, Storer, Taliaferro, Underwood, Vinton, Wardwell, and E. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, and Yell—115.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Bailey, Bond, Borden, Bouldin, Briggs, Bynum, William B. Calhoun, Campbell, Chambers, Chaney, Chetwood, Childs, Clark, Darlington, Denny, Evans, Everett, Fowler, Graham, Granger, Grayson, Grennell, Griffin, Haley, H. Hall, Harper, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Howell, Hunt, Ingersoll, Ingham, James, J. W. Jones, B. Jones, Laporte, Lawrence, Lay, Lincoln, Lyon, McCarty, McKennan, Mercer, Morgan, Morris, Parker, Patton, D. J. Pearce, Phillips, Pickens, Read, Rencher, Robertson, Russell, W. B. Shepard, Slade, Sloane, Sprague, Storer, Taliaferro, W. Thompson, Vinton, Wardwell, and E. Whittlesey—57.

So the consideration of the resolution was agreed to [a vote in the negative would have been tantamount to its rejection.]

Mr. HAWES then renewed his demand for the previous question, and it was seconded by the House, (taken by tellers,) yeas 104, nays 42.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved a call of the House: lost.

Mr. EVANS called for the yeas and nays on ordering the main question to be put, which were ordered, and were—yeas 127, nays 66, as follows:*

YEAS—Messrs. Chilton, Allan, Anthony, Ash, Ashley, Barton, Bean, Beaumont, Bell, Black, Bockee, Boon, Boyce, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Burch, Burns, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Deberry, Doubleday, Dunlap, Eifer, Farlin, French, Fry, Galbraith, Gholson, Grandland, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Harlan, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Holsey, Hopkins, Howard, Hubble, Huntington, Huntman, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry

Johnson, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Thomas Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Logan, Loyall, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, William Mason, Moses Mason, Sampson Mason, Maury, May, McCarty, McComas, McKay, McKim, McLene, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Franklin Pierce, James A. Pearce, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Stauderer, Steele, Sutherland, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turner, Turritt, Vanderpool, Wagener, Ward, Wardwell, Webster, Weeks, White, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Sherrod Williams, and Yell—127.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Bailey, Bond, Borden, Bouldin, Briggs, Bynum, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chetwood, Childs, Clark, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Denny, Evans, Everett, Rice Garland, Graham, Granger, Graves, Grayson, Grennell, Haley, H. Hall, Hall, Harl, Harper, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Howell, Hunt, Ingersoll, Ingham, James, Laporte, Lawrence, Lay, Lincoln, McKennan, Mercer, Parker, Dutee J. Pearce, Phillips, Pickens, Read, Rencher, Robertson, Russell, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Shepard, Slade, Sloane, Spangler, Storer, Taliaferro, Underwood, Vinton, Elisha Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, and Young—66.

So the House agreed that the main question be now put.

Mr. GRENELL called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution; which were ordered, and were—yeas 129, nays 69, as follows:*

YEAS—Messrs. C. Allan, Anthony, Ash, Barton, Bean, Beaumont, Bell, Black, Bockee, Boon, Boyce, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Burch, Burns, Bynum, John Calhoun, Cambreleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Deberry, Doubleday, Eifer, Farlin, French, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, Gholson, Grandland, Graves, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Harlan, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Holsey, Hopkins, Howard, Hubble, Huntington, Huntman, Jarvis, Jenner, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, G. Lee, Joshua Lee, Thomas Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Logan, Loyall, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Wm. Mason, Moses Mason, Sampson Mason, Abram P. Maury, May, McComas, McKay, McKim, McLene, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Franklin Pierce, James A. Pearce, Pettigrew, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepard, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Spangler, Stauderer, Steele, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turner, Turritt, Vanderpool, Wagener, Ward, Webster, Weeks, White, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, and Yell—129.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Bailey, Bond, Borden, Bouldin, Briggs, William B. Calhoun, Campbell, Chambers, Chetwood, Childs, Nathanian H. Claiborne, Clark, Crane, Caleb Cushing, Darlington, Denny, G. Evans, Horace Everett, Fowler, Graham, Granger, Grayson, Grennell, Griffin, Haley, H. Hall, Harper, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Howell, Hunt, Ingersoll, Ingham, James, J. W. Jones, B. Jones, Laporte, Lawrence, Lay, Lincoln, Lyon, McCarty, McKennan, Mercer, Morgan, Morris, Parker, Patton, D. J. Pearce, Phillips, Pickens, Read, Rencher, Robertson, Russell, W. B. Shepard, Slade, Sloane, Sprague, Storer, Taliaferro, W. Thompson, Vinton, Wardwell, and E. Whittlesey—69.

[Before the decision was announced, Mr. DRUMGOOLE rose and asked the permission of the House to record his vote in the affirmative, as he was momentarily out of his seat when his name was called. It was objected to.]

The following Message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his private secretary, Andrew Jackson, Jr. Esq.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

SIR: I hereby submit to the House of Representatives, certain communications from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia.

They relate to the difficulties which have been interposed under the existing laws, in bringing to conviction and punishment the supposed incendiaries of the Treasury buildings in the year 1833.

The peculiar circumstances of this case, so long concealed, and of the flagrant frauds by persons disconnected with the Government, which were still longer concealed, and to screen some of which for ever was probably a principal inducement to the burning of the buildings, lead me earnestly to recommend a revision of the laws on this subject. I do this with a wish not only to render the punishment hereafter more severe for the wanton destruction of the public property, but to repeal entirely the statute of limitation in all criminal cases except small misdemeanors, and in no event to allow a party to avail himself of its benefits during the period the commission of the crime was kept concealed, or the persons on trial were not suspected of having perpetrated the offence.

It must be manifest to Congress that the exposed state of the public records here, without fire-proof buildings, imperatively requires the most ample remedies for their protection, and the greatest vigilance and fidelity in all officers, whether executive or judicial, in bringing to condign punishment the real offenders.

Without these, the public property is in that deplorable situation which depends quite as much on accident and good fortune, as the laws for safety.

ADREW JACKSON.

January 17, 1837.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Dec. 27, 1836.

SIR: It is requested that you would communicate to this Department the technical objections on the ground of the statute of limitations, which may have been raised to prevent conviction in the trial of the supposed offenders for burning the Treasury buildings in March, 1833.

I will thank you to state also the instructions given by the court to the jury on that subject, in order that, through the President of the United States, the attention of Congress may be early invited to any new legislation which the circumstances of the case may appear to render proper, in order to increase the security of the public property in this city, by both increasing the punishment for illegal depredations upon it, and removing such improper obstacles to conviction therefor, when the supposed offenders are detected, as may seem to Congress now to exist. I am, &c.

(Signed) LEVI WOODBURY,
Secretary of the Treasury.

F. S. KEY,
Dist't Atty United States, Washington.

WASHINGTON, 27th December, 1836.

SIR: According to the request in your letter of this day, I inclose a copy of the instructions given by the Court to the Jury, on the Act of 1790, on the trial of Richard H. White.

I understand that the only juror who held out for acquitting the prisoner, was satisfied of his guilt, but refused to find him guilty on the ground of this instruction as to the limitations. It is certainly highly necessary that the law should be amended so as to prevent the bar of the statute from operating in cases where the proper officers of Government did not know, and could not by due diligence have known, by whom the offences were committed. One or two cases similar to the present have occurred heretofore in the Circuit Court in which this defence has been sustained.

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

(Signed) F. S. KEY,
U. S. Atty D. C.

Circuit Court of the District of Columbia for the county of Washington, November term, 1836.

THE UNITED STATES,) On an indictment for burning the against) Treasury building. On trial of this RICHARD H. WHITE,) cause, the Court gave to the Jury the following instructions:

"If the jury believe from the evidence that the sudden departure from the District of the prisoner, on the evening of the 30th March, 1833, was for the purpose, or with a view, to avoid punishment for the offence of burning the Treasury building, or for any other offence, this was a fleeing from justice, and the statute of limitation is no bar; unless the jury should also believe that said prisoner afterwards returned to the county of Washington, and that his return was so open and public, and under such circumstance, that opportunity was afforded, by the use of ordinary diligence and due means, to have arrested him; and that two years and more have elapsed from that period to the time of finding the indictment in this case."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington, to wit:

I, William Brent, Clerk of the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia for the county of Washington, hereby certify, that the within is a true and correct copy of the instruction given by the said court in the case of the United States against Richard H. White, on an indictment for burning the Treasury building.

In testimony whereof, I hereunto subscribe my name and affix the seal of the said Circuit Court for the county aforesaid, at the city of Washington, this 28th day of December, 1836.

[L. s.]

(Signed) WM. BRENT, Clerk.

The Message having been read, was, on motion of Mr. THOMAS, referred, with the accompanying documents to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

The following Message in writing was also received from the President of the United States, by the hands of Andrew Jackson Jr. Esq.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit to Congress herewith, the copy of an act of the State of Missouri, passed on the 16th ultimo, expressing the assent of that State to the several provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to extend the western boundary of the State of Missouri to the Missouri river," approved June 7th, 1836. A copy of the act, duly authenticated, has been deposited in the Department of State.

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, January 17th, 1837.

AN ACT to express the assent of the State of Missouri to the extension of the western boundary line of the State.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, as follows:

1. That the State of Missouri has, and by this act does, declare her assent to the several provisions of the act of Congress, entitled "An act to extend the western boundary of the State of Missouri to the Missouri river," approved the 7th of June, 1836, and do hereby accept the same.

2. The Governor of this State is authorized to transmit to the proper authority of the United States a copy of this act, duly certified under the great seal of State.

JOHN JAMFON,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

FRANKLIN CANNON,

President of the Senate.

APPROVED, December 16th, 1836.

LILBURN W. BOGGS.

I, LILBURN W. BOGGS, Governor of the State of Missouri, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of "An act to express the assent of the State of Missouri to the extension of the western boundary line of the State," approved as set forth December 16th, 1836.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the Great Seal of the State to be affixed. Done at the city of Jefferson, this nineteenth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, and of the independence of the United States the sixty-first, and of the State of Missouri the seventeenth.

LILBURN W. BOGGS.

By the Governor:

HENRY SHURLOS,

Secretary of State.

The Message having been read, was, on motion of Mr. MERCER, ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the Register of the Treasury on the salaries of clerks in the different offices, which, on motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

The House then proceeded to the—

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The bill to authorize the President of the United States to furnish certain ordnance stores to the several States was then taken up, read a third time, and passed.

The bill amendatory of the act for the continuation of the Cumberland road, was, on motion of Mr. THOMAS, postponed until to-morrow.

The bill to change the collection district of Deighton, in the State of Massachusetts, to Fall river, and for other purposes, was read a third time and passed.

The joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to correct a clerical error in the award of the Commissioners under the treaty with France, of 1831, was read a third time and passed.

The House then took up the bill to amend the act for the relief of the exiles from Poland.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON moved to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Tuesday next.

And, after some few remarks by Messrs. BOON, LINCOLN, MAY, and BOULDIN.

Mr. THOMAS moved to lay the bill on the table, which was agreed to—ayes 99, noes not counted.

The joint resolution granting a portion of the public lands to Universities and Colleges in the several States was taken up, read twice, and, on motion of Mr. FRENCH, referred to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The joint resolution granting a pension to Mrs. Deatur was also taken up, read twice, and, on motion of Mr. THOMAS, postponed until to-morrow.

The bill to continue in force for a limited time "An act authorizing certain soldiers in the late war to surrender the bounty lands drawn by them, and to locate others in lieu thereof," was taken up, and, on motion of Mr. KENNON, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The "bill to change the title of certain officers of the navy," was taken up, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

The "bill directing the fabrication of certain gold coins," was taken up, and, after a few words from Messrs. A. MANN, JARVIS, MERCER, PARKER, SUTHERLAND, and CONNOR, was postponed until to-morrow.

The "bill to abolish the distinctions in ports of entry, and extending the privilege of drawback," was also postponed till to-morrow.

The "bill to establish a more uniform rule of computing the mileage and per diem compensation of members of Congress," was taken up.

Mr. VANDERPOEL moved its postponement till to-morrow, for the purpose, he explained, of reaching the Michigan bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD wished to move an amendment so as to postpone it to a day certain, and to require from the Sergeant-at-arms a return of the mileage charged by members at the present and last sessions of Congress.

The CHAIR said a motion to postpone was not susceptible of amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved to lay it on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina, asked for the yeas and nays, which being ordered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND withdrew the motion, and the motion to postpone recurring, after some remarks from Mr. WADDY THOMPSON, the yeas and nays were ordered on the call of Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina.

The motion to postpone was further briefly discussed by Messrs. RENCHER, L. WILLIAMS, CRAIG, and VANDERPOEL.

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved the previous question, (on ordering the bill to be engrossed.)

Mr. WARDWELL moved to lay the bill on the table; [which motion took precedence.]

Mr. CRAIG asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and were yeas 11, nays 192.

So the motion to lay on the table being decided in the negative, the question recurred on the demand for the previous question, which was seconded by the House—ayes 78, noes 63.

Mr. EVERETT called for the yeas and nays on ordering the main question to be put, but they were refused; and on taking the question, there appearing—ayes 85, noes 32, no quorum.

Mr. OWENS moved a call of the House. Lost.

The question was again taken, and decided in the affirmative—ayes 112, noes not counted.

Mr. HEISTER called for the yeas and nays on the main question, (the engrossment of the bill;) which were ordered, and were—yeas 186, nays 16.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, the question being when the bill should be read a third time,

Mr. HANNegan said he thought they had done injury enough for one day, for they had ordered to be engrossed one of the most confused and ill-digested measures ever passed upon in that House; and he therefore moved that the House adjourn. Lost.

The question ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow was lost, 71 to 76, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time now.

The "bill for the reorganization of the Treasury Department," was, on motion of Mr. MANN of New York, postponed until to-morrow.

The House then took up the bill from the Senate entitled "An act to admit the State of Michigan into the Union, upon an equal footing with the original States;" the question being on its commitment to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. THOMAS said he did not feel a very deep interest in the decision of this question. He believed that this bill ought to be speedily disposed of, and would prefer that the House should act upon it in that form which would ensure the earliest decision. The people of Michigan, we know, exceeded eighty thousand in number four years since, and were at that time, under the guaranties of the ordinance of 1787, and in accordance with the course pursued towards the other States which have been admitted, entitled to all the benefits enjoyed by other citizens of the United States. This claim has been postponed, and I think the House ought to proceed in that mode which will secure to the majority of the body the entire control of the measure. In the House we have a right to order the previous question; in the Committee of the Whole the rules take away the privilege of that question. Although the previous question has been, and will be anathematized, yet no man who has marked the action of this, or of any other legislative body, will deny but that nearly every member has, at one time or another, voted for that question, when in his opinion such a measure had become necessary to terminate unreasonable discussion. In this instance the House ought to be, and Mr. T. hoped it would be, reasonably indulgent. If the discussion should be confined to questions directly or indirectly connected with the bill, they would be heard until the House was prepared to decide. But if the debate should be unreasonably extended, it ought to be closed, and he hoped would be closed, in justice to the people of Michigan, whose representatives have a right to participate in the legislation of Congress.

Mr. HARDIN said for his part he did not care whether this subject was referred to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or not, provided a full and free opportunity to discuss the subject was allowed. The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. Thomas) had promised that he would not move nor support the previous question, provided gentlemen confined themselves to the subject of the bill; but, he would ask, who was to be the judge in this case? because some gentlemen spoke more close to the question than others on any subject. If, however, he could be allowed a reasonable scope of debate, he cared little where the bill went. He did not know that he would desire to discuss the question, but if it was necessary for him to do so, he wished to have the opportunity.

Mr. JENIFER inquired of the Chair if it was not indispensably necessary that this bill should be committed? If he was not very much mistaken, it involved an appropriation.

The CHAIR replied, that it did not involve an appropriation. It only directed that Michigan should have her share of the surplus now for distribution.

Mr. JENIFER inquired if it did not provide that a portion of the public money should be taken from the Treasury?

The CHAIR remarked, that it did not propose to take any money out of the Treasury in the shape of an appropriation. It only provided for giving Michigan a share of the surplus revenue, which, if this bill did not pass, would go to the other States.

The question then recurred on committing the bill to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. REED called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

Mr. THOMSON of Ohio then called for the reading of the bill, and it was accordingly read by the Clerk.

Mr. BRIGGS renewed the point of order, that the bill required commitment, on the ground that as it provided for the election of Senators and a member of the House of Representatives, it thereby involved a charge, though indirectly, upon the Treasury. He drew the attention of the Chair to his decision upon the same point last session, when the present Speaker decided conformably to the point Mr. B. now raised.

The CHAIR replied that the present bill was one thing, and a bill already the law of the land was another; and though it might have been necessary to commit a bill which had become the law of the land, it did not necessarily follow that the bill under consideration should be committed.

Mr. PATTON remarked that there was no instance in the history of this Government of a State having been admitted into the Union without the bill providing for its admission being committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Moreover, the majority had it in their power to take the bill out of committee, and might also send it there with instructions to report it back forthwith.

Mr. SUTHERLAND would be willing to go into Committee of the Whole on this bill if the subject was a new one, or even if he could persuade himself there was a single member of the House who did not understand the merits of the question. He denied that a majority could discharge the Committee of the Whole from a bill, since the idea had always been countenanced that, as long as an amendment was pending, no bill could be brought into the House.

Mr. PATTON inquired if the Committee of the Whole could not be instructed to report the bill forthwith without amendment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND replied, supposing a member had the floor and were to speak for two or three days, the bill could not be taken out of Committee in the midst of a gentleman's speech. He was willing to give as much latitude in the House as would be desired.

Mr. STORER insisted upon a fair construction of this bill, the rule of the House required its being committed. He argued the point on the same ground as the gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Briggs,) maintaining further, that the new bill was merely supplementary to an amendatory of the former act.

The question was then taken on committing the bill to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 86, nays 110, as follows:*

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, II. Allen, Ashley, Bailey, Bell, Bond, Briggs, William B. Calhoun, Campbell, Carter, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chetwood, Childs, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Clark, Corwin, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Dawson, Deberry, Denny, Elmore, Evans, Everett, Rice Garland, Graham, Granger, Graves, Grayson, Grennell, Griffin, Hardin, Harlan, Harper, Hazeltine, Hester, Hoar, Howell, Ingersoll, James, Jarvis, Jenifer, Lawler, Lawrence, George W. Lay, Luke Lea, Lewis, Lincoln, Lyon, Sampson Mason, Maury, McCarthy, McKennan, McLene, Mercer, Milligan, Parker, Patton, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phillips, Pickens, Pous, Reed, Rencher, Robertson, Russell, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Shepherd, Slade, Sloane, Spangler, Standefer, Steele, Storer, Talliaferro, Turner, Underwood, Vinton, Washington, E. Whittlesey, L. Williams, and Young—86.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Ash, Barton, Bean, Beaumont, Back, Becke, Boon, Borden, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, Byam, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Connor, Craig, Cushman, Davis, Doubleday, Dismore, Dunlap, Eifer, Farlin, Fowler, French, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, Gilson, Gascok, Grantland, Haley, Joseph Hall, Samuel S. Harrison, Albert G. Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Hubley, Huntington, Huntman, Ingham, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Joshua Lee, Thomas Lee, Leonard, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, William Mason, Moses Mason, McKay, McKee, McKim, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Dutee J. Pearce, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Sprague, Sutherland, Taylor, Thomas, J. Thomson, Toucey, Turrill, Vanderpool, Wagener, Ward, Wardwell, Weeks, Thomas T. Whittlesey, and Yell—110.

So the House refused to commit the bill.

Mr. THOMAS said he was himself prepared to go on with the subject till 12 o'clock at night; but if the House preferred adjourning, he would yield; and, in order to test its sense, he would move an adjournment. Mr. T. however, withdrew the motion at the request of

The CHAIR, who presented from the Secretary of the Treasury, a report of the contracts for light houses, light buoys, &c. for the year 1836, which, on motion of Mr. SUTHERLAND, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The House then adjourned.

SELECT COMMITTEE.

On the resolution of Mr. WISE, for an inquiry into the Executive Departments of the Government.

Mr. WISE of Virginia.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island.

Mr. MUHLBERG of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMPBELL of South Carolina.

Mr. HANNegan of Indiana.

Mr. PARKS of Maine.

Mr. LINCOLN of Massachusetts.

Mr. MANN of New York.

Mr. CHANEY of Ohio.

IN SENATE,

THURSDAY, January 19, 1837.

The honorable THOMAS CLAYTON, a Senator from the State of Delaware, attended, and the oath to support the Constitution of the United States having been administered to him by the Vice President, he took his seat in the Senate.

TEXAS.

The following message, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 16th instant, was received from the President of the United States, through ANDREW JACKSON, jr, his private Secretary:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate dated the 16th instant, I transmit a copy and a translation of a letter addressed to me on the 4th of July last, by the President of the Mexican Republic, and a copy of my reply to the same on the 4th of September. No other communication upon the subject of the resolution referred to, has been made to the Executive by any other foreign Government, or by any person claiming to act in behalf of Mexico.

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, January 18, 1837.

The President of the Mexican Republic to the President of the United States

To his Excellency General ANDREW JACKSON,
President of the United States of America:

COLUMBIA, (IN TEXAS,) July 4, 1836.

MUCH ESTEEMED SIR: In fulfilment of the duties which patriotism and honor impose upon a public man, I came to this country at the head of six thousand Mexicans. The chances of war, made inevitable by circumstances, reduced me to the condition of a prisoner, in which I still remain, as as you may have already learned. The disposition evinced by General Samuel Houston, the Commander-in-Chief of the Texan army, and by his successor, General Thomas J. Rusk, for the termination of the war—the decision of the President and Cabinet of Texas in favor of a proper compromise between the contending parties, and my own conviction, produced the conventions of which I send you copies enclosed, and the orders given by me to General Filisola, my second in command, to retire from the river Brasso, where he was posted, to the other side of the river Bravo del Norte.

As there was no doubt that General Filisola would religiously comply, as far as concerned himself, the President and Cabinet agreed that I should set off for Mexico, in order to fulfil the other engagements; and, with that intent, I embarked on board the schooner Invincible, which was to carry me to the port of Vera Cruz. Unfortunately, however, some indiscreet persons raised a mob, which obliged the authorities to have me landed by force, and brought back into strict captivity. This incident has prevented me from going to Mexico, where I should otherwise have arrived early in last month; and, in consequence of it, the Government of that country, doubtless ignorant of what has occurred, has withdrawn the command of the army from General Filisola, and has ordered his successor, General Urrea, to continue its operations. In obedience to which order that General is, according to the latest accounts, already at the river Nueces. In vain have some reflecting and worthy men endeavored to demonstrate the necessity of moderation, and of my going to Mexico, according to the convention; but the excitement of the public mind has increased with the return of the Mexican army to Texas. Such is the state of things here at present. The continuation of the war, and of its disasters, is therefore inevitable, unless the voice of reason be heard, in proper time, from the mouth of some powerful individual. It appears to me that you, sir, have it in your power to perform this good office, by interfering in favor of the execution of the said convention, which shall be strictly fulfilled on my part. When I offered to treat with this Government, I was convinced that it was useless for Mexico to continue the war. I have acquired exact information respecting this country, which I did not possess four months ago. I have too much zeal for the interests of my country to wish for any thing which is not compatible with them. Being always ready to sacrifice myself for its glory and advantage, I never would have hesitated to subject myself to torments or death, rather than consent to any compromise, if Mexico could thereby have obtained the slightest benefit. I am firmly convinced that it is proper to terminate this question by political negotiation: that conviction alone determined me sincerely to agree to what has been stipulated; and, in the same spirit, I make to you this frank declaration. Be pleased, sir, to favor me by a like confidence on your part; afford me the satisfaction of avoiding approaching evils, and of contributing to that good which my heart advises. Let us enter into negotiations by which the friendship between your nation and the Mexican may be strengthened, both being amicably engaged in giving being and stability to a people who are desirous of appearing in the political world; and who under the protection of the two nations, will attain its object within a few years.

The Mexicans are magnanimous when treated with consideration. I will clearly set before them the proper and humane reasons which require noble and frank conduct on their part, and I doubt not that they will act thus as soon as they have been convinced.

By what I have here submitted, you will see the sentiments which animate me; and with which I remain your most humble and obedient servant,
ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

The President of the United States to the President of the Mexican Republic.

HERMITAGE, Sept. 4, 1836.

TO GEN. ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th of July last, which has been forwarded to me by General Samuel Houston, under cover of one from him, transmitted by an express from General Gaines, who is in command of the United States forces on the Texan frontier. The great object of these communications appears to be to put an end to the disasters which necessarily attend the civil war now raging in Texas, and asking the interposition of the United States in furthering so humane and desirable a purpose. That any well-intended effort of yours in aid of this object should have been defeated, is calculated to excite the regret of all who justly appreciate the blessings of peace, and who take an interest in the causes which contribute to the prosperity of Mexico in her domestic as well as her foreign relations.

The Government of the United States is ever anxious to cultivate peace and friendship with all nations. But it proceeds on the principle that all nations have the right to alter, amend, or change their own Government, as the sovereign power, the People, may direct. In this respect, it never interferes with the policy of other Powers, nor can it permit any on the part of others with its internal policy. Consistently with this principle, whatever we can do to restore peace between contending nations, or remove the causes of misunderstanding, is cheerfully at the service of those who are willing to rely upon our good offices as a friend or mediator.

In reference, however, to the agreement which you as the representative of Mexico, have made with Texas, and which invites the interposition of the United States, you will at once see that we are forbidden by the character of the communications made to us through the Mexican Minister, from considering it. That Government has notified us that, as long as you are a prisoner, no act of yours will be regarded as binding by the Mexican authorities. Under these circumstances, it will be manifest to you that good faith to Mexico, as well as the general principle to which I have adverted, as forming the basis of our intercourse with all foreign powers, make it impossible for me to take any step like that you have anticipated. If, however, Mexico should signify her willingness to avail herself of our good offices in bringing about the desirable result you have described, nothing could give me more pleasure than to devote my best services to it. To be instrumental in terminating the evils of civil war, and in substituting in their stead the blessings of peace, is a divine privilege. Every Government, and the people of all countries, should feel it their highest happiness to enjoy an opportunity of thus manifesting their love of each other, and their interest in the general principles which apply to them all as members of the common family of man.

Your letter, and that of General Houston, Commander-in-Chief of the Texan army, will be made the basis of an early interview with the Mexican Minister at Washington. They will hasten my return to Washington, to which place I will set out in a few days, expecting to reach it by the 1st of October. In the mean time, I hope Mexico and Texas, feeling that war is the greatest of calamities, will pause before another campaign is undertaken, and can add to the number of those scenes of bloodshed which have already marked the progress of their contest, a day have given so much pain to their Christian friends throughout the world.

This is sent under cover to General Houston, who will give it a safe conveyance to you.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ANDREW JACKSON.

The message and documents having been read: Mr. PRESTON rose and said it would strike the Senate at once that since the date of the letter written by Santa Anna, his situation had been very much changed. On the 4th of July last he was a prisoner in the hands of the Texans, but had been subsequently released, and was now in the city of Washington. According to the terms and purport of the correspondence, it would appear that it was carried on whilst Santa Anna was a prisoner. The President of the United States, aware of that fact, had expressed himself as being unable, in consequence, to enter into any negotiation with him while so situated. But now, as he (Mr. P.) had just stated, Santa Anna was in this city, and could negotiate on the subject up to April next; but whether he would or would not, he (Mr. P.) could not say; nor was it very material to the purpose, Mr. P. had in hand. There was a resolution in relation to Texas offered a few days ago by the honorable Senator from Mississippi, and which had been made the order of the day for to-day, what disposition he wished to make of it he was not aware. It was a matter for the gentleman's discretion. The correspondence which had been laid before the Senate, however, would not, in his (Mr. P.'s) opinion, render it necessary to change the language of the resolution. Concurring, as he did, with that resolution, he would now say that he was prepared to establish the fact, that upon the recognised principles of national law, the practice of this Government, and the policy of the country, she ought, as was her duty, to make a prompt, speedy and absolute recognition of the independence of Texas. He hoped, at the proper time, to be able to prove this:

He insisted that her independence should be immediately acknowledged, and that, too, without any regard to what might be said or done by Santa Anna, for his authority had ceased in Texas for ever. After having heard read the present and the other message of the President in relation to this subject, it was not his desire that any thing should be done here in reference to it, that would have the effect of contravening, running counter to, or obstructing, any purpose of the Executive of the United States.

He (Mr. P.) had understood that the President, when he sent his former message, had submitted this matter to Congress for their consideration, being willing to carry into effect what they might deem right and proper; but there were, at that time, some difficulties in the way which prevented his recommending the adoption of any legislation on the subject. It seemed to him, (said Mr. P.) that had the President of the United States not been aware of the fact, that another expedition under General Bravo was about to invade Texas; he would not have hesitated to recommend to Congress to do something in reference to settling the war between Texas and Mexico.

Mr. P. adverted to the circumstances connected with the failure of the expedition under General Bravo, and then concluded with saying that all he desired was that Congress should proceed as early as possible to discuss the question of immediately acknowledging the independence of Texas. She was entitled to it; she had a right to demand it of the United States; and the sooner it was granted the better. He would await the action of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, (Mr. Davis,) as well as the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Mississippi, when he would have something further to say on the subject.

Mr. WALKER, without intending to enter into any discussion at this time, wished to state some information he possessed previous to the Senate acting on it, because he considered the question of the recognition of the independence of Texas as having no connection with any thing that General Santa Anna might now do. He considered the claim of Texas to be founded as well on the settled policy of this Government, as on the laws of nations, and that it ought to be decided on its own merits. It would be recollected that the President, in his message, shortly after the commencement of the session, placed the condition of the recognition of the independence of Texas on the success or failure of the expedition then set on foot by Mexico, and which was about entering the Texan territory. One of the alternatives contemplated by the President had taken place, so that, according to the views clearly expressed in his message, there was now no longer cause for delaying to acknowledge the independence of Texas.

Mr. W. here read a letter addressed by him to a highly respectable individual lately arrived from Vera Cruz, whose name he said it would be improper to make public, though the letter was at the service of any of the members of the Senate who desired to see it, making inquiries respecting the contemplated invasion of Texas, with the gentleman's reply. From this letter it appeared that the idea of subjugating Texas was not entertained by any intelligent man in Mexico; that the invading army was broken up, the small remnant of it being without provisions or supplies of any kind, and that the Mexican General Bravo had resigned his command in consequence of not having been furnished by his Government with the means of opening the campaign. The gentleman further gives it as his opinion that the campaign never will open, as it is as much as Mexico can do to keep the discontented portion of her own citizens quiet, several insurrections having broken out which were suppressed not without difficulty.

Mr. W. continued, that the President, in the message alluded to, distinctly asserted that he considered that the recognition of the independence of Texas depended on the success or failure of the threatened invasion. Now, said Mr. W. the invading army being broken up and dispersed, and its commander having resigned, it would be perfectly obvious that the recognition of the independence of Texas would be in accordance with the views of the President, thus clearly expressed. He would say nothing further now, than to repeat the hope, that whatever was done by this Government might be done unconnected with General Santa Anna in any way whatever.

Mr. CALHOUN said he had always entertained the opinion that the people of Texas could never live under the Mexican Government in peace and happiness. He had thought, too, that it was our duty, at the earliest period practicable, to recognize the independence of Texas. He felt certain, from the events which had occurred in that country, that unless a speedy stop was put to what was going on there, the Rio del Norte would not be made the boundary of Texas. She would shake the Mexican empire to its very centre, if the controversy existing between her and Mexico should not instantly cease. He was ready to acknowledge her independence; and the sooner it was done the better.

The message and documents were then laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the Navy Department, transmitting a statement of the contracts entered into by the Navy Commissioners for the last year.

Mr. ROBINSON presented the memorial of the Legislature of Illinois, praying indemnity for her citizens who suffered by Indian depredations in 1831, and 1832: referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of Horatio N. Crabb, praying for certain allowances of pay, refused him by the accounting officers: referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LINN presented the petition of certain citizens of Missouri, praying for pre-emption rights: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RIVES presented the petition of certain citizens of Virginia, interested in the coal mines of that State, remonstrating against a repeal of the duty on foreign coal: referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to which had been referred the petition of DeForest Molice, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been referred the bill to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be run and marked the line dividing the territory of the United States from the State of Missouri on the north: reported the same with amendments.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the same Committee, reported also, with several amendments, the bill to prevent the abatement of suits in the Courts of the United States.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which had been referred the bill for the relief of James and John Brown, reported the same without amendment.

The following bills were severally read the third time and passed:

The bill to allow a drawback of duties on foreign hemp, when manufactured into cordage and exported.

The bill to repeal the provisos in the 10th and 12th clauses of the second section of the tariff act of 1832.

The bill to authorize Peter Warner of Indiana to purchase a certain half section of land; and

The bill to continue in force for a limited time the act to carry into effect the convention between the United States and Spain.

Mr. GRUNDY, on leave, introduced a bill to alter the times of holding the circuit courts of the United States, in the State of Tennessee; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. KNIGHT, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of Samuel Warren; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. PRESTON, on leave, introduced a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to apply the appropriation made last session for repairing the sea wall at St. Augustine to the reconstruction of the same; which was twice read and referred.

The following bills were severally read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading:

The bill for the relief of Benjamin Murphy;
The bill for the payment of a debt due to Antoine Potter;

The bill for the relief of William H. Robinson and Samuel H. Garrow;

The bill for the relief of Sarah Angel and the other heirs at law of Benjamin King, deceased;

The bill for the relief of Isaac Brenson;
The bill for the relief of James McCrory;

The bill for the relief of the legal heirs of Moses Elinor;

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Y. Keene;

The bill for the relief of the heirs of William Cogswell;

The bill for the relief of the administrator of Michael Hogan, deceased;

The bill for the relief of Ransom Mix;
The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Gustavus B. Horner, deceased;

The bill for the relief of certain officers of the United States sloop of war Boston;

The bill for the relief of Moses Van Scanter;
The bill for the relief of Sebastian Richards;

The bill for the relief of George W. Brand;
The bill for the relief of Irvine Shubrick;

The bill for the relief of Caroline Clitherall;
The bill for the relief of the heirs of General William Eaton;

The bill to increase the compensation of the principal clerk employed in the Adjutant General's office;

The bill for the relief of John McLeod;
The bill for the relief of Thomas H. Perkins, and others;

The bill to incorporate the Washington County Manual Labor School and Male Orphan Asylum;

The bill for the relief of Charles B. Hunter; and
The bill to authorize the relinquishment of the 16th sections of land granted for the use of schools, and the location of other lands in lieu thereof.

[After a debate, in which the amendment was supported by Messrs. KING of Alabama, and WALKER, and opposed by Messrs. CLAY and EWING of Ohio.]

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

THURSDAY, January 19, 1837.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE SURPLUS.

Mr. OWENS said he held in his hand a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, in relation to the late deposit act, which he was directed to present to the House, and moved that the same be read, laid on the table and printed.

Mr. O anticipated no objection, as the resolution, merely expressed an opinion as to the policy of the deposit law, and was not calculated, and would not, as he presumed, provoke debate.

Mr. BELL objected to the reception of the resolutions.

Mr. OWENS moved a suspension of the rule, but the motion did not prevail.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which had been recommended the bill for the relief of Louis Durette, reported the same back, with sundry amendments; and it was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the same committee, reported a resolution re-appointing the translator of the French and Spanish languages to the House until the 1st of February, 1838; which, after a few words from Messrs. E. WHITTLESEY and HUNTSMAN, was, on motion of the former gentleman, postponed till Monday next.

Mr. KLINGENSMITH, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Daniel West, of the State of Massachusetts: read twice and committed.

Mr. LAY, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to O'Neil McNeil: read twice and committed.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill granting a pension to Gilbert Sprague Smith: read twice and committed.

Mr. HOWELL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill granting a pension to James M. Evans: read twice and committed.

Mr. MERCER, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a resolution discharging the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the "bill to authorize the New Orleans and Carrollton Railroad company to construct a railroad from Carrollton to the town of Bayou Sara, in Louisiana," which was concurred in; and the bill being brought into the House was, on his motion, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

CUMBERLAND ROAD.

Mr. M. ROAR, from the same committee, reported a resolution directing the report and bill of the Committee on Roads and Canals on the completion of the Cumberland road, east of the Ohio river, with certain additional documents in relation thereto, to be printed for the use of the House, which was concurred in.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL.

Mr. MERCER, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a resolution proposing to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the "bill further to amend the act incorporating the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal company," which was concurred in; and the same having been brought into the House, and a verbal amendment made, on motion of Mr. M. and it was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

ALLEGHENY RIVER.

Mr. McKENNAN, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported an amendment, directing a survey of the Allegheny river, from French Creek, in Pennsylvania, to Olean Point, in New York, to bill No. 828, authorizing a survey of certain rivers therein named; which was committed to the same Committee of the Whole having charge of that bill.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill to revive and continue in force the act of the 24th of May, 1828, and other acts and provisions therein mentioned, providing relief for persons wounded in the war of the revolution: read twice and committed.

On motion of Mr. KLINGENSMITH, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the case of Amos Wood; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LAY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the cases of John Bishop and William Peckham, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BEAUMONT, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report in the case of Captain N. Ferris, Robert Powell, R. Fauttleroy and Major Thomas Smith, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report in the case of Ebenezer James; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report in the case of N. Miller, which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the report in the case of J. McCormick; and the same was committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made an unfavorable report in the case of Joshua Ross; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURBILL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report in the case of Mary O'Bannon; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOWELL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made unfavorable reports in the cases of John Thompson, Joshua Buckingham, Joseph Anderson, Stephen Mouce, Thomas Frazier, and Samuel Cleveland; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARLAN submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the insurance and protection from accidents by fire or otherwise, the building lately leased by the Postmaster General from B. O. Tayloe for the use of the Post Office Department; and that said committee ascertain and report to this House the terms and conditions of the lease entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury for the buildings rented by him, referred to, and made a part of the agreement between the Postmaster General and said Tayloe.

Mr. HARLAN said, that by referring to the contract made by the Postmaster General for the building alluded to, it seemed to him, and he submitted it to the consideration of other gentlemen, whether, if this contract was binding on the Government, it would not become the insurer of the buildings? By the stipulations of that contract, the head of the Post Office Department bound himself to return the building in good condition, and he took it, if the building was destroyed by fire, the Government would be bound to rebuild it. He thought, then, that Congress ought to make some provision for having this building insured, so as to exonerate the Government from the risk incurred by the terms of this contract. He did not pretend to say whether the contract was binding on the Government or not; it was very certain there was no authority given to make the contract; but he supposed, from the emergency of the case, that the Government would recognise it, and fulfil its stipulations. He was also desirous of ascertaining from the Postmaster General the terms and conditions of the contract entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury for a part of this building; because it appeared that the Secretary had contracted for all the back buildings, stables, &c. And for the purpose of procuring this information, he proposed to refer the subject to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CONNOR suggested that the gentleman might obtain his object more directly by making calls on the Secretary of the Treasury and Postmaster General.

Mr. HARLAN observed that he was induced to refer the subject to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, because the chairman of that committee had, on his own motion, referred the subject of investigation into the causes of the destruction of the Post Office building to his own committee. As the gentleman had taken charge of that subject, Mr. H. was disposed to give him this also; and he might ascertain of the Secretary of the Treasury the real character of the lease, and lay it before the House.

Mr. CONNOR said, in relation to offering the resolution alluded to by the gentleman, he had only to say, that after a consultation in the committee room, it was concluded that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was the most appropriate committee to which to refer the subject of the investigation into the causes of the destruction of the Post Office building; and he was instructed to introduce the resolution, and introduced it under those instructions. Had it not been for this, certainly he should not have been desirous of bringing upon himself the arduous duty connected with this investigation.

The resolution was then adopted—ayes 77, noes not counted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-arms be directed to lay before this House a statement, showing the mileage claimed, and the sums paid therefor, to the members of this House, and the Delegates from Territories respectively, during the last and present session of Congress; and that he also procure and lay before this House a similar statement in regard to the Senators in Congress.

Mr. BOON moved to strike out of the resolution that part relating to the mileage of the Senators of the United States.

After some remarks by Messrs. HARDIN, WADDY THOMPSON, CRAIG, BOON, and UNDERWOOD,

Mr. BOON moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. CRAIG called for the yeas and nays which were ordered.

Mr. MANN moved that the House proceed to the orders of the day, which was agreed to, ayes 96, noes 74.

Mr. BELL renewed his notice for leave to introduce a bill to secure the freedom of elections.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, covering a statement of the contracts made by the Commissioners of the Navy during the year 1836; which, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS, who said he made the motion under a pledge made to a gentleman yesterday, the vote of the House by which the "bill to amend the act for the relief of the exiles from Poland" was laid on the table yesterday, was reconsidered, and the further consideration thereof postponed until to-morrow.

STATE OF MICHIGAN.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the bill (from the Senate) entitled "An act to admit the State of Michigan into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States."

The question pending was on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. THOMAS entered into a full detail of the facts connected with this subject, from the first application of the Territory of Michigan up to the second convention last Fall, and quoted a variety of documents and precedents on the subject.

The debate was continued by Mr. HARDIN against the bill, when—

Mr. VANDERPOEL moved an adjournment.

Mr. THOMAS requested the gentleman to substitute a motion to make this bill the order of the day for to-morrow, to which Mr. VANDERPOEL assented, and made that motion accordingly.

Mr. E. WHITTLESEY asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MERCER moved an adjournment, which prevailed, and

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 20, 1837.

The CHAIR communicated a report from the War Department, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate on the subject of the surveys of Owls Head harbor, in the State of Maine; which, on motion of Mr. Benton, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been referred the petitions of Lucius W. Stockton and others, made a special report thereon, which was read.

The bill to alter the times of holding the Circuit Courts of the United States in the State of Tennessee, was read the second time, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the petition of the Chicago and Galena Railroad company, reported a bill giving to said company the right of pre-emption to a quantity of land on certain conditions; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which had been referred the petition of sundry citizens of Alexandria, asking the aid of Congress for the completion of their canal, reported a bill for their relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. TOMLINSON, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a bill to continue for a longer period the office of Commissioner of Pensions; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. LINN presented for the sanction of Congress the act of the Legislature of Wisconsin, to incorporate the stockholders of the Mineral Point Bank.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported without amendment the bill from the House to incorporate the Potomac Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. RIVES presented the petition of Thomas R. Beale, of Alexandria, D. C. complaining of the conduct of the corporate authorities of said town: referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, the petition of the trustees of the Norwich University, State of Vermont, praying for a grant of land: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RIVES gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to bring in a bill for the relief of Thomas E. Parsons.

The following bills from the House were severally read and ordered to a second reading:

The joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to correct a clerical error in the award of the commissioners under the French treaty.

The bill authorizing the President of the United States to furnish to each of the States an additional number of cannon for the use of the militia.

The bill to establish a port of entry at Fall river.

The following bills were severally read the third time and passed:

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Moses Elener.

The bill to incorporate the Washington Manual Labor School and Male Orphan Asylum society, in the city of Washington.

The bill for the relief of James McCrory.

The bill for the relief of Isaac Bronson.

The bill for the relief of Benjamin Murphy of Arkansas.

The bill authorizing the relinquishment of the sixteenth sections granted for the use of schools, and the location of other lands in lieu thereof. [Yeas 24, nays 12.]

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel W. Keene.

The bill for the relief of certain officers of the United States sloop-of-war Boston.

The bill for the relief of Mrs. Caroline E. Clitherall, widow of Doctor George C. Clitherall, of the army of the United States.

The bill for the relief of William H. Robertson, Samuel H. Garron, and John W. Symington.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of Nicholas Lachance and Joseph Placide.

The bill for the relief of Sebastian Butcher, and the heirs and legal representatives of Bartholomew Butcher, Michael Butcher, and Peter Bloom.

The bill for the relief of Moses Van Canten.

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Gustavus B. Horner, deceased.

The bill for the relief of Ransom Mix.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of William Cogswell.

The bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise the claim of the United States on the Allegheny Bank of Pa.

The act to fix the compensation of the senior clerk employed in the Adjutant and Inspector General's office.

The bill for the relief of Irvine Shubrick.

The bill for the relief of John McLeod.

The bill for the relief of Charles G. Hunter.

The bill for the relief of Sarah Angel and the other heirs at law of Benjamin King, deceased.

The bill for the payment of a debt due to the heirs of Antoine Pelletier.

The bill for the relief of Thomas H. Perkins and others.

The bill for the relief of George W. Brand.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of General William Eaton.

The bill for the relief of William Hogan, administrator of Michael Hogan, deceased.

Mr. EWING of Ohio moved to postpone the previous orders for the purpose of taking up the bill designating and limiting the funds receivable for the revenues of the United States.

Mr. WALKER opposed the motion, on the ground that it was more important to go on with the land bill, which had been set for to-day.

After a discussion, in which Messrs. EWING of Ohio, KING of Alabama, WALKER, and MOORE took part, Mr. EWING's motion was rejected—yeas 14, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, Knight, Moore, Nicholas, Prentiss, Robbins, Swift, Tomlinson, and White—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan,

Calhoun, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Morris, Niles, Page, Preston, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, and Wright—25.

The bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, was taken up as the special order of the day; the question being on Mr. CLAY's motion to reconsider the vote on adopting the amendment of Mr. MORRIS, which introduced the graduating principle.

On taking this question it was decided in the affirmative, so that the question recurred on agreeing to the motion as originally made by Mr. MORRIS.

Mr. BENTON suggested to the mover to modify his motion so as to limit the sales at the reduced prices to small tracts of a quarter section and under.

Mr. MORRIS accordingly modified his motion, to read as follows: "All lands that have been in the market for more than ten years, to be sold at seventy-five cents per acre; all lands that have been in the market for more than five years and less than ten, to be sold at one dollar per acre; and all other lands to be sold at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; provided that no individual shall be permitted to purchase more than a quarter section of land at a price less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre."

On taking the question on the motion of Mr. MORRIS, thus modified, it was lost.

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, King of Alabama, Linn, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Tipton, Walker, and White—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Ewing of Ohio, Hubbard, Kent, Niles, Page, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Strange, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, and Wright—19.

Mr. WALKER then said, that as the principal object which the friends of the bill had in view had been defeated by the vote just taken, he would move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, with a view to their presenting it in such a shape as would in some sort compensate the new States for the loss of the graduating principle.

Mr. GRUNDY could not see any object to be attained by doing so. All the amendments of the committee were now before the Senate. He repeated, that unless some good reason could be shown for recommitting the bill, it ought not to be done.

Mr. WALKER felt extremely solicitous for the passage of this bill, for it involved consequences of the most vital importance to the country. He was certain that, if some measure was not adopted in order to bring down the revenue to the wants of the Government, (and this was one of the means by which that object could be accomplished,) a greater convulsion would soon take place than that which had happened in 1832. He had moved, in consequence of seeing the amendment of the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Morris) stricken from the bill, that it be recommitted; for he feared that, unless that were done, it would be lost. He hoped, then, that Senators who wished the bill to become a law would vote for its recommitment.

Mr. LINN could not perceive any necessity for recommitting the bill. The vote which he had just given was given under constraint. He had voted according to the instructions of the Legislature of Missouri. He had done so to carry out their views. He, however, approved more of the principle of limiting the sale of lands to actual settlers than to the principle of graduation. That principle operated better in the old than in the new States. He would much regret if the vote which he had given should endanger the passage of the bill. It was his opinion, that should the bill become a law, the effects of it would be to reduce the revenue of the Government considerably; and every one must see the importance of preventing a surplus. A surplus revenue he regarded as one of the greatest curses to which any country could be subject. He hoped, then, the bill would become a standing law, for it was calculated to be very beneficial in its effects on the whole Union.

Mr. KING of Alabama regretted that the Senator from Mississippi had made a motion to recommit. He contended that there was not the slightest necessity for recommitting the bill, and hoped that the gentleman would see the propriety of not pressing his motion. For although the Senator could not get absolutely and entirely all he wished, he should recollect that other gentleman, taking different views of the subject, had to give up something equally important to their constituents. Mr. K. trusted that the motion to recommit the bill would be rejected.

Mr. EWING of Ohio hoped the motion to recommit would prevail. He was not in favor of giving the lands to actual settlers only; and, even if that scheme could be carried out, it would work unjustly to thousands. He argued that the bill would not reach the objects proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi. He (Mr. Ewing) had a project in his mind, which would avoid the defects contained in this bill, and if the further consideration of the bill should be postponed till to-morrow he would, in the meantime, prepare his amendment, and offer it at that time.

Mr. MOORE maintained that unless there was inserted in that bill a provision like that proposed by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Morris) the bill would be unacceptable to the people of Alabama and himself.

Mr. BENTON suggested that the Senator from Mississippi had better withdraw his motion to recommit, and let the gentleman from Ohio prepare his amendment, in order to fill up the vacancies left in the bill.

Mr. WALKER having withdrawn his motion to recommit the bill, moved further to amend it by striking out the words "three years" and inserting "one year" for the time of residence to be required from the purchaser before his receiving a patent.

The debate was further continued by Messrs. GRUNDY, TIPTON, MOORE, SEVIER, WALKER, NILES, and BLACK, when

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 20, 1837.

Mr. HOWELL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill granting a pension to William Bowman: read twice and committed.

Mr. HOWELL, from the same committee, also reported a bill granting a pension to John M. Jewell: read twice and committed.

CONFAGRATION OF THE POST OFFICE.

Mr. CONNOR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was committed a resolution directing them to inquire into the causes of the late confagration of the Post Office Department building, made a report on the subject; which, on Mr. C's motion, was laid on the table, together with the accompanying documents and testimony taken by the committee, and the whole ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARDWELL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Tabitha Boswell: read twice and committed.

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill to regulate the pay of the officers of the United States Marine Corps: read twice and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GRENNELL, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report in the case of the heirs of Frederick White; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report upon the petition of William Thompson of Indiana; which was ordered to lie on the table, and the report be printed.

SOUTH ATLANTIC COAST.

Mr. DAWSON moved a suspension of the rule for the purpose of taking up and considering the following resolution. Mr. D. explained that it was very important this resolution should be acted upon, as it referred to the provisions of a bill before the House.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to communicate to this House, the report of the Naval Commission who were charged with the examination of the South Atlantic sea-coast, for the most eligible site for a naval depot and navy yard.

The motion was not agreed to, two-thirds not voting in the affirmative.

MILEAGE OF MEMBERS.

The House then took up the following resolution submitted on a former day, by Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-arms be directed to lay before this House a statement, showing the mileage claimed, and the sums paid therefor, to the members of this House, and the Delegates from Territories respectively, during the last and present session of Congress; and that he also procure and lay before this House a similar statement in regard to the Senators in Congress.

Mr. BOON moved to strike out of the resolution that part relating to the mileage of the Senators of the United States.

The question pending was the motion of Mr. BOON to lay the resolution on the table; and

On this motion, Mr. CRAIG had called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

The motion to lay on the table was decided in the negative—yeas 40, nays 126; and the question recurring upon the amendment of Mr. BOON, it was rejected—yeas 58, noes not counted.

Mr. ADAMS thought that the greatest respect was due to the Senate of the United States; he would suggest, therefore, that the Clerk of the House was a more appropriate officer to procure this information than the Sergeant-at-arms.

Mr. UNDERWOOD thereupon modified his resolution by inserting the word "Clerk," instead of "Sergeant-at-arms."

Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi sent the following amendment to the Chair:

"And be it further resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed, with power to send for persons and papers, to inquire into and report to this House what deduction, if any, the members of the House of Representatives have made in their accounts for per diem compensation, when absent in attendance on the Supreme Court of the United States, or on the courts of adjacent States, or on their own private business elsewhere."

Before the question was put, Mr. CLAIBORNE said that, personally, he cared nothing for the adoption of the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky, (Mr. Underwood.) He was as able to bear its pressure as any other man, but he protested against the imputation which it seemed to cast upon many members of this body. Sir, I charge my mileage by the river route, as being the way usually travelled to the seat of Government, upon a principle sanctioned by a distinguished gentleman (Mr. Clay) when he occupied that chair, and by every Speaker who has succeeded him. When my deceased colleague (Gen. Dickson) and myself arrived here last winter, we were ignorant of the rule. He inquired, looked at the record, and found that our predecessors had charged by the river route—the only one ever travelled; that the members from Louisiana and other States had adopted the same practice for years; that it was sustained here by official decisions, and we charged accordingly.

Sir, for our privations, fatigues and exposure on our way hither, no money can compensate us. We were ice-bound in the Ohio for days, and detained week after week for want of a conveyance. My colleague sunk under its effects, and I have never recovered from it. Sir, print these facts in your resolutions; publish them in ROMAN CAPITALS, and send an electioneering handbill to every plantation in Mississippi. Tell my constituents that you, who have refused time after time to grant them relief—to give them the poor privilege of pre-emption to purchase their hard earned homes; that you, who have monopolised all the public treasure; that you, who tax our labor and industry with a high tariff, and then distribute out the proceeds by millions to yourselves, and a few pitiful thousands to us; that you believe that their re-

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

BY BLAIR & RIVES.

—WEEKLY—

PRICE $1 PER SESSION.

24TH CONG.....2D SESS.

MONDAY, JANUARY 30, 1837.

VOLUME 4.....No. 8.

representatives are paid to much for travelling to the seat of Government! Sir, do you think they will disturb the honored ashes of the dead to pronounce a verdict against him? If my colleague lived; if he could be revived to occupy that still vacant seat, he would rebuke you in language that I cannot imitate. Thank God! Mr. Speaker, I represent a liberal and a generous people; none of your superannuated districts, where every thing is in its dotage; where you gloat upon a dollar, and starve upon the memory of a prosperity that is past. We have no lordly proprietors and fawning vassals among us; no miserable, half-fed wretches mourning over the vestiges of colonial affluence and bondage. Ours is a young and thriving country; mine a people liberal to a fault, prodigal in their benevolence, and who will never stoop to inquire whether their representatives are paid one hundred or one thousand dollars! Sir, we make no money here; not one man from the planting States carries home with him a cent. We do not come here to hoard up fortunes and save pic-niques.

Mr. Speaker, the people of the South are a traveling people. Your public places, from Virginia to Saratoga, are crowded with the citizens of Mississippi and Louisiana every season; and out of ten thousand who leave home, probably not one hundred travel by land. Our roads, in fact, in the winter and spring, are impassable. We have no stages there; and I myself was twelve hours travelling twenty miles on horseback, on my way last year to this city—such was the condition of our roads!

Sir, I repeat it, that the passage of this resolution would not affect me personally; but I protest against its injurious operation upon others in the distant States. It would completely change the representation in this House. It would cut off and exclude every man in moderate circumstances in the States to which I refer. Many of our public men are poor. The public men in the old States are, generally, men of fortune, and able to live here upon their own incomes. But we have no family influence in the new States; no hereditary representation; no descent of office from one generation to another; and the majority of our legislators, here and at home, are young men, without fortunes, who have risen by their own exertions. Sir, I will vote for no measure that will have the most remote tendency to check the aspirations or cripple the energies of those who have no fortune to depend upon. I will not consent to create an aristocracy here, or to fill this hall exclusively with rich manufacturers or purse-proud nabobs. Let it remain in the power of aid to come here, who have the industry, or the talent, or the merit to win their way, whether they be rich or poor.

In relation to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, it is right that I should say it is aimed at no particular individual. I have heard much; but my curiosity has never led me to inquire after names. I would scorn to examine the accounts of gentlemen; that I leave to those who choose to do so, and believe it is their duty. I will never attempt to win my way to fame or popularity, by any legislation intended to injure others. But while I intend nothing personal, I must insist upon the equity of the investigation proposed in my amendment. It is notorious that gentlemen in both branches of Congress do absent themselves, without leave, for days and weeks. They go to Philadelphia, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, and elsewhere, to attend the courts. What deductions have been made in their accounts? They attend the Supreme Court, in this city. Yes, sir! the very men who are voting for this ad captandum, this popularity-hunting resolution, go there day after day upon professional business. Sir, do we go there? Do we pocket large fees for court services, when we are sent here to serve the people? No, sir, not a man of us. Not one that this resolution is intended to prostrate ever leaves his seat here to receive fees in the courts of law: we leave that to those distinguished gentlemen who are so much alarmed about this miserable mileage. While they are making thousands out of this House, or feasting at some splendid mansion, we are industriously—perhaps unprofitably—attending to our duties here. Sir, we will not shrink from this investigation; we challenge it; let us have the ayes and noes on my amendment, and on another to be proposed by my friend from Arkansas, (Mr. Yell.) In the vernacular tongue of the West, "give us a fair shake," and we will balance accounts with you. We will leave it to the people to decide who are most censurable: the members from the new States who charge by the rout that every one travels—by the only route that can be travelled—who charge according to immemorial usage, and by the official sanction of officers acting under oath; or those who leave this House, day after day, and the service of their constituents, to practice law for extravagant fees?

Mr. YELL sent the following amendment to the Chair:

"And that said committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for reducing the compensation allowed to members of Congress to six dollars per diem; and also into the expediency of providing by law for the removal of the seat of Government of the United States to some point on the Ohio or Mississippi river, on or before the first day of January, 1840."

Mr. YELL took the floor, and said that it was obvious that the original resolution was intended to throw censure upon the members coming from the distant West, although it has not the boldness, the candor, the manliness, to avow such intention. For one, he was willing to admit that he charged by the river route, under the authority of a distinguished predecessor (Mr. Clay) of yours, Mr. Speaker; under your authority, and that of your predecessor, and under the example of a gentleman (Mr. Sevier) as scrupulous, as honest, and as honorable as any one on this floor, however immaculate they may wish to appear. He charged only for the distance he travelled, and that distance was accurately estimated, not mere guess-work. Sir, let gentlemen look at home; let them pluck the mote out of their own eye; let them cut down their own compensation to six dollars per day; and then attend to the duties of the House instead of travelling off during the continuance of the session, to practice law, or riot in luxury on their splendid estates. He was disposed to test the sincerity of gentlemen. Let them stand up before the country, and vote for his amendment, and for the salutary proposition submitted by the gentleman from Mississippi, whose address has just produced so much sensation in the House. Let there be no skulking, but give us an unequivocal vote by ayes and noes.

Sir, why is this war upon the West? What new political evolution is to be made? Who does the gentleman from Kentucky propose to effect? It is strange, sir, very strange, that this proposition should emanate from a party opposed heretofore to retrenchment, and an economical administration of the Government; a party that had endeavored to thwart General Jackson's administration, from its very organization, in all its salutary measures; a party that relies upon latitudinarian constructions alone, to justify their extraordinary assumptions when in power. Sir, this their veil of gossamer will be stripped away; and the people of the west will see in it only an ignis fatuus, an artifice to gull and delude them. If they were sincere let them vote for the proposition of his friend from Mississippi; let them vote for the amendment now submitted by himself; let them say whether they will favor the removal of the seat of Government from a lateral to a central position; from a poor, exposed, worn-out country, to a point central to the great interests of this Union; in the midst of a wealthy and improving region, surrounded by a population as brave, as patriotic, as any in the universe.

Mr. YELL addressed the House at length, and concluded by urging the adoption of his amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD observed that the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. Yell) had not been here at the last session, or he would have seen that he (Mr. U.) had not moved in this subject with a disposition to criminate any of his brother members of the House; but that he had done so with the full conviction that some legislation was necessary. The keen perspicuity of the gentleman from Arkansas, seemed to discover that Mr. U. intended to cast reflections and offer an insult to those persons who had charged by the river route. Mr. U. would assure the gentleman that he meant no such thing; but had only honestly endeavored to bring to the consideration of the House and the country, what he believed to be an existing evil; and one, too, which he considered it his duty to endeavor to correct. It was a notorious fact, not to be denied, that a large portion of the members of the House from the South and West claimed and received compensation for their mileage by the river route, which amounted to a much larger sum than that charged by the land route; and gentlemen justified themselves in doing so. Now Mr. U. did not propose to controvert the reasons which gentlemen assigned for their conduct; nor did he say that gentlemen acted corruptly in making these charges, but he conscientiously believed they misconstrued the law on this subject, and as a member of the House he considered it his duty to endeavor to correct what he conceived a misinterpretation of that law. The act fixing the compensation of members of Congress was passed at a time when there were no steamboats on the western waters, and he believed it was now wrong for gentlemen to charge by these circuitous routes. If, however, gentlemen could reconcile this with their own consciences, he had nothing to say; but he thought they ought to have some uniform rule of action in these cases; and for the purpose of procuring this uniform system he had had moved in this matter, and made these exertions, and no for other purpose whatever.

Mr. WHITTLESBY here moved that the House proceed to the orders of the day; which was agreed to.

The following bills from the Senate were, by general consent, read twice and referred:

An act for the relief of Samuel Miller.

An act to authorise the Washington Turnpike company, in Missouri, to construct a road through the public lands.

An act to authorise the East Florida Railroad Company to construct their road through the public lands in Florida.

An act for altering the times of holding the Circuit Court of the United States at Raleigh, North Carolina.

An act to allow a drawback on imported hemp, when manufactured into cordage and exported.

An act to authorize Peter Warner of Indiana, to purchase a certain half section of the public lands.

An act to continue in force, for a limited time, the act entitled An act to carry into effect the convention with Spain.

The bill to repeal certain provisions of the act to alter and amend the several acts imposing duties on certain articles was twice read; when

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved its postponement until Monday next.

Mr. DENNY moved to refer it to a Committee of the Whole; and,

After some few remarks by Messrs. INGER-SOLL, HARPER, DENNY, SUTHERLAND, and LAWRENCE,

The motion to postpone was decided in the negative, and the motion to commit was also decided in the negative.

The question then recurring on the engrossment of the bill.

Mr. DENNY moved that the bill be postponed until Tuesday next; which was agreed to—yeas 69, nays 63.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The following bills were read a third time, and passed:

An act for the relief of Henry Lee;

A joint resolution granting relief to the legal representatives of Michael Fenwick, deceased;

An act further to amend the act incorporating the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company; and

An act to authorize the New Orleans and Carrollton Railroad Company to construct a railroad from Carrollton to Bayou Sara.

The House then took up the bill for the relief of Nathaniel L. Dana and Co.

The question pending was on the engrossment of the bill.

After some remarks by Messrs. SMITH, CAVE JOHNSON, REED, PEARCE of Rhode Island, BOND, CUSHING, CAMBRELENG, GIDEON LEE, PHILLIPS, and CRAIG,

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays on ordering the bill to be engrossed, which were ordered, and were—yeas 57, nays 90.

So the bill was rejected.

On motion of Mr. GILLET, the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Eleanor S. Moore, and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in compliance with a resolution of the House of the 26th ultimo, transmitting a tabular statement exhibiting the gross revenue received on imports for the last four years; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROBERTSON, on leave, presented a petition from certain individuals engaged in the coal mining business, praying that the duty on foreign coal might not be repealed.

On motion,

The House then adjourned.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 21, 1837.

After reading the Journal—

Mr. MORRIS rose, and said that he begged the indulgence of the Senate to make a short statement respecting an article which had appeared in one of the city papers this morning. It might be considered by gentlemen as partaking more of a private than a public nature, and one with which he ought not to trouble the Senate; and could he consider the paragraph as intended, or even bearing on its face a mere private individual allusion to himself, he would not thus publicly notice it; but it went further: it was a comment in severe terms, to say the least, on his conduct as a Senator, and that too, by a citizen of his own State, and as such it required of him an explanation. The charge is (said Mr. M.) that he had neglected the just rights of one of his fellow-citizens, and refused, as his representative, to present his memorial to the Senate, and thus had treated him with disrespect. It is due, then, (said Mr. M.) to the citizens of the State, it is due to myself, that this publication should not pass without notice. It will be found in the Intelligencer of this morning in the following words: [Here Mr. M. read the communication referred to.]

It is true, sir, (said Mr. M.) that, on yesterday morning, after the time for the presentation of petitions and memorials had elapsed, and the Chair had called for reports of standing committees, one of the young gentlemen who attend the Senate came to his seat and handed him a paper, which he found to be a memorial, and which he believed was correctly published in the Intelligencer of this morning, and with the memorial he also received a note, of which the following is a copy:

DEAR SIR: As a friend I ask you to present the accompanying memorial to the Senate. As one of your constituents I demand it.

Yours, with the highest respect,

WM. B. LLOYD.

"If you do not present it please return it immediately to me in the Sergeant's room. W. B. L."

Mr. M. said that on reading the note he wrote at the bottom the following words:

"SENATE CHAMBER."

"SIR: Your memorial was handed me after the time in which memorials can be received on this day had elapsed. I return it: am willing to see and converse with you on the subject. What your rights are I am not prepared at this moment to determine. THOS. MORRIS."

He said that after he had endorsed the name on the note, it occurred to him as proper to keep the paper and send back the memorial only. He immediately sought an interview with the person who sent the memorial, with an intention of handing it back himself; and for this purpose he went to both doors of the Senate Chamber, but was unable to meet with him at either. He returned to his seat; and soon after one of the young men came to him, and informed him the gentleman was in the antechamber. He then handed the young man the paper, to return it to the author. He said, had time been afforded him for examination of the memorial, he might or might not have presented it, as justice and propriety should seem to require. He acknowledged that it was not only his duty, but a pleasure, when requested so to do, to present memorials or petitions on all or any subjects within the power or control of the Senate, and which were in proper language, not only for the citizens of Ohio, but also from citizens residing in any part of the United States. Whether the memorial in question was or was not of that character, the hasty manner with which he perused it did not enable him to determine, nor did he wish to be understood as expressing any opinion on that point; and while he considered the note of the gentleman as containing some biting sarcasms, of which he did not complain, it also contained a kind of left-handed compliment for the humble part which he took in the transaction to which the memorial referred. What transpired then is well known and need not be repeated. As to the part he took, and the observations he made, they had been correctly, or at least substantially, reported in the National Intelligencer: the impression made on his mind at the time the proceedings respecting the memorialist took place, he probably could not, nor did he wish to make an attempt, to describe.

He said he was hastily led to make the remarks he did, because he thought the proceedings of the Senate, with regard to the individuals who created the disturbance in the gallery, was wrong; but whether right or wrong, not himself but aftertime must determine; for himself, he said he had as yet seen no cause to change his opinion as expressed at the time; and he would further state that, while the proceedings in the Senate were going on, after the person was arrested, he was entirely ignorant who he was, or of what State he was a citizen. Near the close, and but a minute or two before the Senate adjourned, he was informed by some gentlemen that the person was from Ohio; he inquired his name, and was told it was Lloyd; he then had a recollection of having seen him some days before, and had understood from Mr. Lloyd that his business in the city was to endeavor to obtain the passage of an act of Congress, making an appropriation to improve the harbor at Cleveland, by the erection of a sea wall. He said his efforts, be they what they may, were not made in defence of a friend, or in opposition to an enemy; he should have made the same efforts had he known the individual to have been both a personal and political opponent; he merely intended to discharge his duty as a Senator, in sustaining what he believed to be the rights of an American citizen. Sir, said Mr. M. I think I understand this publication; it is intended to go to the State in which I live, and I have troubled the Senate with this explanation that it may immediately follow, and that my conduct, in this particular, may be correctly understood. He said, so far as in him lay, no citizen of Ohio, or of any other State, should have it in his power to misrepresent his course in the Senate. He said the peremptory language contained in the gentleman's note he considered as the mere effect of excitement, and, as such, could readily be excused; he said it was but human nature to do and say things in excited moments which we would gladly alter or amend on future reflection; he said he had no idea that the language used was intended as any personal disrespect to himself; when he read the note, he thought it would be better to see and converse with the person as to the propriety of the course to be pursued; but he denied that he had, in this case, been either negligent or unmindful of his duty; at least he had the approval of his own judgment, and should under like circumstances pursue a like course. It was very strange indeed that Mr. Lloyd should complain, when his instruction was to return him the memorial immediately, if it was not presented; and it is still more strange when, in his publication, he says that he might procure the presentation of it through other members of the body who were his friends; and the very reason he assigns for not applying to some one of them is a reason why he ought so to have applied. There is no doubt he can obtain the presentation of his memorial through some member of the Senate if he yet desires it, or if he ever did desire it. Should he fail to make a further request, the citizens of our own State will be able to draw correct conclusions.

Mr. BENTON observed that the Senator from Ohio had very satisfactorily shown to the Senate, that it was not his fault that the memorial was not presented; and he (Mr. B.) would now show that if that memorial had been presented, it would not have been his fault if it had not been immediately referred and acted on. It was sufficient for him to say, that he had good reasons to know that some consultations were going on, and that some movement was intended, and that he was determined that that movement should take the regular parliamentary course. He therefore drew up a motion, which he intended to make whenever the petition was presented, and which was shown to all his friends around him, with a request that they would vote for it when made, and which they promised him they would do. The motion was in these words: "that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with power to send for witnesses, and to examine them on oath; and that the committee be allowed a clerk, the expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate."

This was the motion which he had shown to all his friends, and which they had promised him to vote for when made; so that it would be seen that, had the petition been presented, it would not have been his fault if it had not been immediately referred and acted on. As to the intimations that had been given him, Mr. B. said he would say nothing; but he took the occasion to say, that he sincerely hoped that some gentleman would present the memorial. He hoped that some opportunity would be allowed him of giving to the public all the circumstances connected with the transactions of that night.

Mr. CLAY presented the petition of sundry citizens of Wuttsborough, New York, setting forth that a flood of foreign papists, guided by crafty and zealous priests, are annually pouring in upon our shores, and their great apprehensions of a settled purpose to establish in time popery throughout the country, in place of the protestant religion, and praying Congress to adopt such measures as may prevent the evils they apprehend; also praying for a revision of the naturalization laws.

Mr. Clay observed that some of the objects of the petition were beyond the constitutional power of Congress to interfere with. But as Congress passed the power to revise the laws relative to naturalization, he would move to refer the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary; which motion was adopted.

Mr. KING of Alabama presented the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, respecting the employment of militia in the service of the United States, setting forth that in consequence of the privations and hardships to which he is exposed, the citizen soldier is not adequately compensated by the pay of a soldier of the regular army; referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RIVES, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of Thomas B. Parsons; which was read twice and referred.

Mr. KING of Alabama, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the bill to create an additional land district in the State of Alabama, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. KING of Alabama, gave notice that he would, on Monday, ask leave to bring in a bill for the adjustment and final disposition of four sections of land in the Tombigbee country, reserved for the cultivation of the vine and olive.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, moved to be discharged from the further consideration of the motion submitted by Mr. BENTON, directing the committee to which the resolution to rescind the Treasury order should be sent, to inquire into its practical effect on the business of the country, and banking institutions of the States, and the conduct of the banks, and their attempts to withdraw specie from circulation, &c., and further moved that the said motion be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BENTON expressed his surprise at the motion made by the Senator from Mississippi. This motion was, by order of the Senate, made part of the inquiry which was sent to the committee, and was too intimately connected with the subject referred to, to be passed by in this informal manner.

Mr. WALKER said that it would be obvious to the Senate that it would have been impossible for the committee to act on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, without entirely preventing any legislation at this session on the subject of the Treasury order. The committee were required by the motion to examine witnesses, and to send to a distance to collect testimony by deposition. Now this would be a work of months, to enter into the inquiry in the manner contemplated by the motion, and the session was more than half over.

Mr. KING of Alabama said that he was aware that the Senator from Missouri had given notice of his intention to lay before the Senate the resolution in question; and it had, it appeared, been subsequently introduced, passed, and committed to the Committee on the Public Lands. All this had been done; and yet he had remained unconscious of the fact, not having heard of any motion to commit the resolution, nor of any other movement in respect to it. He had believed that no commitment would take place, and the matter had entirely escaped his recollection. Indeed, if he had been present when the resolution passed the Senate, he would have opposed its being sent to the Committee on the Public Lands, because no beneficial effect could be obtained by the adoption of that course; and it was calculated to retard the action of this body on the bill designating the funds receivable by the Government in the payment of the public revenue. If the object of the resolution was to obtain information, why, then, it was not possible to get it in sufficient time to act on it, and afterwards to pass the bill during the present session: that was impracticable.

In either point of view he should have opposed the resolution. He did not see any practical good likely to result from it, and therefore saw no use in its being sent to the Committee on Finance. He repeated, that had the Senate taken up the resolution and acted to the extent of its requirements, that important bill, which the country required should be immediately disposed of, could not be passed during this session of Congress. The Senator from Missouri was aware of that fact, as well as himself. He hoped, therefore, that the question would be taken on discharging the Committee on the Public Lands from the resolution.

Mr. EWING of Ohio concurred with the views expressed by the Senator from Alabama on the subject. He (Mr. E.) held that the resolution should have been sent to the Committee on Finance, because the topics which it embraced came more properly within the sphere of their duty. He had never seen the resolution until this morning; but he recollected having heard it read some weeks ago, and he had entirely forgotten it at the time the bill was reported. The Senator from Missouri, he conceived, should be allowed to pursue what course he might think proper with regard to his resolution.

Mr. BENTON said that the resolution was referred on the 11th, and the motion went to them on the 12th, so that some time had already elapsed since the committee had had it in charge. Besides, if there was not time enough left in the session for the Committee on Public Lands to attend to the business, was there more time, he asked, for the Committee on Finance to do it? That the Committee on Public Lands should have moved to be discharged when they made their report, was perfectly regular; but he apprehended that it was entirely irregular to make such a motion after they had reported. He would now ask of his friends to vote for sending this motion to the committee of which he was a member (Finance), and he would see if there was yet time enough in the session to obtain the important information contemplated by the motion.

Mr. WALKER'S motion was then adopted.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of J. J. Roberts, in behalf of the American Missionaries, asking that their children born in foreign countries may be made by law American citizens.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the same Committee was also discharged from the further consideration of the resolution directing an inquiry into the expediency of increasing the salaries of certain Clerks of the Federal Courts in the State of Virginia.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, from the Committee on Claims, to which had been referred the petition of the owner of the ship Alleghany, reported a bill for their relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of Michael Thornton; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

The bill to authorize certain railroad companies to construct railroads through the lands of the United States in the Territory of Florida; and

The bill to alter the times of holding the courts of the United States in the State of Tennessee; were severally read the third time, and passed.

LAND BILL.

The Senate then took up the bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities; the question being on Mr. WALKER'S motion to strike out three years and insert one, before the term of residence required of the settler before he can obtain a patent.

This question was decided in the negative—yeas 12, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Clayton, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Hendricks, Moore, Robinson, Sevier, Tipton, Walker, and Wright—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Ewing of Ohio, Grundy, Hubbard, Kent, King of Alabama, Knight, Linn, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Rives, Robbins, Strange, Swift, Tallmadge, and White—23.

Mr. GRUNDY then moved to strike out three years, and insert two years for the term of residence; and after a debate, in which Messrs. EWING of Ohio, WALKER, KING of Alabama, LINN, and TIPTON, took part, the motion was adopted—yeas 27, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Clayton, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Page, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, White, and Wright—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, Knight, Niles, Robbins, Swift, and Tomlinson—11.

Mr. EWING then laid on the table an amendment, which, he said, he would offer on Monday, and it was ordered to be printed.

After some verbal amendments, the bill was on Mr. WALKER'S motion postponed to, and made the order of the day for Monday next.

The following bills were severally read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading:

The bill for the relief of Norman Holt.

The bill for the relief of George F. Strother.
The bill for the relief of Benjamin J. Porter.
The bill for the relief of the heirs of Doctor John Ramsay, deceased.

The bill for the relief of Aeneas Munson.

The bill for the relief of Thomas Cannon.

The bill for the relief of the corporate authorities of the city of Mobile (to remunerate them for their expenses in fitting out two companies of volunteers for the late Creek war.)

The bill to authorize George Whitman, of Alabama to import free of duty an iron steam boat in detached parts, with the necessary machinery, working tools, &c.

The bill for the relief of Robert P. Letcher and Thomas P. Moore.

The bill providing for the payment of the Vermont militia who served at the battle of Plattsburg.

The resolution introduced by Mr. PRESTON, to authorize certain experiments to be made to test the utility of certain improvements made in fire arms, was considered and adopted.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1837.

NEW YORK FIRE.

Mr. MOORE moved a suspension of the rule for the purpose of submitting a motion that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the "Bill supplementary to the act for the relief of the sufferers by fire in the city of New York;" lost.

GRADUATION LAND BILL.

Mr. CASEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a resolution proposing to make the "bill to graduate the price of the public lands, to make provisions for actual settlers, and to cede the waste lands to the States wherein they are situated," be made the special order of the day for Wednesday next.

Mr. DAVIS said, as this was a very important bill, in which the whole West were deeply interested, he should ask for the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and were—yeas 60, nays 93, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Ashley, Black, Boon, Boyd, Bunch, Bynum, Carter, Casey, Chapman, Chapin, J. F. H. Claiborne, Coles, Cushman, Davis, Denny, Dunlap, Galbraith, R. Garland, Gholson, Hannegan, S. S. Harrison, A. G. Harris, Hawes, Haynes, Henderson, Hopkins, Huntington, Huntsman, C. Johnson, Kemm, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, L. Lee, Lewis, Logan, Lyon, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Maury, McCarthy, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Page, Patterson, D. J. Pearce, John Reynolds, Seymour, Shields, Smith, Sprague, Standeford, John Thompson, Waddy Thompson, Toucey, Wagner, Wardwell, Sherrod Williams and Yell—60.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Chilton Allen, Heman Allen, Bailey, Beale, Bean, Bell, Bockee, Bond, Bouldin, Briggs, Buchanan, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Campbell, George Chambers, Chaney, Chetwood, Nathaniel H. Clibborne, Cramer, Darlington, Deberry, Douglass, Ether, Evans, Everett, Fry, Grantland, Grayson, Greenell, Griffin, Haley, J. Hall, Harper, Hawkins, Hazeltine, Hoar, Howell, Hubley, Hunt, Ingersoll, Ingham, James, Jarvis, Joseph Jones, John W. Jones, Lawrence, Leonard, Lincoln, Loyall, Lucas, William Mason, McKay, McKennan, McKim, A. Pearce, Pearson, Milligan, Owens, Parker, Parks, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Pickens, Potts, Reed, Reicher, A. Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Rogers, Russell, Schenck, Steele, Storer, Taliaferro, Thomas, Turill, Underwood, Vinton, Ward, Washington, Webster, White, Eliza Whitley, Thomas T. Whitley and Lewis Williams—23.

So the House refused to concur in the resolution, and it was accordingly rejected.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill to restore to certain invalid pensioners the amount of pensions by them relinquished; which was read twice and committed.

Mr. ADAMS, on leave, presented an amendment to this bill, which he gave notice he should move when the bill came up again for consideration, and the same was committed with the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

ATCHAFALAYA RAILROAD.

Mr. LINCOLN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a resolution proposing to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the "bill granting a right of way through the public lands to the Atchafalaya Railroad and Banking company;" which was concurred in. The bill having been brought into the House, on motion of Mr. LINCOLN, was taken up, on its engrossment.

Mr. PARKS had the same objection to the passage of this bill in its present state which he had to all other bills of this kind; which was, that it contained no provision for carrying the mails of the United States, public stores, &c. consequently these corporations charged the Government an extravagant price for carrying the mails. Where these charters were granted by the States, and they were under the exclusive jurisdiction of the States, the Government could do nothing with them; but where they go through the public lands, he held it to be the duty of Congress to provide some power by which these corporations might be compelled to carry the mails, munitions of war, &c. for a reasonable compensation. It might be necessary, as for instance, in the case of the Seminole war, that the Government would wish to transport troops, provisions and munitions from one point to another; and unless some provision was made by the Government for compelling these companies to carry Government property, they might charge their own price, or even refuse to carry them. He therefore moved that the bill be committed to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, with instructions to inquire into the expediency of adding a section providing for carrying the mails of the United States for a reasonable and just compensation.

Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois said, that he hoped to be excused for a few minutes, while he would explain to the House the unreasonable grounds of opposition to the passage of this bill. He condemned the practice of detaining the House a long time on small matters: but the motion of the gentleman, (Mr. Parks) of Maine, to refer this bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was in itself so decidedly repugnant to his (Mr. R.) notions of propriety and justice to the new States, that he could not remain silent and at his ease when such question was in discussion.

The gentleman wanted the company to be charged with the carrying of the United States mail and other services to the Government, and for what? For the simple right of way, say a few feet of land on each side of the railroad. This is the consideration on the part of the Government. Is this a reasonable consideration? Is this such consideration as the gentleman would have exacted in a private contract? Mr. R. hoped not.

Such great and national improvements were not only a great benefit to the United States in her commercial transactions, but, in fact, enhanced the price of the public lands to a vast extent; the Government was making more by this improvement than the company; thousands of dollars more would be realized to the Treasury of the United States by the operation, than would be to permit the country to remain in its present unimproved state; yet, with all this advantage to the Government, the gentlemen wanted to clog and encumber the improvement with more burthens.

This seems like a settled hostility to the growth and prosperity of the western section of the Union.

Mr. R. observed, these great and laudable improvements are not only a great advantage to the United States, but an honor to the country; and should receive from the hands of Congress all the fostering care that is compatible with the rights and interests of other sections of the nation.

The railroad from Charleston, South Carolina, is one of these stupenduous works of improvement that we all ought to hail as an honor to our common country. No unnecessary impediment should be placed in its march to completion and perfection.

Mr. B said, the same observations would apply to the improvement in the State of Illinois. A company had been chartered to construct a railroad four or five hundred miles in length through the centre of that State, extending from the termination of the canal to the mouth of the Ohio. Should such notions and objections prevail as the gentleman urge, this great and national work must wither and die. This is the inevitable consequence. These companies are like all others of mankind, they will not do a great deal for nothing. Load them down, and our country is not improved.

If the United States gave this company lands by which the road was to be made, it might be right to ask something from the company in consideration of the same.

If the Government even granted a right of preemption to a part of the land over which the road would pass, a consideration with more reason might be demanded.

But this is not the case. Nothing this company asks, but a small slip of land, not to die on: but to live on.

Mr. R. hoped the gentleman's motion would not prevail, but that the bill would be passed into a law, which would be serviceable to the Government and the people also.

M. PARKS was sorry the gentleman from Illinois should have become disturbed on this subject, by the simple proposition of referring it to a Committee to inquire into the expediency of adding a provision which Mr. P. considered right and proper. The gentleman had said that this provision would be requiring these corporations to carry your mails for nothing. This was not the case; the provision simply asked them to carry the mails for a liberal and just consideration. As to the idea which the gentleman from Illinois advanced, that Mr. P. held any enmity to the interests of the Western country, he must tell the gentleman that he knew no more about it than the man in the moon. The gentleman made charges against Mr. P. which were not justified by the facts, and he hoped the gentleman would forbear from setting him down as opposed to the interests of the West until some subject came up which would make it more apparent than the present, that he had any hostile feelings towards the West.

Mr. LINCOLN said this bill had been introduced for the purpose of getting a great public improvement completed. There was no preemption granted them, but they were merely granted the privilege of locating their road on the public lands. The company had asked for one hundred and sixty feet in width, but the committee had cut it down to one hundred feet, therefore they thought it no more than reasonable to grant them this right of location. In regard to the motion made by the gentleman from Maine (Mr. Parks) it seemed to him, Mr. L. that it imposed an invidious distinction between the rights of this corporation and those granted to other corporations. No longer ago than yesterday, there were two bills ordered to be engrossed containing the same provisions as this bill, without objection from the gentleman from Maine, or any other gentleman. There had been many bills passed containing similar provisions; and he saw no reason why they should place restrictions on this corporation which they had not imposed upon other companies. He would call to the attention of the gentleman the fact that there was a provision requiring these corporations to transport troops and munitions in time of war; and not only that but the Government had the right to take the road, the engines and all the fixtures and convert them to its own use; and in regard to the transportation of the mails on these roads, he considered that in a short time they would find it to their interest to carry them; and he had no doubt, but that the transportation of the mail would be sought for by these corporations.

Mr. PARKS remarked that he was not aware that any bills had been engrossed on yesterday of the nature of the one now before the House. If it was so, and he had it in his power when they came up on their third reading, he would have them amended as he proposed to amend this bill.

Mr. MERCER suggested that an arrangement might be made with these companies by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. ANTHONY was favorable to the amendment proposed by the gentlemen from Maine, (Mr. Parks,) but he did not think it necessary to go into details at this stage of the bill. He perfectly concurred in the views of that gentleman, that it was proper to begin with some restrictions of this kind. In relation to the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Mercer,) that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads might make some general arrangement with these corporations, he considered it fallacious. When these corporations once got privileges granted to them, it was impossible for committees of this House to make any arrangement with them, unless it was made on their own terms. We have seen already the evils arising from granting these unlimited privileges; we can now scarcely get our mails carried upon these roads, when, if we had taken them in time, we might have brought them to our own terms. From day to day in this House we are pointed to precedents and examples, and it is said now, that because we have granted other railroads the privilege of locating on the public lands without any restriction, that we should do the same with this company. He would submit it to the House, however, whether because they had once done wrong, they must continue to do wrong. They now had the power of imposing a provision of this kind, and now was the accepted time. Let these corporations carry the mail at the same rate they carried other produce or property, or if the risk was greater than on other property pay them more; but let them be confined to something like a reasonable price. It was necessary for something of this kind to be done, because experience had shown that these corporations would not carry the mail unless they were paid a very extravagant price.

Mr. GARLAND of La. made a brief explanation in reference to the importance of the passage of this bill to the United States, opening, as it would, a vast body of the finest lands in the State of Louisiana. He also adverted to the fact that, unless this bill were speedily passed, it would be useless to pass it at all, and entail ruin upon the company. The charter was incorporated and bears date the 10th of March, 1835, and it was made compulsory on the company to commence their work within two years from that date, or forfeit their charter. Unless then, this bill passed soon, it would be inoperative. The company were ready to proceed, had gone on to make contracts and prepare materials, as they did last year.

At the last session of Congress it passed the Senate without the slightest hesitation, but on referring it to the Committee on Public Lands; that committee, conceiving the company justly merited some return for the advantages about to accrue to the United States in consequence of their labors, reported the bill back with an amendment giving them the right of preemption to alternate sections along the line of the road. In consequence of that amendment the bill was then lost, and the original bill was now revived, merely giving them the right of way to the extent of one hundred feet in width.

Mr. G. further explained that under no circumstances did the company anticipate a profitable return from the railroad, for its construction was imposed upon them as a bonus for their bank charter; and so far from being a benefit, would be a heavy charge. Under these circumstances, therefore, he did hope the gentleman from Maine would not insist upon his motion to send the bill to the Committee on the Post Office, since it would lead to the inevitable loss of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Louisiana also opposed the amendment on the same ground as his colleague. He described the character of the country through which the road was designed to pass, which was overflowed every spring, but it would pass a body of land, now inaccessible, that would bring millions into the Treasury. He expressed his surprise that there should be a solitary objection to the bill.

The motion of Mr. PARKS was disagreed to without a count.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, the bill was so amended as to give the company "eighty" instead of "one hundred" feet, and it was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading on Monday next.

THE MINT.

On motion of Mr. OWENS the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the "bill to amend the act establishing branches of the United States Mint," and the same was brought into the House.

Mr. OWENS explained that the bill related to the establishment of branches of the mint at New Orleans, Charlotte in North Carolina, and Dahlonega in Georgia. These several branches were now ready to go into operation, and the director of the mint was anxious for it; but, until the bill under consideration passed, the President could not appoint the necessary officers.

The bill was then read, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading on Monday next.

On motion of Mr. YELL the Committee on the Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of a memorial of the Arkansas Legislature, in reference to a change in the location of school lands; and the same was ordered to lie on the table.

The House then passed to the orders of the day.

The following bills from the Senate, were read twice, and referred to their appropriate standing committees:

A bill for the relief of Samuel Butcher, and the legal representatives of Bartholomew Butcher;

A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise the claim of the Government in the Allegheny Bank of Pennsylvania;

The bill for the payment of a debt due to Antoine Petrie;

The bill for the relief of William H. Robinson, Samuel H. Garrow, and John W. Sinington;

The bill for the relief of Sarah Angel and the other heirs at law of Benjamin King, deceased;

The bill for the relief of Isaac Bronson;

The bill for the relief of James McCrory;

The bill for the relief of the legal heirs of Moses Eliner;

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Y. Keene;

The bill for the relief of the heirs of William Cogswell;

The bill for the relief of William Hogan, administrator of Michael Hogan, deceased;

The bill for the relief of Ransom Mix;

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Gustavus B. Horner, deceased;

The bill for the relief of certain officers of the United States sloop of war Boston;

The bill for the relief of Moses Van Scanter;

The bill for the relief of Sebastian Richards;

The bill for the relief of George W. Brand;

The bill for the relief of Irvine Shubrick;

The bill for the relief of Caroline Clitherall;

The bill for the relief of the heirs of General William Eaton;

The bill to increase the compensation of the principal clerk employed in the Adjutant and Inspector General's office;

The bill for the relief of John McLeod;

The bill for the relief of Thomas H. Perkins and others;

The bill to incorporate the Washington County Manual Labor School and Male Orphan Asylum;

The bill for the relief of Charles B. Hunter; and

The bill to authorize the relinquishment of the 16th sections of land granted for the use of schools, and the location of other lands in lieu thereof.

The House then took up the bill for the relief of Philip and Eliphalet Greedy; which was rejected.

The House then took up the bill for the relief of Ebenezer Breed. The question pending was on the engrossment of the bill.

After some remarks by Messrs. LAWRENCE, CAVE JOHNSON, INGERSOLL, PEARCE of R. I. CAMBRELENG, PARKER, CUSHING, GIDEON LEE, HARPER, PHILIPS and ADAMS,

Mr. DUNLAP moved the previous question; which was seconded by the House—ayes 99, noes not counted.

The main question was then ordered to be put, when

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays on the main question, (which was on the engrossment of the bill;) which were ordered, and were—yeas 87, nays 65.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. JARVIS submitted a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of N. and L. Dana and Co. was rejected.

After some remarks by Messrs. MERCER, JARVIS, BRIGGS and CAMBRELENG.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina moved an adjournment, but withdrew the motion at the suggestion of Mr. WISE.

Mr. WISE, from the Select Committee appointed to investigate the Executive Departments, then moved that the committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the House, which was agreed to, and then, on motion,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

MONDAY, January 23, 3837.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Andrew Jackson, Jun. his private secretary, transmitting a copy of the annual report of the Directors of the Mint at Philadelphia, showing the operations of that institution for the past year, and a report, showing the progress made towards the completion of the branch mints in North Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The CHAIR communicated a report from the War Department, made in compliance with the resolutions of the 14th and 18th instant, transmitting copies of the correspondence relative to the campaign under General Call in Florida.

Mr. GRUNDY presented the petition of William W. Cook; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of sundry citizens of Wisconsin residing on Lake Michigan, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Milwaukee; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. W. also presented the petition of John W. Karney, praying for the passage of a law to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle his accounts, and discharge him from his liabilities on certain duty bonds; referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LINN presented the petition of Van Doren, Pease and Company, asking for the right of way through the public lands, for the purpose of constructing a railroad from the mineral region in Missouri to the Mississippi river; which was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. LINN presented a memorial from the Legislative Assembly of Wisconsin, praying for an appropriation of $75,000 for the construction of a road from Fort Harrison to Fort Winnebago, and from Green Bay to Lake Michigan;

Also, a memorial from the same source, praying for an appropriation, to be expended under the direction of the Legislative Assembly, for the construction of a road from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi river;

Also, a memorial from the same source, praying for the opening of a road from Fort Winnebago to intersect the road from Green Bay to Chicago;

Also, a memorial from the same source, praying the passage of a law to grant pre-emption rights to actual settlers on the public lands;

Also, a memorial from the same source, praying Congress to make a donation of the proceeds of the sales of lots in certain towns in Wisconsin Territory to those respective towns for improvements therein;

Also, a memorial from the same source, praying for three thousand stand of arms for the use of said Territory in case of Indian wars;

Also, a memorial from the same source, praying appropriations for harbors, light-houses, surveys, &c.;

All which memorials were appropriately referred.

Mr. TOMLINSON presented the memorial of David Bourd praying for a pension; referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KING of Alabama presented the petition of William Barclay, praying permission to locate a quantity of land equal to that granted to his father by the State of Georgia, of which he has been deprived;

Also, the petition of a number of citizens of the Cherokee country, Alabama, who have made improvements on the public lands, asking for pre-emptions, in order that their improvements may be secured to them: both of which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to which had been referred the memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of New York, praying for the establishment of a national bank, to be located in that city, made a report thereon, concluding with a resolution that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which had been referred the petition of Lucy Bond and Hannah Douglass, reported a bill for their relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been referred the petition of sundry citizens of Westboro, Sullivan county, New York, praying for a revision of the naturalization laws, and the prevention of the increase of popery in the United States, moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the petition of James Dutton, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which had been referred the petition of the heirs of Henry Morfit, deceased, reported a bill for their relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KENT, on leave, introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice, and referred:

A bill to amend the act for quieting possessions, enrolling conveyances, and securing estates to the purchasers, in the District of Columbia;

A bill to organize the several fire companies in the District of Columbia; and,

A bill to incorporate the President and Directors of the Fireman's Insurance Company of Washington and Georgetown in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING of Alabama, on leave, introduced a bill to provide for the adjustment of title and final dispositions of four sections of land, in the tract of country allotted to the Tombigbee Association for the cultivation of the vine and olive; which was twice read and referred.

Mr. KING of Alabama gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill, to authorize the appointment of a consul general to reside at Alexandria in Egypt.

Mr. NILES, from the Committee on Manufactures, to which had been referred the petition of sundry citizens of Boston, with several other memorials on the same subject, reported a bill to repeal the duty on foreign coal; which was read and ordered to a second reading, and 1000 extra copies of the report were ordered to be printed.

The following bills were severally read the third time and passed:

The bill for the relief of Robert P. Letcher and Thomas P. Moore.

The bill for the relief of Norman Holt.

The bill for the relief of Benjamin J. Porter.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of Doctor John Ramsay, deceased.

The bill for the relief of George F. Strother.

The bill for the relief of Aeneas Munson.

The bill to authorize George Whitman of Alabama to import free of duty an iron steamboat, in detached parts, with the necessary machinery, working tools, &c.

The bill for the relief of Thomas Cannon.

The bill for the relief of the corporate authorities of the city of Mobile.

The bill for the payment of the Vermont militia, who served at the battle of Plattsburg.

The bill to prevent the abatement of suits in the courts of the United States.

The bill for relief of Daniel Steinrod; and

The bill for the relief of Andrew Know; were severally read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of William Jones, deceased; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the fortification bill, the armory bill, and the bill to increase the army of the United States, were severally postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Thursday week.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, was taken up as the special order; and,

After several verbal amendments were made, Mr. EWING of Ohio addressed the Senate at length in opposition to the bill; after which The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

MONDAY, Jan. 23, 1837.

The SPEAKER announced the first business in order to be a memorial presented on Monday last by Mr. CUSHING, from a number of merchants of Boston, Massachusetts, praying the interference of Government in relation to the unnecessary quarantine imposed upon American vessels by the Danish Government at Elsinore.

Mr. CUSHING moved its reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and was proceeding to state the object of the memorial, when

Mr. ADAMS interposed, and inquired of the Chair if the first business in order was not the consideration of the motion to reject certain petitions presented by Mr. A. on a former day, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia? That, he contended, was the unfinished business.

The CHAIR adverted to the resolution adopted some days since, by which the House had ordered all such papers to be laid on the table without being printed or referred. The order was of a general character, covering all papers on the subject, and contained nothing which could except the memorial presented previously.

Mr. ADAMS was understood to object to the validity of that resolution on two grounds; first, that one day's notice of it had not been given, which was required by the rule; and, second, that it had not been adopted by a vote of two-thirds.

The CHAIR gave the grounds of his decision at length, which was in conformity with the action of the House, under an order in the same words, adopted last session. The gentleman from Massachusetts could now again present his petition, and it would take the course directed by that resolution.

Mr. ADAMS contended that the words in the resolution, "to be presented," could not be construed to have a retrospective operation, but would, if operative at all, only apply to papers thereafter to be presented on the subject of abolition. Mr. A. took an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and argued the point for some time.

Mr. PINCKNEY said, for the purpose of putting an end to this unprofitable debate, he demanded the previous question; which was seconded—ayes 99, noes not counted.

Mr. LAWRENCE called for the yeas and nays on ordering the main question to be put; which were ordered, and were—yeas 129, nays 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chilton Allan, Anthony, Barton, Bean, Beaumont, Black, Buckee, Bond, Boon, Boyce, Boyd, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, John Calhoun, Cambreleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Deberry, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Eber, Everet, Fairfield, Farin, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, James Garland, Gholson, Gillet, Grandall, Grayson, Griffin, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hardin, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing Lawler, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, Job Mann, Martin, William Mason, Moses Mason, S. Mason, Maury, May, McCarthy, McKay, McKoon, McKim, McLene, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Patterson, Patton, Franklin Pierce, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phelps, Pinckney, Rencher, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Ripley, Schenck, Seymour, A. H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Spangler, Sprague, Standefer, Taliaferro, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turrill, Underwood, Vanderpool, Wagener, Ward, Washington, Webster, White and Yell—129.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Bailey, Bell, Bond, Bouldin, Briggs, William B. Calhoun, George Chambers, John Chambers, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Denny, Evans, Frazer, Grainger, Graves, Grennell, H. Hall, S. S. Harrison, Hazeltine, Hoister, Hoar, Howell, Ingersoll, Laporte, Lawrence, Lay, Sampson Mason, McKennan, Morris, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phillips, Potts, Reed, Rencher, Robertson, Russell, Augustine H. Shepperd, Slade, Sloane, White, Elisha Whitteley, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, and Young—48.

On the main question, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

Mr. CALHOUN of Massachusetts called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and were—yeas 145, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chilton Allan, Anthony, Barton, Beale, Bean, Black, Buckee, Bond, Boon, Boyce, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, John Calhoun, Cambreleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Dawson, Deberry, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Eber, Everet, Fairfield, Farin, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, James Garland, Rice Garland, Gholson, Gillet, Gahan, Grandall, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hardin, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing Lawler, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, Job Mann, Martin, William Mason, Moses Mason, S. Mason, Maury, May, McCarthy, McKay, McKoon, McKim, McLene, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Patterson, Patton, Franklin Pierce, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phelps, Pinckney, Rencher, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Ripley, Schenck, Seymour, A. H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Spangler, Sprague, Standefer, Storer, Taliaferro, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Turrill, Underwood, Vanderpool, Wagener, Ward, Washington, Webster, White and Yell—145.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bailey, Bouldin, Briggs, William B. Calhoun, Crane, Cushing, Darlington, Denny, Evans, Grainger, Grennell, Hildall, Hazeltine, Heister, Ingersoll, James, Laporte, Lawrence, Lay, McKennan, Milligan, Phillips, Potts, Reed, Russell, Slade, Sloane, Steele, Elisha Whitteley, Lewis Williams and Sherrod Williams—32.

So the House affirmed the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ADAMS adverted to the inconsistency of this decision on the part of the House. A petition would be laid on the table, which the Journal would show had never been received, (a motion to reject it being pending,) and, therefore, was not in possession of the House.

The CHAIR remarked that there was no difficulty on that subject. If the gentleman did not again offer the petition, it would be considered as in his own possession.

Mr. ADAMS said, he should not again present it, and he was about to draw the attention of the House to another petition, when—

The CHAIR interposed and said the memorial presented by the gentleman's colleague must first be presented.

Mr. CUSHING said that the memorial, which he had presented, complained of a very serious grievance, under which the foreign commerce of the United States has for some time labored. It pressed with peculiar severity on his immediate constituents, in consequence of which they had repeatedly, both verbally and in writing, called his attention to the subject. Under the circumstances, he did not feel justified in allowing this memorial to leave his hands, without a brief explanation of its object, and of the disposition he proposed to make of it, which explanation he would give in the fewest possible words.

He said it was known to the House that the Danish islands are situated at the entrance of the Baltic Sea, by means of which Denmark commands, to a certain degree, the navigation of that sea, in and out, owing to the narrowness of the various passages, whether between the islands themselves, or between the islands and the mainland of Denmark or Sweden. The Sound, which is the principal of these passages, is guarded by the castle Kronberg at Elsinore, which, though it may be passed by armed ships, as happened in the case of the English attack on Copenhagen, yet is amply sufficient to overawe and arrest merchant vessels. In fact, Denmark holds the keys of the Baltic.

Denmark has taken advantage of this fact, for a long period, to levy a tribute on all merchant vessels passing up the Baltic, called the Sound dues. This tribute is paid, without any valuable consideration received by the merchant. It is not distinguishable in principle from the tribute formerly paid to the Barbary States. It is a gratuitous exaction, of the most objectionable character, and ought not to be submitted to by the United States for another hour.

Denmark has recently taken similar advantage of her position to subject our trade to another impediment, and that is a most vexatious quarantine. Her conduct in this respect is, it is understood, countenanced, inadvertently by Russia, in consequence of the fears of contagion entertained by that Power, and by the other Powers whose dominions are washed by the Baltic.

Our trade with Russia is highly advantageous to both parties. The course of it is this, in a majority of instances. A ship sails from Boston, for example, for the island of Cuba, lays in a cargo of sugar, coffee, or other commodities produced in America, conveys them to Russia, and there purchases a return cargo of hemp, sail-cloth, iron, &c. for the United States. In addition to vessels with miscellaneous cargoes, there has gone up, during recent years, an average number of forty American merchantmen of the first class, laden with sugar, carrying 2500 boxes or 450 tons each, in all 100,000 boxes, of which vessels more than four-fifths belong to the State of Massachusetts. They receive a freight at the rate of £3 10s. for the whole cargo, or £4 10s. for two thirds, and the remainder a half for profits; and the House could judge from these facts, concerning the value of this commerce as well to Russia as to the United States.

It is the practice in the Spanish colonies to pack their sugar in boxes, strengthened with strips of raw hide. The Danes stop the ship at Elsinore, compel her to put in at Kyholen, Kamsoe, or Copenhagen, and to discharge and store the whole cargo for purification, or to tear off the hide from the sugar boxes, and substitute clamps or hoops of iron. All this subjects the merchant to hazard of loss and damage in the discharge of his goods into lighters and otherwise; to the great expense of storing and so forth on shore; to many petty exactions; to an average delay of fifty or sixty days, and sometimes to a delay of a whole winter by being frozen up in the Baltic. It has been stated that a ship may be then liable to an expense of not less than two or three thousand dollars, without the slightest advantage to the wealth of the Baltic Powers, and to the common injury of Russia, the consumer of the cargo, and America, the carrier.

Mr. C. said there was no practical difficulty in the way of relieving the commerce of the United States from these evils. Our intercourse with Denmark is regulated by a treaty concluded the 26th of April, 1826, to be in force for ten years, and until notice from either party. That time has expired; and the United States now possess the faculty of interposing, by negotiation, to exact of Denmark a relaxation of all that is vexatious and unnecessary in the treatment of our ships at Elsinore.

Mr. C. said he desired, in conclusion, to express his thanks to a gentleman of New York, one of the most honorable, intelligent and estimable citizens of that great State, General James Tallmadge, who had exerted himself whilst in Russia, to have this matter rightly understood by the Emperor Nicholas.

It deserved, also, the careful consideration of the Congress and Government of the United States; and to secure this object, he moved the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CUSHMAN moved the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Commerce, but the first motion prevailing, it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Petitions and memorials were then presented by Messrs. CUSHING, GRENNELL, BRIGGS, PHILLIPS, LAWRENCE, HOAR, REED, and ADAMS.

[Mr. LAWRENCE presented the memorial of John B. Russell, asking aid in the publication of the writings of George Washington.]

[Mr. ADAMS presented twenty-two petitions of citizens of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, and New York, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, stating separately the contents of each; all of which were laid on the table, under the order of the House.

Mr. A. then presented the petitions of fifty-three ministers and members of the Lutheran Church of the State of New York, praying Congress to enact a law to secure to all the inhabitants of the District of Columbia the protection of the laws and rights under the declaration of independence.

Mr. ADAMS said as this petition did not come under the rule applied to the other petitions, he moved it be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The CHAIR decided that this petition also came under the rule of the House on the subject of abolition petitions.

Mr. ADAMS appealed from the decision of the Chair; and after some remarks by Messrs. HUNTS- MAN and ADAMS,

Mr. PINCKNEY, moved the previous question, which was seconded by the House, ayes 80, nays 71.

Mr. REED, then called for the yeas and nays, on ordering the main question, which were not ordered, and the main question was then ordered to be put—ayes 85, nays 35.

Mr. PARKER, said, it was impossible for him to determine how to vote, unless he heard the memorial read.

The memorial was accordingly read.

Mr. COLES called for the yeas and nays on the main question, which were ordered, and were—ayes 170, nays 3 as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chilton Allan, Heman Allen, Anthony, Barton, Beale, Beaumont, Black, Bockee, Bond, Boon, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, Bynum, John Calhoun, Cambreleng, Campbell, Carr, Carter, Casey, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, Chetwood, N. H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Clark, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Corwin, Craig, Cramer, Crane, Cushman, Dawson, Deberry, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Elmer, Elmore, Everett, Farlin, Forester, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, Rice Garland, Gholson, Graham, Granger, Grantland, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Hailey, Joseph Hall, Hannegan, Hardin, Harlan, Samuel S. Harrison, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Howell, Hubbley, Huntington, Hunnison, Ingersoll, Ingham, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, Lawrence, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, Wm. Mason, Moses Mason, Sampson, Mason, Maury, May, McCarty, McKay, McKenian, McKim, McLene, Mercer, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Patton, Franklin Pierce, Dutee J. Pearce, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phelps, Phillips, Pickens, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Schenck, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Sprague, Standefer, Steele, Storer, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Waddy Thompson, Toucer, Turrill, Underwood, Vanderpeet, Wagoner, Ward, Wardwell, Webster, White, Elisha Whitteley, Thomas T. Whitteley, Sherrod Williams, Yell, and Young—170.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Parker, and Potts—3.

So the decision of the CHAIR was affirmed, and the memorial was laid on the table.

Mr. ADAMS, presented eleven other petitions from citizens of Michigan, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, praying for the abolition of slavery.]

[The petitions presented by Mr. ADAMS, and the questions arising out of them, occupied the time of the House till 3 o'clock.]

Petitions and memorials were then presented by Messrs. JARVIS, PARKS, HALL, SMITH, and FAIRFIELD, of Maine.

Messrs. PIERCE and CUSHMAN of New Hampshire.

[Mr. PIERCE presented the petition of fourteen ladies of Franconia, New Hampshire, praying that their names to a petition presented last session for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, might be erased therefrom, they having signed the same under a misrepresentation; which, under the order, was laid on the table.]

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island.

Messrs. INGHAM and PHELPS of Connecticut.

Messrs. HALL, EVERETT, SLADE, and ALLEN, of Vermont.

Messrs. MOORE, BROWN, CAMBELENG, MCKEON, HAZELTINE, RUSSEL, YOUNG, LOVE, GRANGER, and VANDERPOEL, of New York.

Messrs. PARKER and SCHENCK of New Jersey.

Messrs. McKENNAN, HARRISON, FRY, MANN, BEAUMONT, GALBRAITH, CHAMBERS, MORRIS, HEISTER, PIERSON, DARLINGTON, POTTS, and DENNY of Pennsylvania.

[Mr. McKENNAN presented two memorials, one signed by seventy-three and the other by two hundred and fifty-three inhabitants of Washington county, Pennsylvania, asking for the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia; which, under the order of the House, were laid on the table.]

[On motion of Mr. HARRISON of Pennsylvania, the papers and documents of Isaac Hibb were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.]

[On motion of Mr. MANN, of Pennsylvania, the papers on the files of the House in the case of the application of Mrs. Margaret Kingsbury, of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, widow of Oliver Kingsbury, a soldier of the late war, killed in the battle of Bridgewater, for a patent to be granted her for such quantity of land as the said Oliver was entitled to under his enlistment, were referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. MANN of Pennsylvania presented the petition of Leonard Corl, of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, a soldier of the revolutionary war, praying for arrears of pension; which, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions. Also, the petition of John Shull, of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, a soldier of the revolutionary war, praying for a pension; which, on his motion, was referred to the same committee. Also, the petition of William P. Bowhay, of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, praying remuneration for French spoiliations in the year 1800; which, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. MANN stated that he had received additional evidence in William Keller's case, before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which he desired to have referred to said committee, and was referred accordingly.]

[Mr. BEAUMONT presented the proceedings of an anti-abolition meeting in Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, accompanied by a series of resolutions adopted at the same, among which were the following:

Resolved, That we consider the desperate cause of abolitionism as originating in a more dangerous source than is yet brought to light; that we believe the design to have been set on foot by the enemies of popular Governments, and regard it as the engine by which they hope either to subvert the liberties of this happy country, or spread anarchy, confusion, and division among a hitherto united people; to kindle the firebrands of discord where all is now unity and peace. Regarding it as we do in this light, we consider it the duty of all peaceable citizens to discountenance the agitators of this subject, and visit them with summary marks of disapprobation.

Resolved, That as citizens of the State of Pennsylvania, we assure the slaveholding States that our warmest feelings and sympathies are enlisted in their behalf, and that our every exertion will be used to counteract the unholy crusade set on foot by wicked and dangerous men called abolitionists, against their rights, liberties, and interests.

Resolved, That we have viewed with the deepest regret attempts on the part of certain individuals of this place to agitate this most delicate, dangerous, and exciting subject, in defiance of the known and often expressed feelings of this community—in defiance of the pledged faith of a whole people, not to interfere or meddle with the domestic laws, customs, and institutions of the slaveholding States—and in defiance of the duties which all good and orderly citizens owe to society, to do away all causes of disturbance and excitement, instead of increasing them.

Resolved, That we regard such men as bad citizens, entirely unworthy the protecting and fostering care of society, of Government, and the laws.

Resolved, That while we deeply deplore the existence of slavery, we regard it as a domestic institution, entirely beyond the reach, control, or influence, in any manner, of the non-slaveholding States.

Resolved, That we believe the agent of the Utica Convention, now in this place, to be a man of desperate character and principles, a renegade to all moral and civil virtues, and the vile mercenary of desperate, bigoted, and wicked men.

Resolved, That we consider it the duty of the present Legislature of Pennsylvania to express, in strong and decided terms, their disapprobation of the conduct of the propagators and agitators of the subject of abolition, and recommend them to discontinue their incendiary attempts to disseminate a doctrine so dangerous and unwholesome to the safety and welfare of this Union.

Resolved, That our representative in Congress is hereby instructed to oppose all attempts to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, and every endeavor, in any manner, to interfere or meddle with the institutions of slavery.]

Messrs. M'KIM, HOWARD and PEARCE of Maryland.

Messrs. CRAIG, CLAIBORNE, COLES, MORGAN, MERCER, and M'COMAS of Virginia.

Messrs. RENCHER, SHEPARD and HAWKINS, of North Carolina.

Mr. PINCKNEY of South Carolina.

[Mr. PINCKNEY presented the petition of Mrs. S. Hayne Pinckney, sole heir and representative of Captain Richard Shubrick, praying for the allowance of the seven years half pay, to which she is entitled, under the resolution of Congress, passed 24th of August, 1783; referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the memorial of the executors and creditors of the late James Roddy, praying to be released from the payment of a bond of Samuel Champlin to the United States, upon which the said Roddy was security; referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of the heirs of the late John Paul Jones, praying to be allowed their respective proportions of the value of certain prizes captured by the said John Paul Jones during the revolutionary war; referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the petition of Richard Wall: referred to the same committee.]

Messrs. OWENS and DAWSON of Georgia.

[Mr. Dawson presented a paper in the nature of a memorial, (from G. B. Lamar, Esq. of Georgia,) asking the modification of the existing tariff so as to allow the importation of the plates and other parts of iron steamboats, and canal and river barges, free of duty; which was, on motion of Mr. D. referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also a petition in favor of Col. Thomas Beall of Georgia, asking compensation for a horse lost in the service of the United States, in the late campaign against the Creek Indians; which, on motion, was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Also a communication from Reuben Thoreton, in behalf of himself, and the heirs of John Winston, a captain in the 14th regiment of the Virginia continental line, claiming a commutation of five years' full pay, for the services of the said Captain Winston: which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.]

[Mr. OWENS presented the following proceedings and joint resolutions of the Legislature of Georgia:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, GEO. }
Milledgeville, 9th Jan. 1837. }

SIR: Annexed I transmit you a copy of the report and resolutions of the Committee on the state of the Republic of the State of Georgia, on the subject of the surplus revenue of the United States, which you will please lay before the Congress of the United States.

I have the honor to be,
Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,
WILLIAM SCHLEY.

Mr. HUDSON, from the Committee on the state of the Republic, to whom was referred so much of a communication of his Excellency the Governor, which relates to the act of Congress approved the 23d day of June last, on the subject of a portion of the revenue of the Federal Government proposed to be deposited with the States, report:

That the subject referred to the consideration of your committee is one of embarrassment and complication. It is one that those who best understand the theory and practical operation of the Federal Government, (it seems to your committee,) could not have anticipated, nor its direct influence provided for in the sacred charter of compact which so happily unites these States together in a Federal Government, for certain specific purposes.

By the act of Congress referred to, a certain portion of the public revenue is tendered to the several States, by the Federal Government of the Union, for their reception, at four specified times, during the year of one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, on deposit; and the times at which said deposits are offered to be made with the States by the General Government, are clearly specified by the said act of Congress, as before referred to. By referring to the first paragraph of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, it is declared that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States;" but no grant of power is given by which Congress has the delegated rights to lay and collect more revenue than the legitimate wants of the Federal Government may require for the specified purposes of its execution.

Your committee, however, feel it to be their duty to state to the General Assembly, that if it could be ascertained, that the other States of this Union would not receive the proportion of the said revenue allotted to them, by the act of Congress, as aforesaid, that they would, without hesitation, recommend to the Legislature not to receive the proportion which may be allotted to Georgia. But as such precise information cannot be had during the session of the Legislature in time to be acted on, and it is now known that some of the States will receive their respective proportions of the said surplus revenue on the terms offered, and others may also receive their proportions, and if this State should refuse to receive her proportion, the public benefits and burthens, now operating most unequally, would be increased to a very considerable extent, your committee have, therefore, reported a bill to the legislature to receive the proportion of the said surplus revenue which may be allotted to Georgia under the said act of Congress.

But your committee, in the name and for the people of Georgia, do MOST SOLEMNLY PROTEST against the exercise of the assumed power of the General Government, by which the surplus revenue proposed to be deposited with the States was raised, and the rights of Congress to distribute the surplus of its Treasury to the several sovereign States of this Confederacy, involved in the distribution thereof; and they do most unequivocally appeal to those in the exercise of the powers of the Federal Government, so to reduce the receipts that the revenue hereafter raised may be only so much as will be necessary for the legitimate wants of the Government; and they do, in the name of the good people of Georgia, appeal to the States of this Union, to protest against the exercise of powers by the Federal Government calculated to produce discontent and dissatisfaction with the States who are parties to the compact of this Union. Your committee, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That his Excellency the Governor be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of this protest to the Governors of each of the States, with a request that the same may be laid before the Legislature thereof, and a copy to the President of the United States, and also a copy to each of our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, with a request that the name may be laid before both Houses respectively.

In SENATE, unanimously agreed to, December 1st 1836.

ROBERT M. ECHOLS,
President of the Senate.

Attest: JOHN T. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Senate.

In the House of Representatives: concurred in, 24th December 1836.

JOSEPH DAY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest: JOSEPH STURGES, Clerk.

Approved, 25th December 1836.

WILLIAM SCHLEY, Governor.

Messrs. R. M. JOHNSON, UNDERWOOD, GRAVES, and HARLAN, of Kentucky.

Messrs. The SPEAKER, FORESTER, CAVE JOHNSON, and STANDEFER, of Tennessee.

Messrs. WHITTLESEY, STORER, BOND, McLENE, HOWELL, KILGORE, and CORWIN, of Ohio.

[Mr. STORER presented the petition of citizens of Hamilton county, Ohio, praying that Congress would make an appropriation to construct a canal at the falls of the Ohio, on the Indiana side of that river: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.]

Messrs. LANE and McCARTY of Indiana.
Messrs. CASEY, REYNOLDS, and MAY of Illinois.

[Mr. CASEY presented the petition of sundry citizens of Marion and Wayne county, praying the right of pre-emption to alternate sections of the public lands, to aid in the construction of the Mount Carmel and Alton Railroad. Also, the petition of James Ochiltree, praying the right to purchase at the Government price of $1 25 per acre, a certain tract of land, upon which he has an improvement. Mr. C. also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Illinois, in relation to the relinquishment of sections 16, when they are found to be unproductive, and the selecting other sections in lieu thereof; which, on his motion, were all referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.]

[Mr. REYNOLDS presented the following memorials and documents, to wit:

The memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois presents the facts that there is considerable travel in the State of Illinois from the mouth of the Ohio north, towards Vandalia, Alton, and other places; and that there are as yet no mail routes direct from the mouth of Ohio by Jonesboro, Brownsville, Pinckneyville and Nashville to Bellville. The memorial prays an act of Congress to establish mail routes on the above line, and have stages placed on it: referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The memorial of the General Assembly of the same State, praying the alternate sections of land on each side of the Kaskaskia river, in the State of Illinois, in the lowland or bottom of said river, to be given to the State for the improvement of the navigation of said river. Said improvement is prayed to be made from Shelbyville, to the mouth of said river. And all the petitions and papers praying an improvement of the road from Golconda on the Ohio river, by Vienna and Jonesboro, to the Mississippi river. It is represented in these papers, that much use is made of the above named road, that the country through which the road passes, is thickly settled, that the people are not able to keep the road in good repair, and that a great travel is on the road from Kentucky, by John Bury's ferry, on the Ohio river, to the Arkansas. The papers are on file, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.]

[Mr. MAY presented petitions from a number of citizens of Ogle county, Illinois, praying for the establishment of a post route from Dixon's Ferry, Illinois, via Oregon city to Midway.

Also, petitions from sundry inhabitants of the counties of Peoria and Putnam, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Peoria, Illinois, by Rome, Chillicothe and Windsor, to Princeton.

Also, a memorial from the Legislature of Illinois, asking a donation of land on each side of the Illinois river, for reasons therein set forth.

Also, a petition for a mail route from Hennepin, Illinois, to Rock Island.

Also, a petition for a post route from Peru, Illinois, to Knoxville.

Also, a petition for a post route from Bloomington to Peoria, Illinois.

Also, a petition for a post route from Bloomington to Windsor.

Also, the petition of L. Kemball and R. P. Woodworth, praying the confirmation of a sale of a certain tract of land purchased by them under the pre-emption law of 1834.

Also, a memorial of the Legislature of Illinois, praying a repeal of the law exempting lands from taxation for the period of five years after they shall have been sold by the Government.

Also, a petition for the establishment of a post route from Chicago by the seats of justice in Kane and Ogle counties to Galena.

Also, a petition from the Trustees of the town of Chicago, praying that fractional section 10, township 39, N. range 14, E. be granted to the corporate authorities of said town for the purpose of improving the same, and for widening the Chicago river.]

Messrs. CHAPMAN, LAWLER, LYON, and MARTIN, of Alabama.

[Mr. CHAPMAN presented the petition of certain citizens of Benton county, Alabama, and the proceedings of a meeting held at Jacksonville, in said county, asking the removal of the land office from Mardisville, in Talladega county, to Jacksonville, in Benton county, in that State; and also, that the country lately acquired from the Cherokee tribe of Indians, may be added to the Coosa land district: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. C. presented a communication from Y. C. Woodward, postmaster at Blountsville, praying to have established a post route from that place to Benneville, in Alabama.

Mr. C. presented also the memorial of the Legislature of Alabama, asking the right of pre-emption to the settlers on the public lands, compensation to those settlers who were deprived of their improvements by the location of Indian reservations, and other floating claims; also, to graduate and reduce the price of the unsold Government lands: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. C. also presented the memorial of the General Assembly of Alabama, asking Congress to increase the pay of citizen soldiers and volunteers, so as to enable them to pay actual expenses incurred while in actual service, and compensate them for loss of time: referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.]

Messrs. ASHLEY and HARRISON of Missouri.

[Mr. ASHLEY presented the petition of Telford Taylor. Also, the petition of sundry citizens of Lincoln county. Also, the memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, asking the annexation of the slip of land granted to the half-breed Sac and Fox Indians, to the State of Missouri.]

[Mr. HARRISON presented the petition of Pierre Trubeau, praying the confirmation of a certain tract of land. Also, of Mr. Alley, praying for the right of pre-emption. Also, of Charles McPherson, for the same. Also, of Peter Bergen, praying that he may be allowed to change a worthless tract of military bounty land for one that is valuable. Also, of John Horton and others, praying Congress to pass a law to protect them in certain entries of public land which they have made. Also, of David Harvey, praying the fee-simple title in a certain section of land reserved for the half-breeds.

Mr. WHITE of Florida.

Mr. JONES of Wisconsin.

[Mr. JONES of Wisconsin, presented a petition of the citizens of the city of Albany, New York, praying for the construction of a harbor at the mouth of Root river, in Racine county, Wisconsin Territory. Also, a petition of the citizens of Durango, in Dubuque county, Wisconsin Territory, who pray for the passage of a law to secure them titles to their town lots. Also, a memorial from the Legislative Assembly of Wisconsin Territory, praying for an appropriation for the survey of a route for a canal from the mouth of Sheboygon river, to the head of Lake Winnebago. Also, a memorial from the same source, praying for appropriations for light-houses, harbors, surveys, &c. in Wisconsin Territory. Also, the petition of the administrators of Henry Gratiot, deceased, who pray for remuneration from the United States, for services rendered and property lost in the Sac war of 1832, in Illinois and the present Territory of Wisconsin.]

On motion of Mr. HAWKINS,

Resolved, that the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of issuing a duplicate military land warrant, heretofore issued to Crawford Johnson, a soldier of the revolution, which has been lost.

The following messages in writing were received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his private secretary, Andrew Jackson, jr. Esq.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I herewith transmit a copy of the annual report of the directors of the Mint, at Philadelphia, showing the operations of that institution during the past year; and also the progress made towards completion of the branch Mints in North Carolina, Georgia and Louisiana.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Jan. 19th, 1837.

From one of the statements accompanying the report of the Director of the Mint, it appears that the coinage at the Mint in the year 1836 has been 553,147 half eagles, amounting to - $2,765,735

 547,986 quarter eagles - - - 1,369,965

In gold	-	4,135,700
1,000 dollars	-	$1,000
6,546,290 half dollars	-	3,273,100
472,000 quarter dollars	-	118,000
1,190,000 dimes	-	119,000
1,900,600 half dimes	-	95,000

In silver	-	3,606,100
2,111,000 cents	-	21,110
398,000 half cents	-	1,990

In copper	-	23,100
-----------	---	--------

Whole amount coined in 1836 - $7,764,900

This message having been read was, on motion of Mr. CAMRELENG, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with an act of Congress of the 23d of March, 1829, I herewith transmit to Congress the report of the Board of Inspectors of the Penitentiary of Washington, and beg leave to draw their attention to the fact presented with the report, "That the Inspectors have received no compensation for their services for two years, viz: 1829 and 1830," and request that an appropriation be made for the same.

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29, 1837.

The message having been read, was, on motion of Mr. LANE, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CUSHMAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill for the relief of the owners of the schooner Three Brothers: read twice and committed.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of Morgan, two Kennedys and Lewis: read twice and committed.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Eli Eastman: read twice and committed.

Mr. STORER, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Sarah Pemberton, widow of John Pemberton: read twice and committed.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee on Claims, and Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made sundry unfavorable reports from their respective standing committees.

On motion of Mr. VANDERFOEL,

The House adjourned, at half past 4 o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JAN. 24.

MESSRS. EDITORS: In your Globe of this morning, my name is omitted in the list of yeas and nays on the appeal of Mr. Adams from the decision of the Speaker, on the question of referring a petition under the rule recently adopted by the House in relation to abolition petitions.

I voted in the affirmative on that question.

Respectfully, &c.

JNO. W. DAVIS.

[The same omission is also found in the Journal of the House.]

IN SENATE,

TUESDAY, January 24, 1837.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the War Department, transmitting a report from the Chief Engineer, and a report from the Topographical Bureau, in compliance with the resolution of the 14th July last.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of sundry citizens of Erie county, Pennsylvania, praying for an appropriation for constructing a harbor at the mouth of Walnut creek, which empties into Lake Erie; referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DANA presented the petition of Lucy Brooks and others; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. HUBBARD presented the petition of William Morrison and Enoch Rowley; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NICHOLAS presented the petition of —

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, the Committee on Revolutionary Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of Martin Thomas, the heirs of the late Major Thomas Swann, and of Jacob Schenck.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of William Christy; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. SEVIER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which had been referred the petition of the heirs and legal representatives of Captain Peter Craig, dec'd, reported a bill for their relief; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill to give greater security to correspondence between the United States and foreign nations; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. NILES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which had been referred the petition of John Polhemus, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. PRESTON gave notice that he would tomorrow ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Elihu Hall Bay and others.

The resolutions lying on the table were severally considered, and agreed to.

The bill for the relief of Andrew Knox, and the bill for the relief of Daniel Steinrod, were severally read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the bill to extend jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States for the District of Arkansas, was taken up and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. PRESTON offered the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the construction put upon the act of 30th of June, 1834, regulating the pay of the marine corps by the Fourth Auditor, and into the propriety of any further legislation thereon.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The Senate then took up the bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities.

The question pending was on Mr. TIPTON'S amendment, offered yesterday to the first section of the bill, "that all lands that have been in the market ten years, and remain unsold, shall be sold for seventy-five cents an acre; and all that have five years, shall be disposed of at one dollar; provided that not more than one hundred and sixty acres be sold to one purchaser."

Mr. EWING concluded his remarks. He said that the provisions of the bill did not obviate the objections of gentlemen to it, who were desirous that one should pass to limit the sales of the public lands to actual settlers. He contended that the effect of the provision in regard to granting patents, would be to increase the actual amount of profits made by speculating in the public lands. Had Congress any right to say that persons holding property shall not be liable to a State law where the property is, but to a law of Congress? He had no doubt as to how the Supreme Court of the United States would decide, if the question should come before it. The provision, then, was wholly ineffectual.

He next adverted to the pre-emption clause, and complained that it did not define clearly what was "occupancy," and argued that, should it be adopted, violence and bloodshed would inevitably be the consequence. He produced a paper containing the rules and regulations of a society of purchasers of public lands residing in the West, in regard to what they deem their rights; and he averred, that at the auction sales a person or persons were deputed to attend, and they exercised an undue influence, and were prepared and armed to obtain what they wished. In conclusion, he remarked, that he objected to the bill in all its details, as not being calculated to effect what gentlemen desired.

Mr. CLAY could see no earthly motive in still further reducing the price of the public lands, as if they were not already low enough. He adverted to the fact of the new States having increased in population beyond all calculation, and said the argument of gentlemen could not be that the Western States were not settling fast enough.

Mr. DANA was glad to see that, with some few exceptions, a disposition was evinced by Senators to legislate so as to diminish the revenue of the Government. He thought it was the duty of Congress to pass some law which would have the effect of putting a stop to the speculations now going on in respect to the purchase of public lands. Now, he knew not whether the present bill would do this to the fullest extent. If, however, it was found to answer the purposes intended by it, then unquestionably a great good would have been accomplished. He argued that it was the duty of Congress to do every thing in their power to encourage emigration to the West, and to induce men purchasing lands there to become actual settlers.

Mr. TIPTON replied to the Senator from Kentucky, and also to the Senator from Ohio, (Mr. Ewing.) He said that, although he had lived at the West for thirty years, he had never heard of speculations being carried on to any thing like the extent which the gentleman from Ohio had stated; and he contended that there was nothing to justify the assertion made by the Senator, that persons connected with the land companies, who attended the auction sales, would either shoot or knock down those who might come in competition with them. He strenuously urged the adoption of his amendment, as being what the people of the West had long desired to become a law.

After a few words from Mr. CLAY, in reply,

The question was then taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Hendricks, King of Alabama, Linn, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Tipton, Walker, and White—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Hubbard, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Niles, Page, Prentiss, Robbins, Ruggles, Swift, and Tallmadge—19.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. BENTON then offered the following amendment:

That it shall and may be lawful for any head of a family, young man over the age of eighteen years, or widow, not having received a donation of land from the United States, and wishing to become an actual settler on any parcel of public land which shall have remained five years unsold after having been offered at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and not exceeding in quantity the amount of one quarter section, to demand and receive, from the proper register and receiver, a written permission to settle on the same, upon payment, to be made to the proper receiver, of the sum of seventy-five cents per acre; and if such person, so applying for and receiving such permission, shall forthwith settle on the said land, and he or she, or his or her heirs or legal representatives, shall cultivate the same for five successive years, and shall be a citizen or citizens of the United States at the end of that time, then, on proper proof being made before the register and receiver, of such settlement, cultivation, and citizenship, a patent shall issue for the said land to the person who received such permission, or his or her heirs or legal representatives. And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged to all persons who may settle on the public lands, according to the provisions of this section, that no dispensation shall, at any time, be granted to any individual from complying with the substantial conditions herein prescribed. And, if due proof of settlement, cultivation, and citizenship, as herein required, be not made within one year next after the expiration of said five years, the said land shall again be subject to entry at private sale, as land belonging to the United States. And if two or more or more persons, entitled under this act to the privileges of actual settlers, shall apply for the same parcel of land, then the register and receiver shall immediately decide the right of preference between them, according to priority of settlement and other equitable circumstances, and where these are equal by lot.

The question was taken on its adoption by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Hendricks, King of Alabama, Linn, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Tipton, Walker, and White—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Hubbard, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Niles, Page, Prentiss, Robbins, Ruggies, Swift, Tallmadge, and Wright—20.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. MORRIS moved to strike out the fourth section of the bill, by way of testing the opinion of the Senate, whether or not they wished to preserve the pre-emptive feature.

After some debate, in which Messrs. MORRIS, CLAY, LINN, SEVIER, BENTON, and WALKER, participated.

On motion of Mr. MORRIS,
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

TUESDAY, January 24, 1837.

The resolution reported by Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, on the 19th instant, to continue the appointment of the translator of the French and Spanish languages, coming up as the first business in order, after some remarks from Messrs. HUNTSMAN, E. WHITTLESEY, CHAMBERS, of Penn. and D. J. PEARCE—

Mr. WHITTLESEY moved to refer the resolution back to the Committee on Private Land Claims, with instructions for them to ascertain the amount of labor performed by him, and to report the reasons for the re-appointment.

After some further remarks from Messrs. CARR, CAVE JOHNSON and E. WHITTLESEY, the latter gentleman withdrew his motion, and the resolution was non-concurred in by the House without a division.

Mr. W. B. SHEPARD, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill to incorporate the Washington Manual Labor School and Male Orphan Asylum: read twice and committed.

BANKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. W. B. SHEPARD, from the same committee, also reported a bill to incorporate the subscribers to Bank of the District of Columbia, and to renew the charters of the existing banks therein; which, having been read twice, Mr. S. moved that its further consideration be postponed till Wednesday week.

Mr. MANN of New York moved to commit it to a Committee of the Whole House. A bill to charter banks, he said, should be committed if any bill required commitment.

Mr. SHEPARD replied, that he saw no reason for committing this bill, as it contained no appropriation.

Mr. CAMBRELENG hoped the bill would be committed, for it was one of great magnitude, and would lead to a lengthy debate whenever it came up for action.

Mr. SHEPARD could see no necessity for committing the bill, nor did he believe it could lead to a protracted debate. He expressed his apprehension that if it was committed it would not be reached.

Mr. MANN of New York explained, that he made the motion because the bill was one that, from its nature, required commitment, but he was himself not then aware how he should vote on it, being ignorant of its provisions. It ought, however, to go where it could be debated.

Mr. SHEPARD, withdrew his proposition, and the bill was committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

On motion of Mr. HOWARD, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the "bill respecting discriminating duties upon Dutch and Belgian vessels and their cargoes, and to refund a part on the Belgian vessel Antonius," and the same, on Mr. H's motion, was recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill for the relief of Robert Dickey of New York: read twice and committed.

NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, under instructions from the Committee of Ways and Means, moved that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of New York, praying Congress to incorporate a national bank, and that the memorial do lie on the table; which was agreed to, nem diss.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Isaac Tilton: read twice and committed.

Mr. LANE from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, the amount due to the person employed under the resolution of the 3d of June last, for his services, and the expenses incurred by him in preparing a statement of imprisonment for debt, in the District of Columbia, in compliance with said resolution; or so much as shall be deemed reasonable by the Committee of Accounts.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill granting an increase of pension to Emson Hamilton; read twice: and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. JARVIS, from the same committee, also reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to place the name of Dr. John P. Briggs on the Navy Pension Fund: read twice, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. BOND, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of John McClelland: read twice and committed.

Mr. WARDWELL, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Isaac Austin: read twice and committed.

Mr. LEA; from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Elijah Barton: read twice and committed.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Mary Stroufe: read twice and committed.

Mr. MILLIGAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, without amendment, the bill from the Senate for the relief of Irvine Shubrick; which was committed.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported, without amendment, the bill from the Senate authorizing the relinquishment of the sixteenth sections, and the selection of other lands in lieu thereof; which was committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARRISON of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill granting a pension to John Casey: read twice and committed.

Mr. KLINGENSMITH, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Joseph Veazie, of the State of Maine: read twice and committed.

Mr. KLINGENSMITH, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of William Jenkinson, of the State of Pennsylvania: read twice and committed.

Mr. PATTON, from the Joint Committee on the Library, reported the following joint resolution, which was read twice and committed.

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Joint Committee on the Library be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to contract for and purchase, at the sum of thirty thousand dollars, the manuscripts of the late Mr. Madison, referred to in a letter from Mrs. Madison to the President of the United States, dated 15th November, 1836, and communicated in his message of the 6th of December, 1836, conceding to Mrs. Madison the right to use copies of the said manuscripts in foreign countries as she may think fit.

Mr. LAY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made unfavorable reports upon the petitions of Aza Merrill, Henry Hallowell, Joseph Blossom and others, Clarinda Cheeves, widow of William Cheeves, Silas Winchester, and H. Howell; which were severally laid on the table.

Mr. FRY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Absalom Wroe, a revolutionary soldier, praying for arrears of pension; also, the petitions of Joseph Chambers and Robert Chambers; which reports were severally ordered to lie upon the table.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made unfavorable reports on the petition of Nathaniel Medlock and Thomas Ramsay; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BOND, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the petition of Peter Hegy, Daniel Hart, Squire Ferris, and Thomas Look; which were ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. KLINGENSMITH, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of J. Manning; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the consideration of two bills recently reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions; the one to revive the act of 1828, continuing to those who were wounded in the war of the revolution the right of pension; the other, to secure certain arrearages of pension to those who relinquished the same; and that said bills be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Hon. JOHN Y. MASON, resigning his seat in Congress; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BELL renewed his notice of motion to bring in a bill to secure the freedom of elections.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the contracts made by that department in the year 1836; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The following bills from the Senate were severally read a first and second time, and committed:

An act to alter the times of holding the circuit courts of the United States in the State of Tennessee.

An act for the relief of Andrew Knox.

An act for the relief of George F. Strother.

An act for the relief of Benjamin Jones Porter.

An act for the relief of the heirs of Doctor John Ramsey, deceased.

An act for the relief of Pheneas Munster.

An act to authorize George Whitman to import an iron steamboat, in detached parts, free from duty.

An act for the relief of Thomas Cannon.

An act for the relief of the corporate authorities of the city of Mobile.

An act for the payment of Vermont militia for their services at the battle of Plattsburg;

An act to amend the act respecting the judicial system of the United States.

An act for the relief of Daniel Steinrod.

STATE OF MICHIGAN.

The House then resumed the consideration of the "bill providing for the admission of the State of Michigan into the Union, upon an equal footing with the original States," the bill being on its third reading.

Mr. VANDERPOEL, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the House at length, in advocacy of the bill, and was replied to by Mr. STORER.

The debate was further continued by Mr. TOUCEY in support of the bill.

Mr. MANN of New York, said it must be with in the recollection of every one that this question had been decided, on a former occasion, after a lengthy debate, and an arduous trial. Now, for one, Mr. M. believed the State of Michigan was entitled to come into the Union, under the conditions prescribed in the bill under consideration, and he did not think there was any thing like a general wish either to protract the debate or to extend it much further; the less so, as the session was fast drawing to a close, and nearly all the important business of the nation remained unacted on. He therefore demanded the previous question.

Mr. JENIFER moved a call of the House.

Mr. EVANS moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. BRIGGS inquired of the Chair, whether if the House should then adjourn, the motion of the gentleman from New York, would not be the pending question to-morrow.

The CHAIR replied in the affirmative.

The House then adjourned, ayes 83 noes 37.

IN SENATE,

WEDNESDAY, January 25, 1837.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the War Department, transmitting, in compliance with the 5th section of the act of April 21, 1808, concerning public contracts, three statements, showing the contracts that have been entered into by that Department during the year 1836; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROBINSON presented the petition of certain citizens of Illinois, praying that iron, for certain railroad companies, may be permitted to be imported free of duty: referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, and the Board of Underwriters of that city, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a light-house: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KENT presented the petition of the President, Directors and Company of the Bank of the Metropolis, praying for a renewal their charter: referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been referred the message of the President of the United States on the subject of the burning of the Treasury Department, and recommending a repeal of the statute of limitations in certain cases, reported a bill to alter and amend the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States approved April, 1790; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the bill was then read the second time, and postponed to and made the order of day for Monday next.

On motion of Mr. TOMLINSON, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Parker Cole.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Pensions, reported, without amendment, the bill from the House for the relief of Alexander Gibson, and said that he had been instructed by the committee to move for the indefinite postponement of this bill when it should come up.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which had been referred the memorials of the Legislatures of Kentucky and Tennessee, asking payment for the militia and volunteers who were called into service last summer under requisitions upon the Governors of those States, and discharged by orders of the President before marching, reported a bill making appropriations for that purpose; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. BENTON, from the same committee, to which had been referred the bill from the House authorizing the issuing certain field artillery for the supply of the militia of the States, reported the same with amendments, which were read.

Mr. BUCHANAN, in pursuance of notice given, asked and obtained leave, and introduced a bill to explain and amend the 5th section of the act of 36th June, 1834, for the better organization of the United States Marine Corps; which was read twice, and referred.

The bill for the settlement of the claims of the executive of Richard W. Meade, was taken up, and after being discussed by Messrs. WALKER, CLAY, CALHOUN, HUBBARD, KING of Ala. and WHITE—

Mr. CALHOUN moved to lay the bill on the table; which was negatived. Yeas, 19; Nays, 23.

After some further remarks from Mr. WALKER, Mr. HUBBARD submitted an amendment, providing that no more shall be awarded to the claimants than the pro-rata amount that would have been paid had the claim been passed by the Commissioners under the Florida treaty: this amendment being agreed to, the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. STRANGE offered the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a light-house at or near Boddie's island, on the coast of North Carolina.

Mr. NICHOLAS offered the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate any information in his possession, obtained through any agent specially deputed to investigate the frauds, by floats or otherwise, supposed to have been practised in the purchase of public lands in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. NICHOLAS submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of creating a new land district for the sale of the public lands, to be composed of portions of the districts north and south of Red river, in the State of Louisiana.

The bill to extend the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States for the District of Arkansas, was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. KING of Alabama,

The Senate took up the bill to extend the limits of the port of New Orleans, and the same having been read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The Senate then took up the bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands except to actual settlers and in limited quantities; the question being on the amendment offered by Mr. MORRIS, to strike out the pre-emption principle—

Mr. MORRIS said, that as it was too late in the day for him to address the Senate at length on his amendment, he would suggest to the chairman whether it would not be advisable for him to offer such amendments as he proposed to render the pre-emption section as little objectionable as possible. Mr. M. said he did not wish to take any advantage, (as he thought it probable his motion would be sustained by the Senate,) and he therefore was willing that the chairman should put this section in whatever shape he pleased before taking the question on striking it out.

Mr. WAKER then offered an amendment, restricting from sale or from the operation of pre-emptions, all town lots or sites that have been, or may hereafter be, reserved by law for public purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON made a few remarks in reference to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi, but in so low a tone of voice as not to be heard by the reporter. He took occasion to allude to some insinuations or innuendoes which he conceived the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Ewing) to have thrown out in his speech on this bill, in regard to members of Congress, officers employed in the various departments of the Government, Land Registers, &c. being concerned in speculating in the public lands. Mr. R. repelled such insinuations as unjust and uncalled for. Why, he asked, does not the gentleman point out, and name those who have been engaged in defrauding the Government? Let the gentleman speak out. If there were any persons employed in the land offices, engaged in speculating, or in any other manner abusing their offices, and robbing the Government, let them be removed. He vindicated the conduct of Mr. Whitelock, the receiver of public lands, from the aspersions attempted to be cast upon it by the Senator from Ohio. That gentleman was totally incapable of doing any thing dishonest or dishonorable.

[Here Mr. BENTON inquired whether the gentleman in question was the same Mr. Whitelock who had served in the army last war? If so, he was as honorable a man as any living.]

Mr. ROBINSON replied that he did not know, and proceeded to say that the Senator from Ohio had no right to make insinuations as to members in the other House, and his being concerned in speculations. There might be members in that Senate implicated in them, but why not make the charge at once, and point at the individual, or individuals, sitting here? and not cast censure upon the whole Senate, as it was in fact doing, when he made a general charge.

[Here Mr. Ewing said, he did not say that any member of either House was guilty of speculating in lands.]

Mr. R. continued. Let the gentleman put his finger on an individual, and he (Mr. R.) would go hand in hand with him and ferret the man out. But let the gentleman not charge any officer of the State of Illinois, or the representatives of the people here, with being guilty of mal-practices. Mr. R. did not believe that there was an officer in his State, who was concerned in defrauding the Government in the manner charged. If any such rogues existed in Illinois, as was said by the Senator from Ohio, they came from other States.

Mr. R. remarked that there never did exist, nor does there now exist, a man more honest and honorable than James C. Whitelock. He defended the character of his fellow-citizens living in the mining district of Illinois, against the insinuations made in regard to them. They were as far above a dishonest act as virtue is above vice: they would scorn, yes scorn, to take an inch of land without paying for it. Yet, these men were to be called repeatedly here, with a sneer—"Squatters—Squatters."

Mr. R. concluded by saying, that although we boasted much of having the freest Government on earth—yes, the freest—yet it was the only nation which was grinding her citizens into poverty, and depriving the poor man of his hard earned dollar—of his daily bread—and reducing his wife and children to starvation. Oh, shame! shame! on the country that would do this!

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the Senate went into the consideration of executive business, and when the doors were re-opened,

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WEDNESDAY, January 25, 1837.

Mr. HEROD, member elect from the State of Indiana, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Hon. GEORGE L. KINNARD, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

Mr. CARR presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, requesting their Senators and Representatives in Congress to oppose the purchase of the stock in the Louisville and Portland Canal; which, upon his motion, was received, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALL of Maine, from the Committee on Accounts, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution in relation to the claim of George Watterson, and that it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; which was agreed to.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs of John Campbell: read twice and committed.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, from the Committee of Claims, reported Senate bill for the relief of Samuel Miller read twice and committed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to lay before this House a statement of the cost of a revenue cutter, to be constructed on such a plan as to act as a steam tow-boat.

Mr. KLINGENSMITH, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Simeon Smith of the State of New Hampshire.

Mr. MILLIGAN, on leave, presented a memorial from certain citizens of Wilmington, Delaware, praying for an appropriation to improve said river.

MILEAGE OF MEMBERS.

The House then took up the following resolution submitted on a former day, by Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to lay before this House a statement, showing the mileage claimed, and the sums paid therefor, to the members of this House, and the Delegates from Territories respectively, during the last and present session of Congress; and that he also procure and lay before this House a similar statement in regard to the Senators in Congress.

Mr. CLAIRBORNE of Mississippi had moved the following amendment:

"And he it further resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed, with power to send for persons and papers, to inquire into and report to this House what deduction, if any, the members of the House of Representatives have made in their accounts for per diem compensation when absent in attendance on the Supreme Court of the United States, or on the courts of adjacent States, or on their own private business elsewhere."

And the question pending, was the amendment moved thereto by Mr. YELL:

"And that said committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for reducing the compensation allowed to members of Congress to six dollars per diem; and also into the expediency of providing by law for the removal of the seat of Government of the United States to some point on the Ohio or Mississippi river, on or before the first day of January, 1840."

Mr. UNDERWOOD moved the previous question, but the House refused to second it, only 38 voting in the affirmative.

After some remarks from Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. BELL, the whole subject was laid on the table, ayes 95, noes not counted, on motion of the latter gentleman.

The CHAIR then proceeded to call the States for resolutions, and the State of Tennessee being reached:

FREEDOM OF ELECTION.

Mr. BELL said he would avail himself of that opportunity of making the motion, of which he had given repeated notice, for leave to introduce a "bill to provide for the freedom of elections;" though, if it was understood that resolutions only should be offered which would not produce debate, he would waive it for the accommodation of States behind his own. Mr. E. then sent the bill to the Chair to be read to the House, which was done.

The bill was in the following words:

A BILL to secure the freedom of elections.

Whereas complaints are made that officers of the United States, or persons holding offices and employments under the authority of the same, other than the heads of the chief Executive Departments, or such officers as stand in the relation of constitutional advisers of the President, have been removed from office, or dismissed from their employment, upon political grounds, or for opinion's sake; and whereas such a practice is manifestly a violation of the freedom of elections, an attack upon the public liberty, and a high misdemeanor; and

Whereas complaints are also made that officers of the United States, or persons holding offices or employments under the authority of the same, are in the habit of intermeddling in elections, both State and Federal, otherwise than by giving their votes; and whereas such a practice is a violation of the freedom of elections, and a gross abuse, which ought to be discountenanced by the appointing power, and prohibited by law; and

Whereas complaints are also made that, pending the late election of President and Vice President of the United States, offices and employments were distributed and conferred, in many instances, under circumstances affording a strong presumption of corruption, or that they were conferred as the inducements to, or the reward of, influence employed, or to be employed, in said election; and whereas such a practice, in the administration of the patronage of the Government, will speedily destroy the purity and freedom of the elective franchise, and undermine the free system of Government now happily established in these United States, therefore, to prevent the recurrence of any practices which may give rise to similar complaints in future,

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the fourth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, no officer, agent, or contractor, or other person, holding any office or employment of trust or profit, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, shall, by the contribution of money, or other valuable thing, or by the use of the franking privilege, or the abuse of any other official privilege or function, or by threats and menaces, or in any other manner, intermeddle with the election of any member or members of either House of Congress, or of the President or Vice President of the United States, or of the Governor, or other officer of any State, or of any member or members of the Legislature of any State; and every such officer of other person, offending therein, shall be held to be guilty of a high misdemeanor, and upon conviction in any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, shall pay a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars; and any officer other than the President, Vice President, and judges of any of the courts of the United States, so convicted, shall be, thereupon, removed from office, and shall be, ever after, incapable of holding any office or place of trust, under the authority of the United States; provided that nothing herein contained, shall be so constructed as to interfere with the right of suffrage as secured by the Constitution: and provided further, that nothing herein contained, shall so operate as to prevent the President, or the head of any department, who is invested by law with the power of appointing inferior officers, from removing from office, at any time, any incumbent, who the President or the head of a department, as the case may be, shall be satisfied, has intermeddled in any election, State or Federal.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 4th day of March, 1837, no officer who, by the Constitution and laws of the United States, is authorized to appoint, or nominate and appoint, any officer or agent of the Government, shall, by himself, or by any other person or persons in his behalf, give or procure to be given, or promise to give or procure to be given, any office, place, or employment, to any person or persons whatsoever, with intent to corrupt or bribe him or them, or upon any agreement that such person or persons to whom, or for whose use, or on whose behalf, such gift or promise shall be made, shall exert his or their influence in any election, or by himself or themselves, or by any other person or persons, at his or their solicitation, endeavor to secure the election of any person or persons to represent any State, or any district in any State, in Congress, or of any person to be President or Vice President of the United States, or of any person to be Governor or other officer of any State, or of any person or persons to be a member or members of the Legislature of any State; and every such officer offending therein shall be held to be guilty of a high misdemeanor, and, upon conviction in any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, shall pay a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars; and any officer other than the President, or the judges of any of the courts of the United States, so convicted, shall be thereupon removed from office, and shall be incapable ever after of holding any office or place of trust under the authority of the United States; and every person who shall receive or accept by himself, or by any other person or persons in trust for, or in behalf of such person, any offer, place, or employment, with the intent aforesaid, shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction in any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, shall pay a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, be removed or dismissed from such office, place, or employment, and shall be incapable ever after of holding any office or place of trust under the authority of the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the several fines imposed by this act shall, when collected, be paid into the Treasury as other moneys belonging to the United States.

The bill having been read from the Clerk's table, Mr. BELL said, on rising to introduce this subject to the House, he was actuated by a motive which he thought would be favorably received by the House. He did not introduce the subject for the purpose of making an argument or addressing a speech, either to the House or the country for effect; but he rose for the purpose of making an appeal to the House seriously and earnestly on the subject of an important legal enactment in relation to the abuses laid down in the preamble to the bill just read by the clerk. He admitted the obligation of honor, which devolved on every gentleman, when he brought forward a proposition containing charges of so serious a nature as those narrated in that preamble, that they should be founded on fact, and not introduced improperly, to gratify any feelings of his own. In this respect Mr. B. felt that he stood upon perfectly secure ground; and with regard to all the charges there enumerated, he felt himself prepared to prove to the satisfaction of an impartial jury, in this or any other part of the country, the truth of them; and, further, he challenged the opportunity of adducing such proof as would satisfy that House and the whole nation. As to the charges relative to removals from office on political grounds, he hardly supposed that he would be called upon for proof; at least he would not be called upon for it from some sections of the Union; he knew, however, that in other sections it was denied that removals were made for opinion's sake alone. As to the charge that the federal officers of the Government had interfered in elections, and particularly in the late Presidential election, and in many cases had taken a very active part, he presumed no gentleman would deny it. Then the only charge contained in the preamble which he might be called upon to sustain by proof, was that which related to the distribution of offices and employments to political friends on pledges or contracts, either expressly understood, or clearly implied. In making these charges he knew the responsibility he assumed; he knew the responsibility which must attach to any gentleman in that House or in the country, when he attempted seriously to support these charges. He knew perfectly well the difficulty of bringing proof of these charges, when there was a powerful influence to intimidate on the one hand, and scarcely any to support on the other. He knew how difficult it was in communities and in States, where crime was known to exist, to bring home the proof of it; yet, with all these staring him in the face, he conscientiously and seriously reaffirmed the charges. He did not wish to be misunderstood as to the extent and nature of these charges.

He was not so illiberal as to attribute bad motives or corruption when appointments were made among the political friends of the person appointing. Offices were created from time to time, and appointments made, and every one had to submit to it. He never had, and did not now mean to complain, when appointments were made among those who had always been political friends of the administration, provided they were capable and honest; but when appointments were made from the ranks of political opponents, and the appointee thereupon changed his political sentiments, and became a friend from an assailant, under these circumstances he thought it conclusive that corruption existed. This was the best evidence of corruption which could be adduced.

The remarks were here arrested by a motion of Mr. VANDERPOEL to proceed to the orders of the day.

STATE OF MICHIGAN.

The House then resumed the consideration of the bill from the Senate, to provide for the admission of the State of Michigan into the Union, upon an equal footing with the original States.

The question pending was the demand for the previous question, made yesterday by Mr. MANN of New York, and the motion of Mr. JENIFER for a call of the House.

Mr. JNIFER withdrew his motion for a call of the House.

Mr. MERCER inquired of the Speaker whether, if the demand for the previous question should be seconded, the question could not be separately taken on the preamble and the bill?

The CHAIR replied that there was no precedent for such a division.

Mr. MANN asked if, when the bill was on its passage, after its engrossment, a motion to recommend it, with instructions to strike out the preamble, would not be in order?

The CHAIR. Every member of the House must know that that motion would be in order.

The House seconded the demand for the previous question—ayes 84, noes 67; and the question recurring on ordering the main question to be put

Mr. THOMAS rose, and said he had voted in the negative on the seconding the previous question. But now the position of the bill had been changed, and he hoped the house would not refuse to order that the main question be now put. If that was done the further action of the House, on the bill would be postponed until to-morrow. The bill would be open for discussion after it has been read a third time, on the question of its final passage. By ordering the main question the House will not close the debate, but it will signify a willingness to take the bill as it is without further amendment.

The question was then taken on ordering the bill to a third reading, and was decided in the affirmative—yeas 148, nays 58, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. John Quincy Adams, Anthony, Ash, Barton, Bean, Bell, Black, Bockee, Boudin, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Burns, Bynum, John Calhoun, Campbell, Carr, Casey, Chapman, Chapin, N. H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Denny, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Duplar, Fairfield, Farlin, Forester, Fowler, Fuller, Galbraith, James Garland, Rice Garland, Gholson, Gillet, Glascock, Graham, Grantland, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Samuel S. Harrison, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Holsey, Holt, Howard, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, Lay-Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Thomas Lee, Luke Lee, Leonard, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lygon, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, William Mason, Moses Mason, McKim, Miller, Montgomery, Morgan, Morris, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parks, Patterson, Franklin Pierce, Dutee J. Pearce, Peyton, Phelps, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Sickles, Smith, Sprague, Standefer, Sutherland, Taylor, Thomas, J. Thompson, Toucey, Towus, Turritt, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Ward, Wardwell, Webster, Weeks, White, Thomas T. Whitlesey, and Yell—148.

NAYS—Messrs. Herman Allen, Bailey, Bond, Briggs, William B. Calhoun, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chaney, Chetwood, Darlington, Dawson, Deberry, Elmore, Evans, Grayson, Griffin, Hildall Hall, Hardin, Harper, Hazeltine, Heister, Hopkins, Ingersoll, James, Jarvis, Jenifer, Lawrence, Lewis, Lincoln, Love, Sampson Mason, McCary, McKennan, McLene, Mercer, Milligan, James A. Pearce, Phillips, Pickens, Pinckney, Potts, Reed, Rencher, Russell, Slade, Sloane, Steele, Storer, Talliaferro, Waddy Thompson, Underwood, Vinton, Elisha Whitlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, Wise, and Young—58.

So the bill was ordered to be read a third time to-day.

The bill was then read a third time, and the question being on its final passage,

Mr. JENIFER inquired if the bill was then open for discussion?

The CHAIR replied that its merits were open in the broadest latitude at that stage.

Mr. JENIFER then addressed the House for some time in opposition to the preamble of the bill, and contended against the validity of the second convention, principally on the ground that that assemblage itself had protested against the constitutionality of the act of Congress of 1836. Mr. J. then went into a history of certain late proceedings in Maryland, upon which he commented at some length.

Mr. THOMAS replied to his colleague, and went into a statement showing the irregularities of the present Constitution and Government of the State of Maryland.

The debate was further continued by Mr. HOWARD and Mr. PEARCE of Maryland.

Mr. CUSHMAN then obtained the floor, and said he would respectfully submit to the House, whether this question had not been sufficiently debated. He was himself perfectly satisfied that it had been, and he therefore moved the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered severally without a division.

Mr. CHAPIN asked for the yeas and nays on the main question, being the passage of the bill, which were ordered, and were, yeas 132, nays 43 as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Chilton Allan, Anthony, Ash, Ash-ley, Barton, Bean, Beaumont, Bell, Black, Bockee, Boudin, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Burns, John Calhoun, Campbell, Carr, Carter, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Connor, Cramer, Cushman, Denny, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Einer, Farlin, Forester, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, James Garland, Rice Garland, Gholson, Gillet, Glascock, Graham, Grantland, Grayson, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Herod, Howard, Howell, Hubley, Hunt, Huntington, Huntsman, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lay, Joshua Lee, Thomas Lee, Luke Lee, Leonard, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, Abijah Mann, Jr. Job Mann, William Mason, Moses Mason, McComas, McKay, McKim, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Muhlenberg, Page, Parks, Patterson, Patton, Dutee J. Pearce, Peyton, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Sprague, Standefer, Sutherland, Taylor, Thomas, J. Thompson, Toucey, Turritt, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Ward, Wardwell, Washington, Webster, Weeks, White, Thomas T. Whitlesey, and Yell—132.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Bond, John Chambers, Chetwood, Corwin, Crane, Darlington, Dawson, Elmore, Evans, Graves, Griffin, Hardin, Harlan, Hazeltine, Heister, Hoar, Hopkins, Ingersoll, James, Jarvis, Jenifer, Lawrence, Lewis, Lincoln, S. Mason, Mercer, Milligan, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Phillips, Pickens, Potts, Reed, Russell, Steel, Storer, Talliaferro, Waddy Thompson, Underwood, Elisha Whitlesey, Lewis Williams and Sherrod Williams—43.

So the bill was passed.

[When the name of Mr. Wise was called, that gentleman rose in his place, and asked to be excused from voting, on the ground that he had been absent during the whole discussion on the bill, (on the select committees, of which Mr. W. is a member,) which was granted.]

The CHAIR presented a communication from the War Department, transmitting 250 copies of the official Army Register for the use of the members.

On motion of Mr. McKIM,

The House adjourned at 6 o'clock, P. M.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 26, 1837.

The CHAIR presented a communication from the Adjutant General, transmitting a certain number of copies of the Army Register; which, on motion of Mr. GRUNDY, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of H. Quimby, asking the assistance of Congress to test the utility of an apparatus invented by him, by which the quantity of water in a steam boiler may be better ascertained than at present.

Mr. D. moved that the petition be referred to a select committee of seven, which was agreed to; and,

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the Chair was directed to appoint the committee.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of Samuel C. Reeve, recommending telegraphic communications; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANA presented the petition of Gad Humphreys; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, the petition and papers of Dr. Samuel White, on the files of the last session, were again referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HENDRICKS presented the memorial and joint resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, asking an additional appropriation for carrying on the public works at Michigan city: referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. RIVES, the petition and papers of Stephen McCormick, on the files of the last session, were again referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LINN presented the memorial of a number of the people of Wisconsin, asking for an appropriation for certain objects of internal improvement, and to confine the sale of the public lands to actual settlers and in limited quantities; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. WHITE, the petition of William Parkes, on the files of the last session, was again referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRIS rose, and said that it would be recollected by the Senate, that a few days since, when the memorial from the grand jury of the District of Columbia was presented, he then told the Senate that he was in possession of a great number of abolition petitions. Now he would give notice that to-morrow he should take the opportunity of presenting them.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the petition of William Rempton, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same; also, from the petition of Francis Eppls, and that he have leave to withdraw his petition and papers; which was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the memorial of John Denison, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same; also, from the bill for the relief of H. Harris, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

Mr. TOMLINSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill for the relief of Frances Barker, the widow of Isaac Barker, reported the same, with an amendment; also asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Eliza Haywood, praying for a pension, the widow of — Haywood; which was agreed to.

Mr. TALLMADGE presented a memorial from citizens of Hyde Park, praying for a survey of the Hudson river, and for the erection of buoys, beacons, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the bill from the House for the relief of Joseph Young, reported the same without amendment, and said that he was instructed to move its indefinite postponement when it should come up.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, the same committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition and papers of the heirs of Morgan Alexander.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported without amendment the bill to amend the act to quiet possessions, enrol conveyances, and to secure the estates of purchasers in the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. LINN, the bill providing for the adjustment of certain claims to reservations of lands under the fourteenth article of the treaty with the Choctaw Indians, was taken up, and made the order of the day for to-morrow week.

Mr. MORRIS submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the nature and character of the claim of — to the tract of land on which the fort at Chicago, in the State of Illinois, is situate; and that they also inquire whether any part of the claim or lot of land has been disposed of or transferred, for the purpose of creating an interest in order to procure the confirmation of said claim; and that the Commissioner of the General Land Office proceed no further in the examination of said claim until the above inquiry is had, and that the committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to examine witnesses on oath.

Mr. EWING of Illinois offered the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting the right of pre-emption to the State of Illinois, to all unappropriated public lands lying within the distance of three miles of any of the following public works about to be undertaken by the said State, viz: the Great Wabash, Illinois, Rock, Kaskaskia, Embarrass, Little Wabash, and Kankakee rivers; the Central railroad, from the mouth of Ohio river to Galena, via the western terminus of the Illinois and Michigan canal; the Alton and Shawanetown railroad, the Alton and Mount Carmel railroad, and the railroad from Quincy, by Jacksonville, Springfield, Decatur, and Danville, to the State line.

Mr. GRUNDY submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to ascertain and report a mode of examining the votes for President and Vice Pres-sident of the United States, and of notifying the persons elected of their election.

On motion of Mr. TALLMADGE, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition and papers of Payne Perry; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the bill supplementary to the act to amend the judicial system of the United States, was taken up, and made the special order of the day for Tuesday next.

The bill to extend the limits of the port of New Orleans, was read the third time and passed.

The bill for the relief of the executrix of Richard W. Meade, was taken up on the third reading, and on motion of Mr. HUBBARD, it was laid on the table.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, was taken up as the special order of the day.

Mr. WALKER moved an amendment to except from the operations of the bill, and from pre-emptions, all lands occupied under the authority of the United States, and that have been, or may be, reserved by law for any special purpose, or for town lots; which amendment was agreed to.

After some remarks from Mr. RUGGLES,

On motion of Mr. WALKER, the amendment was further amended, by inserting a proviso that no written or verbal contract, mortgage, or other incumbrance, made with a view to evade the provisions of this act, shall be binding.

Mr. WHITE moved an amendment, striking out the provision permitting a purchaser of the public lands at any time within five years to relinquish the land purchased and receive back the purchase money.

After some remarks in support of this amendment, by Messrs. WHITE, LINN, GRUNDY, and CLAY, it was adopted.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY the bill was here laid on the table, to allow him to make a motion with regard to the qualification of the Michigan Senators.

A message was then received from the President of the United States, by Mr. ANDREW JACKSON, Jr. his Secretary, stating that the President had signed the bill for the admission of the State of Michigan into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The credentials of the Hon. JOHN NORVELL and the Hon. LUCIUS LYON, elected by the Legislature of the State of Michigan on the 19th November, 1835, to represent that State in the Senate of the United States, were read by the Secretary; and,

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the usual oath to support the Constitution of the United States was administered to Messrs. NORVELL and LYON by the Vice President, and they took their seats in the Senate.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY the land bill was again taken up; when

Mr. BUCHANAN submitted an amendment to allow to fathers, in each of the States, having children between the ages of twelve and twenty-one years, or to mothers of such children, whose fathers are dead, to enter a section of land in the name of each child, the patent not to issue until the child, in whose name the entry is made, becomes of age.

Mr. BUCHANAN said that he had expected that the Committee on Public Lands would have submitted an amendment of the character of the one he had just offered; but inasmuch as they had not done so, he felt it his duty to offer it, and to state, concisely, the reasons why, in his opinion, it should be adopted. In the old States of this Union it was well known that when a father of a family gets a little forward in the world, there was nothing more common than for him to go into the new States for the purpose of purchasing land as a provision for his children when they became of age. These people (Mr. B. said) seldom purchased more than a half section of land; and if gentlemen wished to restrict the operations of his amendment to this quantity, he should have no great objection to it. The land is thus purchased, (continued Mr. B.) and as sure as the child for whom it is intended becomes twenty-one years of age, he goes out to the West with his wagon and horses, and farming implements, and becomes the very best settler that the new States can have. No speculation was intended by this mode of purchase, and none could possibly take place under it. It would be a great advantage to the citizens of the old States to permit them in this way to provide for their children, and he apprehended that the new States would be equally benefitted by being thus provided with such a most meritorious class of settlers as the sons of the industrious and respectable farmers of the old States. Mr. B. said he had hoped that the Committee on Public Lands would have offered this amendment; but, as they had not done so, he had felt it his duty to submit it to the consideration of the Senate, trusting that no objection would be made to it.

Mr. CLAY said, that he was very glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania had offered the amendment, for it could not have come from a more appropriate quarter. But, he would ask, why there was to be any greater privilege in the case of a child of a provident and attentive father, than in that of a son or daughter, who might be left orphans? Did not every consideration of humanity carry out the principle to the grandchild as well as to the child? He would suggest, then, to the Senator from Pennsylvania, so to modify his amendment as to embrace that relation as well as the others.

Mr. WALKER said, that it would be recollected by the Senate, that among the greatest objections to the bill was that raised by the Senator from Ohio, (Mr. Ewing,) that it would increase, instead of diminishing, the land sales, by facilitating the entry of land; that individuals would not only enter lands in their own names, but in the names of all their children. Now if these objections of the Senator from Ohio would apply to the bill itself, they would undoubtedly apply with still greater force to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. He did not himself, however, agree with the Senator from Ohio, and would have no objection to the amendment of his friend from Pennsylvania, with a slight modification. The bill itself (Mr. W. said) provided for the entry of lands by minors, after arriving at the age of eighteen years. Therefore, if the gentleman would confine his amendment to minors between the ages of twelve and eighteen years, he would agree to it.

Mr. EWING of Ohio said his objection to the bill of the Senator from Mississippi was not to any of the particulars to which the gentleman had just referred, but it was that a father could enter in the name of his wife or child, a tract of land, provided he lived near it, but that fathers living in the old States had not that privilege. Now he (Mr. Ewing) conceived this to be a great objection to the bill, for it was giving a great preference in favor of actual settlers, over those living at a distance; it was, in fact, placing it in the power of those resident on the spot, to monopolise to the amount of three-fold or five-fold more of the public lands than those living at a remote distance from them. He thought, then, that the bill should be modified, rather than the amendment, and so as to confine the entry of lands to parents in behalf of their children, who may be between the age of twelve and twenty-one years.

Mr. BUCHANAN remarked, that he did not wish to embarrass the bill by offering any provision to it which he did not deem absolutely necessary, in order to prevent a public good from being converted into a public evil; but he could not, representing, as he did, an agricultural community, (many members of which were frequently going West with their children, whose welfare was of some importance,) forego this opportunity of proposing this amendment. He should like to know what course to pursue which would render his amendment successful. If so, he would move to amend the bill as reported by the committee, by saying that the individual should enter at the age of twenty-one, instead of eighteen. He thought it was but proper that a youth, before arriving at the age of twenty-one, ought not to have any inducement offered him to quit the paternal roof. He entertained the opinion that policy and prudence required this course; and, if he did not think that there was some danger to be apprehended in regard to the loss of the amendment, he should certainly make the modification which had been suggested to him; and if any gentleman would move to strike out "eighteen," and insert "twenty-one," he (Mr. B.) would then vote to carry his proposition into execution.

Mr. LINN suggested to the Senator from Pennsylvania that his amendment, as it stood now, would be more likely to receive the vote of the majority than if modified. Mr. L. said that if the amendment should prevail, it would be at variance with the whole object of the bill.

Mr. MORRIS contended that if the amendment should prevail, the title of the bill should be changed. It ought to be entitled "A bill to encourage the settlement of the public lands by law." He repeated that if the amendment should be adopted, it would entirely destroy the great object intended to be accomplished by the bill, and open wide the flood-gates of speculation.

Mr. BAYARD remarked, that the effect of the bill, as it at present stood, was to confine its benefits entirely to the inhabitants of the neighborhood, to the exclusion, in fact, of those living at a distance. He maintained that the right of entering lands should be given to the uncles of children, and also to guardians as well as fathers and grandfathers, in behalf of the child or children, whose parent may be dead.

Mr. MORRIS hoped the amendment, or substitute, for the original bill, as reported by the Committee on Public Lands, and amended, together with the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, might be printed, and the further consideration of the subject postponed till to-morrow.

Mr. WALKER hoped not. If the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania prevailed, he would have no objection to postpone the further consideration of the bill till to-morrow.

Mr. LINN wanted the bill to be what it purported, to confine the sales of the public lands to actual settlers. That was all he desired.

Mr. BUCHANAN observed, that with all the favorable feelings he had for the interests of the West, he did not know that he could vote for this bill, unless it contained some such provision as the one he had submitted. Was this amendment to open wide the flood-gates of speculation? What was there in it to authorize such a prediction? How could speculation possibly be practised under it? If gentlemen thought the quantity of land too great, he cared not if they reduced it below a section, for so far as his constituents were concerned, he did not believe that one in a hundred of them ever purchased more than a quarter of a section.

How (Mr. B. asked) could speculation ever be attempted under this provision? No patent was to issue until the child for whom the land was purchased, arrived at the age of twenty-one years; and was it likely that any father would travel from the Atlantic to the extreme West to buy land for his child, for which he is to receive no patent for eight or ten years, encountering all the trouble and expense of the journey with a view of making a speculation? The very circumstance that no patent is to issue until the child becomes twenty-one years of age, would of itself prevent the possibility of a speculation. It was asking a little too much, said Mr. B. to expect us of the old States to vote for a bill of this kind, without some such provision. He did not say that he would not vote for the bill without the adoption of the principle he contended for, but he did say that after the bill was sufficiently matured, and was out of committee, he would weigh well all its advantages and disadvantages, and that the absence of this provision might turn the scale against it. Mr. B. suggested that it would be better to postpone the bill for the present, until all the amendments were printed. He did not know at present whether he would or would not make a modification of his amendment; but he certainly would contend for the principle it contained with all the ability he possessed.

Mr. KING of Alabama made some observations in favor of the motion of the Senator from Ohio, (Mr. Morris.) He wished to see the bill in print in the shape in which it now stood, in order to thoroughly understanding it before voting, or agreeing to it as amended in committee. It was not now the bill it was as it came from the Committee on Public Lands, for it had undergone many amendments.

and though a number of them were said to be verbal, yet he apprehended that they had materially changed the character of the original bill. The gentleman from Ohio said the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Buchanan) would change the whole character of the bill, and if so he could not vote for it; for the principal object they all had in view, was to check speculation, lessen the great amount of the land sales, and thus diminish a too redundant revenue. These were the objects for which the bill was introduced, and he wished, by having the bill printed as it then stood, to see how far it retained its original character. He was not disposed to enter into an examination of all the provisions of the bill now. He was not prepared to do so in consequence of the changes that had been made in it by the many amendments which were called verbal, and which no Senator had been able to keep an exact account of. It was, therefore, necessary that the whole subject should be distinctly presented to the Senate before taking any further question on it; as nothing could be gained by hurrying the question before the details were arranged. He wished, further, to see what modification the Senator from Pennsylvania would give to his amendment.

After some remarks from Mr. WALKER in opposition to the postponement—

The question was taken on Mr. MORRIS'S motion, and the bill was postponed till to-morrow, and the amendments of the committee, with the amendment proposed by Mr. BUCHANAN, were ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. WALKER the Senate took up the bill to designate and limit the funds which shall be received for the public revenue: yeas 33, nays 12.

Mr. RIVES submitted an amendment, that from and after the 30th Dec. 1841, the notes of no banks shall be received for the public dues which issue notes of a less denomination than twenty dollars.

After a debate, in which Messrs. RIVES, MORRIS, WALKER, EWING of Ohio, and BAYARD, took part, Mr. RIVES'S amendment was adopted—yeas 25, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King of Georgia, Linn, Lyon, Niles, Norvell, Page, Preston, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, White, and Wright—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Hendricks, Kent, King of Alabama, Knight, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, and Tomlinson—18.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill from the House to change the title of certain officers of the Marine Corps, was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

THURSDAY, January 26, 1837.

Some conversation took place between Mr. A. H. SHEPPERD, Mr. E. WHITTLESEY and the CHAIR, in relation to the entry made on the journal of Mr. WISE'S being excused from voting on the Michigan bill, on the ground of his absence on a select committee. The journal having been ordered to be amended by setting forth that reason, the conversation dropped.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs of William Walters, deceased: read twice and committed.

HOLLAND TRADE.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill respecting discriminating duties upon Dutch and Belgian vessels and their cargoes; which was read twice.

Mr. H. moved that it be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; which, after a brief explanation of its provisions and the necessity of its passage by that gentleman, and a few words from Mr. PARKER, was agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Manufactures, reported Senate bill to authorize George Whitman to import, free of duty, the necessary materials for the construction of an iron steamboat, with a recommendation that said bill do not pass; which was committed.

Mr. THOMSON of Ohio, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, with sundry amendments, a bill from the Senate, fixing the compensation of the senior clerks employed in the Adjutant General's and Inspector General's offices; which was committed.

Mr. PINCKNEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill for the relief of Frederick Fry and Co.: read twice and committed.

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported with an amendment, Senate bill to authorize the Washington County Turnpike company, in the State of Missouri, to locate and construct a road through the public lands. The original bill granted a right of way one hundred and eighty feet wide, and the amendment proposed to strike out the words "and eighty," so as to leave it "one hundred feet wide." The amendment having been concurred in, Mr. H. moved that the bill be ordered to a third reading.

Mr. HARDIN expressed a wish to have the charter read to the House.

Mr. HARRISON replied that he had not a copy in his possession, but his recollection of it was that the company had ten years to complete the road, and five to commence it, three of which had expired. The road was to be from thirty-five to forty miles in length, and opened a direct communication between the mineral tract in Missouri and the Mississippi river, and all the bill provided for was a right of way.

Mr. HOWELL had objections to the bill. The first was, that it granted a greater width than was given to other roads of the same character; and the next, and more important, was that the survey was not required to be made till the road was completed, which would have the effect thereby of suspending all the sales of the public lands in the immediate vicinity, or any where in the vicinity. Mr. H. would therefore suggest the propriety of so amending the bill as to require the survey and location to be returned as soon as made.

Mr. HARDIN objected to the bill on another ground: its want of limitation as to the number of depots the company might construct on the public lands; and he suggested its commitment to a Committee of the Whole House, and made that motion.

Mr. BOON suggested that if the bill were committed, it be recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HARDIN accordingly made that motion.

Mr. PARKS said a communication was expected from the Postmaster General on the subject of securing the transportation of the mails on those railroads; and he hoped no more bills granting right of way would be passed till then.

Mr. HARDIN'S motion was then put and agreed to, and the bill recommitted.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Ichabod Beardsley: read twice and committed.

Mr. HANEGAN, on leave, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Indiana, asking for an appropriation to complete the public works at Michigan City, Indiana; which, on his motion was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. VANDERPOEL moved a suspension of the rule, for the purpose of submitting a resolution changing the daily hour of meeting to 11 o'clock, A. M. lost.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Henry Thompson, praying for a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JAMES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Anna Smith; which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. THOMSON of Ohio, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the petition of Augusta Caroban; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Jonathan Herrick; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of George Allen; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, the Committee on Revolutionary Claims were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Chloris Doughty, and the petition to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. ADAMS, the Committee on Manufactures was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Sholterosli Von Shoulty, praying compensation for an improvement in the mode of manufacture and purification of salt; and the same was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURRILL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of George Geortner; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WEEKS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report upon the petition of Thomas Houghton and others, heirs of James Houghton; which was laid upon the table.

FREEDOM OF ELECTIONS.

The House then resumed the consideration of the unfinished business, being the motion of Mr. BELL for leave to introduce "a bill to secure the freedom of elections."

Mr. BELL said, that at the the time the House went to the orders of the day yesterday, he was making such a statement in relation to the charges contained in the preamble of the bill, as he thought was sufficient to show that they were not introduced merely upon report without any just foundation. He thought he had said enough to satisfy the House that these charges were not brought forward upon mere vague and idle rumors. Then, sir, considering that they must be taken to be well founded, he made an appeal at once to the honorable members of that House to say whether the charges were not of sufficient importance? whether the subject was not of a nature to demand the most serious consideration of the Congress of the United States? and whether this session should be permitted to pass over without some determination being manifested in relation to this subject. He knew at the same time he assumed this tone of confidence, that there were gentlemen on that floor who would undertake to justify some of the proceedings he had alluded to, upon a principle which he had thought proper to arraign, as an abuse; but he had the satisfaction of knowing that there were a very respectable portion of gentlemen here connected with those in power, who did not approve of certain principles which some of the political leaders of that party attempted to defend and justify; and under these circumstances, in the course of the remarks he should submit, he expected and hoped to have the patient attention and favorable ear, even of a large portion of those gentlemen who ranked themselves among the supporters of the party in power.

Mr. B. wished, in advance, to answer an objection which he anticipated would arise as to time. He knew that the session must be brought to a close in about thirty days, and many honorable gentlemen would object to this measure being brought forward at this time, when there was so much other important business to be acted on; and when there was an entire Presidential term to expire before the recurrence of another election; but Mr. B. would inform gentlemen that he regarded this as the only period when it was possible that a subject of this description could receive an impartial investigation and decision. It was his conviction, from the experience which he had had in the House, that this was the time when the House could pass its impartial judgment on this measure, and he had brought it to the notice of the House at as early a day as the rules and orders of the House would permit him. Beside this there was a reason, in addition to the importance of the subject itself, why it should be acted on at present. We must recollect that an election is just passed, in which all the abuses and irregularities complained of have been practiced in a very considerable degree; that these occurrences are yet fresh in the recollections of the people, and the Constitution where it had been violated was yet bleeding; and if apathy was suffered to come over the public mind, by the time another year would roll around they would hear no more of this question. The consequence would be, that the time for another election campaign would arrive, and every evil complained of would be multiplied, and every abuse aggravated.

There was another reason why the present was the most propitious time to consider this subject. There was a new administration about to commence in the Government, and that administration was not committed as to the principles it was about to introduce; and the proposition now brought forward could not be considered as an attack upon that administration. It was not to be considered as a charge and a fault upon the administration which had not yet commenced, in practice, in relation to any of these abuses; and, for one, it should be his study, as an individual member of the House and citizen of the Republic, to detect, as far as in his power, what he considered an irregular means of bringing the new administration into power, and to give to every portion of the people the rights and privileges guaranteed to them. He was disposed the more to do this because he was satisfied that, until the elements of the opposition were considerably changed, and the time should arrive when there would be a new organization of parties, that any systematic opposition would prove unavailing.

He thought it must have struck every intelligent and impartial individual in the country, that, no matter what was the cause, there was some malignant distemper deeply affecting our political system. Under all former administrations he knew there had been much party excitement, charges of gross abuses, infringements on the Constitution, and violent invective against persons connected with the administration; yet he put it to gentlemen whether there was not now a state of things existing throughout the country which was unknown at any former time. He thought he was right in affirming that a new character was forming and attaching to the political institutions of the country. The Government was not now looked upon by individuals unconnected with it as it had been under former administrations. He did not desire to consume the time of the House by going into details, and examining the causes which led to the evils complained of, but it seemed to him, and he thought it must have attracted the attention of every impartial observer of events, that the absolute power of the Government was concentrated in one head, or in one hand of the Government; nor was it any the less objectionable to him when that absolute power was exercised under the garb of being sanctioned by the people. He contended that, for all practical purposes, the whole power of the Government was concentrated in one department of the Government. He was not prepared now to say what progress towards a revolution in the Government had been effected; but it was evident that a revolution in some sense had been completed. He said he had had the honor of having a seat on that floor long enough, and had made annual visits to and from the seat of Government often enough, to have learned the great changes which had taken place in public sentiment on this subject. When you hear strangers inquiring what will be the probable course of policy of the Government in regard to any particular measure, do you hear them inquire, as formerly, What will Congress do in relation to this matter? or, How will the House of Representatives decide on any question of interest? These were formerly the inquiries which you met with; and members of that House could sit there, and have opinions of their own upon all questions brought before them for decision. Now Mr. B. would put it to any gentleman to answer, if these were the inquiries met with at present. No, sir; the inquiry is not what will the House of Representatives, or what will the Senate do? but what will the President do? what will the Executive do? what will Andrew Jackson do? He would proceed no further, except to make the remark that it seemed to him that this single incident was sufficient to show that there had been a transition of the Government from the hands of the regularly constituted authorities to that of the President, and from being a Government of the people to be a Government of the Executive. The Government was no longer a Government of three co-ordinate branches, each acting as a constitutional check upon the other; but it was a Government in substance, in fact, and in truth, concentrated in one department, in one head, and he regretted to say, with too much truth, that that head was merely the head of a party.

Mr. B. said there had been, however, recently an illustrious exception to the general rule. He alluded to the celebrated deposite bill, which passed at the last session of Congress. This bill was the only measure of any importance which had been passed against the wish, and against the influence, of the Executive, and he begged gentlemen to remember that this bill was only passed by opposing patronage to patronage, and money to money, and by arraying, in some sense, corruption against corruption. The people of the States were excited to desire and demand a more equal apportionment of the spoils. The people manifested a determination to secure to themselves, and to take from those in power the large surplus which had accumulated in the Treasury; and the moment this surplus was wrested from those in power, that moment did you see those gentlemen forward with propositions to get rid of this revenue. The gentlemen from North Carolina (Mr. McKay) was immediately upon his feet with a proposition to reduce the revenue to the wants of the Government. The whole party were up exhibiting their patriotism to reduce the revenue to the wants of the Government; and a gentleman from New York was using the greatest exertions to show that the moneys were going to corrupt the States.

Mr. CAMBRELENG here moved that the House proceed to the orders of the day, which was agreed to.

The bill from the Senate entitled "An act to extend the limits of the Port of New Orleans," was read a first and second time, and

On motion of Mr. R. GARLAND ordered to a third reading to-morrow.

The bill from the Senate to extend the jurisdiction of the district court of the United States for the District of Arkansas, was read twice and committed.

The amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House for the relief of Norman Holt were concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House, granting the right of way to certain railroads in Florida, were concurred in.

The bill to change the title of certain officers of the Navy, was read a third time and passed.

MILEAGE OF MEMBERS.

The "bill to establish a more uniform rule of computing the mileage and per diem compensation of members of Congress" coming up on its third reading:

Mr. WARDWELL asked the Speaker whether this bill must not be committed to the Committee of the Whole under the rules of the House, on account of its making a charge upon the Treasury. The SPEAKER decided that the objection came too late. It ought to have been made before the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. WARDWELL then observed that he was opposed to the bill in its present shape. He had no interest in the matter. But he was unwilling to pass a law to operate upon those who should come after him and not operate upon himself.

He was opposed to it also, because it was unequal in its operation upon different members. In some instances, the mail route by land would be longer than the route by water, by which members always travel.

He had another objection. The bill before the House permits members to come into the District, and stay away from the business of the House the whole session, and yet receive their pay for every day of the session; while those who should go from the District for a few days on account of sickness, or any urgent business, would not receive it. The bill is wrong, and he would move to have it committed, for the purpose of amendment, were it not for the demonstrations the other day that so large a majority was in favor of it, with all its imperfections.

Mr. SUTHERLAND had voted for the bill the other day, but he should have had no objection to see it modified. He said the compensation, be what it might, ought to be just, and proportionably equal, but the present bill was obviously imperfect. He agreed, also, with the gentleman from New York, that they ought to pass a law applying to themselves, and not magnanimously pass one bearing upon their successors! He was for meting out justice, and beginning at home. He was thoroughly convinced that those who wished to come back again ought not to wish for the passage of this bill, for the people would generally condemn it when they became acquainted with the facts.

Mr. TURRILL inquired whether the committee named in a bill was a joint committee?

The SPEAKER replied that it was a joint committee.

Mr. TURRILL said so he supposed. He did not know that any thing he could say against this bill, in these times of popularity—seeking, on a small scale, would have much, if any effect; but as he had made up his mind to vote against the bill, he felt called upon to state one or two objections to it, in addition to those which have already been urged by his colleague, (Mr. Wardwell,) and the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, (Mr. Sutherland,) who has just taken his seat. This bill is intended to provide for equalizing the mileage of members of this House. At the commencement of each session the bill requires that a committee shall be appointed to examine into the honesty of members, and fix their mileage; and it would seem that it was apprehended that there might be a difficulty in finding members of this House possessing sufficient integrity and capacity to constitute this committee; for the bill provides that you shall go to the other branch of the Legislature and call in three Senators to aid in this investigation of mileage, so as to prevent the three members of the committee selected from this House from allowing too much mileage to the Representatives. Sir, said Mr. T. if there must be a committee, let it be composed of members of this House. I am opposed to going to the Senate for any portion of it. Mr. T. thought that the mileage should be equalized if it could be done, and he was willing to have it adjusted by the Clerk of the House, or the Sergeant-at-Arms, and each individual member, but he could not vote for a bill which required each member of this House to be examined by a joint committee in relation to his mileage.

Mr. LANE said he had nothing to lose or gain by the passage of this bill, for his residence was so situated that he could travel either by water or by stage from his own door. It so happened that he could lose nothing, retrospectively, by any of its provisions, for he had never lost a single day or hour since he had the honor of being a member of that House, and that he had charged his mileage upon the nearest route. He, however, considered this bill, though not intended to be so a direct attack upon the Western members; and he went on to show the inconveniences that would be attendant on compelling members to travel by the mail route in the Western States, especially where the mails were transported only on horseback. It was enough if members travelled by the usual travelling route. If it was so amended as to require members to travel by the most direct mail route, where the mail was carried in stages, he would then be better pleased with the bill, as it regarded others.

Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi stated that in travelling the river route he and his colleague, and the members from Louisiana, did travel by the regular mail route, for the mail descended and came up the Mississippi.

Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina, contended that those who lived at the greatest Western distance, were best off, and made most money, on account of the facilities of river travel, independent of the ease and comfort of being on board a steamboat. Mr. T. went into a detail of the present inequalities of the mode of charging.

Mr. BOON had voted for the engrossment of this bill, and at that time it was his intention to have

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

BY BLAIR & RIVES.

—WEEKLY—

PRICE $1 PER SESSION.

24TH CONG.....2D SESS.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1837.

VOLUME 4.....No. 9.

voted also for its final passage, but on a re-examination of it, and after having heard what he had, a radical change had taken place in his determination. The bill proposed one thing with regard to members charging their own mileage, which was done at present, viz: that each member should certify. So did each member now. If, however, any change was to be wrought, let them bring it about first on themselves, and not enact a Buncombe measure, to bear only on those who were to come after them. He preferred it should lie over till the commencement of the next Congress.

Mr. CRAIG supported the bill, and briefly replied to Mr. LANE and others. The extraordinary facilities for travelling of late years rendered the change proposed by the bill absolutely indispensable.

Mr. MANN of New York, after a few remarks, showing the imperfections of the bill, moved to commit it to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. RENCHER (who originally reported the bill) entered into a general argument in defence of its several provisions.

Mr. PARKER expressed his satisfaction with the bill, and his intention to vote for it. The improvements in travelling required a total revision of the mode of charging; and the bill proposed nothing more than fixing a fair and equal ratio. So far from the provisions of the bill going too far, he would have voted for it if some of them had gone still farther.

Mr. CALHOON of Kentucky, contended that, by a fair construction of the law, members were justified in travelling the route usually taken by ninety-nine out of one hundred of the travelling community. The fact was well known to those acquainted with the geography of the western country that, if members were invariably required to travel by the nearest route, they would be unable, at inclement seasons of the year, to go by that route. He should vote against the bill.

Mr. CAMBRELENG designated this as a poor miserable dish, brought forward year after year, and although charges were not directly made, they were made in the most obnoxious form, for they were implied charges, and the impression went abroad that members took more than they were entitled to. Though Mr. C. had himself come to the conclusion that no member had charged more than he had a right to charge under the construction put upon the law by all the presiding officers of the House for the last twenty years, yet he hoped the House would make at least one effort to get rid of the subject. He hoped, therefore, the bill would pass with all its imperfections, many as they had been described to be, upon its head.

Mr. PATTON hoped the bill would be committed; for if it were, he would move a proviso that no representative or delegate to Congress should be allowed to receive a sum exceeding the rate of eight dollars a day, from the end of one session to the time of taking his seat at another. It was susceptible of proof from the journals, that such had been the case heretofore.

Mr. YELL said the members from the West, at the present time, not only went the route laid down by the construction given to the law for years past, but they also travelled the usual, and only feasible route. If the members from Arkansas were tied down to travel only by the mail route, they would get nothing for a large part of the way, for their mail facilities were few at present in that State. The fact was the bill was levelled at the Western States and Territories. If these attacks were continually made upon the West, the day was not very far distant when this spot would be a howling wilderness, for in less than twenty years the seat of the General Government would be removed west of the mountains. If, however, western gentlemen were getting too much, let the wages be reduced. He therefore moved that the Committee of the Whole be instructed to report that the per diem compensation be reduced to six dollars a day, and that the same committee be also instructed to inquire into the expediency and necessity of removing the seat of Government to some eligible point on the Ohio or Mississippi rivers.

Mr. ANTHONY remarked that they had consumed nearly the whole day in the discussion of this bill, and as he had very little doubt but that every member had made up his mind how he would vote; therefore, to test the sense of the House whether the discussion should be continued, he moved the previous question.

The House refused to second the motion—yeas 71, noes 73; and the question recurring on the instructions moved by Mr. YELL,

Mr. HANNEGAN made an earnest opposition to the general provisions of the bill, showing how unequally it bore upon the members of the West and other parts of the country. He explained that, though once in favor of removing the seat of Government, he was so no longer, for he did not desire the noble and generous soil of the West to be contaminated. He himself had always charged by the direct land route. He inquired if any member had ever deducted a dollar for lost time.

Mr. HAWKINS said he had, to a very considerable amount.

Mr. BROWN moved to lay the bill and instructions on the table, and asked for the yeas and nays on his motion, which were ordered; and the question being taken, was decided in the negative—yeas 58, nays 128.

The House refusing to lay the bill on the table, the question then recurred upon the motion to commit the bill with instructions.

Mr. PARKS moved that the House adjourn, but withdrew it, to enable the SPEAKER to present the following message in writing from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 17th instant, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, together with the documents by which it was accompanied.

ANDREW JACKSON.

[The report of the Secretary encloses a correspondence showing the relations subsisting between the United States and Mexico; and also additional information on the condition of Texas.]

The message having been read:

Mr. HOWARD moved to refer it with the accompanying documents, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and that they be printed.

Mr. BOYD moved to add an instruction to that committee to report a resolution acknowledging the independence of Texas.

Mr. VINTON moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. CLAIBORNE, of Miss. asked for the yeas and nays, but the House refused to order them, and the motion prevailing without a division,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

FRIDAY, JANUARY 27, 1837.

A message was received from the President of the United States by Mr. ANDREW JACKSON, jr. his secretary, transmitting certain papers from the War Department, relative to the improvement of Brunswick Harbor, in Georgia; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 18th inst. a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, showing the amount of moneys received for the sales of the public lands for each month during the year 1836, and the amount of charges for transporting specie from the several land offices to the deposit banks: referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRUNDY observed that yesterday the Senators from the State of Michigan were admitted to their seats; and as the Constitution required that they should be placed in their appropriate classes, he supposed that this had better be done at once. He would, therefore, submit a resolution, and ask for its immediate adoption. Mr. G. then submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Senate proceed to ascertain the classes in which the Senators from the State of Michigan shall be inserted, in conformity with the resolution of the 14th May, 1789.

Mr. GRUNDY observed, that before submitting the motion to carry the resolution into effect, a word of explanation would perhaps be necessary. There were, according to the Constitution, three classes of Senators; and there was an equal number of each, until the coming in of the Senators from Arkansas; but one of them drawing number one, and the other number three, of course there was more of these numbers than of number two. This he had in view in drawing up the motion, and by providing that numbers two and three only shall be drawn, the inequality would be lessened.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, it was Ordered, That the Secretary put into the ballot box two papers of equal size, one of which shall be numbered two, and the other shall be a blank, and each Senator shall draw out one paper; that the Senator who shall draw the paper number two shall be inserted in the class of Senators whose terms of service will expire on the 3d day of March, 1839; that the Secretary then put into the ballot box two papers of equal size, one of which shall be numbered one, and the other shall be numbered three, and the other Senator shall draw out one paper; that if the paper drawn be number one, the Senator shall be inserted in the class of Senators whose terms of service will expire the third day of March, 1837; and if the paper drawn be number three the Senator shall be inserted in the class of Senators whose terms of service will expire the third day of March, 1841.

In pursuance of the above order, Messrs. NORVELL and LYON proceeded to draw ballots for their respective classes, when, Mr. LYON drawing number two, was classed with the Senators whose terms of service expire on the 3d of March, 1839, and Mr. NORVELL drawing number three, was classed with the Senators whose terms of service expire on the 3d of March, 1841.

The VICE PRESIDENT notified the CHAIR that he would vacate his seat to-morrow.

Mr. WEBSTER presented the petition of George Law, administrator of George Smith; which was referred to the Committee on Finance. Also, the petition of a number of citizens of Perry, Genesee county, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the Alleghany river: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. CLAY presented the memorial of a number of citizens of the District of Columbia, stating that they had, a number of years past, formed an association for colonizing free negroes with their own consent on the coast of Africa; that many donations had been made to them in money and in lands, which last species of property they could not render available, in consequence of their not having a charter, and praying for an act of incorporation to enable them to hold and convey real estate. Mr. C. moved to refer this memorial to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALHOUN regretted that the Senator from Kentucky had thought fit to present this memorial, and deprecated any discussion or agitation of the subject, which he thought would rather tend to increase than to allay the excitement which had been produced by an injudicious interference with a question of much delicacy. He did not intend to oppose the reference of the memorial, but he indulged the hope that the committee would see the propriety of not acting on it during this session.

Mr. CLAY regretted extremely that there should have been any expression, even in a modified form, in opposition to the object which the memorialists desire to attain. The day would come, he would venture to predict, when the people living in all portions of this vast continent, would become converts to the American colonization scheme, and become convinced of its utility, and the humane principles by which it is characterized in striving to ameliorate the present condition of the African race.

The object, then, of the memorialists was to send free negroes, with their own voluntary consent, to Liberia. They do not desire to touch any interest nor any property—to affect no right of any citizen here, or in the States. The memorialists come here and tell the Senate that many donations have been made to them, from time, both in land and money, and it was of the highest importance that such an act as they applied for should be granted. He might remind the Senate of a donation that was given the Colonization Society by one of the best and greatest men this country had ever produced—he meant the late venerable ex-President Madison. He bequeathed the donation (on account of there not being in existence such an act as these memorialists pray for) to Mr. Gurley, for the benefit of the society. Although, in the present case, the trust was faithfully executed, in other cases it might not be; hence, therefore, the memorialists ask for an act of incorporation, in order that they can receive what may be given them. Now, the object was dear, was interesting, was just, was natural, and he could not but express his hope that an act of incorporation would be granted them.

Mr. CALHOUN, after some remarks in reply to Mr. CLAY, said that from the first to the last he had been under the impression that any interference with the objects of this society by the General Government would not only be unconstitutional, but would have the most mischievous effects. He would remind the Senator from Kentucky, who had mentioned the late Mr. Madison as one of the friends of the Colonization Society, that that great statesman was so strict in his notions as to the granting of charters by the General Government, that he had vetoed the act of Congress incorporating a church in Alexandria. The Senator from Kentucky must know that great diversity of opinion existed among the wisest and best men of the country as to the ultimate good to be effected by this society; and that the prevailing opinion of the great body of the people of the south was against it. Nine-tenths of the Southern people at least, said Mr. C. were opposed to any interference with the objects of this society by the General Government.

Mr. WALKER did not intend to discuss, or agitate the question at this time. He would only state that, among the unfortunate consequences which had been produced in Mississippi, owing to the movements of the abolitionists, was the unpopularity of the Colonization Society, which previously, on the contrary, had been extremely popular. There were many individuals in that State who had been very beneficent contributors to it, but who now were opposed to it. He thought, therefore, that the present was a most unfortunate period for the agitation of this question, not only as regarded the country, but for the ultimate success of the Colonization Society. He hoped the Senator from Kentucky would not, under these circumstances, press the subject for the consideration of Congress. At some more auspicious time, when the agitation of the abolitionists shall have subsided, and when, too, the country could look unbiased at the request of the memorialists, then would be the more appropriate period to urge the matter.

Mr. CLAY replied, that he should be extremely happy if he could reconcile it to his sense of duty to conform to the wishes of the Senator from Mississippi, (Mr. Walker,) but after much reflection he was satisfied that it was his duty to present the memorial, and to advocate the reference he had proposed. He agreed with the Senator in thinking, that whatever of unpopularity that had been given to this Colonization Society, resulted exclusively from the acts of the abolitionists; and he would take this occasion to say, that as far as he understood their objects, they were just as much opposed to the Colonization Society as to the slaveholders of the South; denouncing it and imputing motives to it which did not exist, and in fact assailing it in every possible form. With regard to the veto of Mr. Madison, alluded to by the Senator from South Carolina, it would be recollected that it was made on the grounds that the act was to incorporate a religious association, which Mr. Madison supposed would come in conflict with that provision of the Constitution which declares, that Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

Mr. C. doubted the accuracy of the opinions of the Senator from South Carolina, as to the opposition of the South to the colonization society. Of the slaveholding States, he was well assured that a majority of the people of Virginia, Maryland, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and North Carolina, were in favor of its objects. He did not know but that the people of South Carolina and Georgia were opposed to it, and he could not speak as to Alabama; but the Senator from Mississippi had just assured them that this society was highly popular in his State, until the excitement produced by the abolitionists had brought it into discredit.

Mr. BUCHANAN rose to make a suggestion to the Senator from Kentucky, and that was, that, if an act of incorporation be granted at all, it must not be confined in its operation to the District of Columbia, it must go to the extent of the whole Union. It appeared to him (Mr. B.) that this was not a proper subject to be referred to the committee on the District of Columbia, which was a Committee having a great deal of business to attend to, though not of a character of such general importance as was connected with this memorial. He should, therefore, think it would be better to have a special committee on this question. The gentleman from Kentucky understood the matter perfectly well, and should be placed at the head of it, and could bring forward such a proposition as would meet general approbation. He, (Mr. Buchanan) therefore move that the memorial be referred to a select committee.

Mr. CLAY observed that he understood the subject, and had determined to make his proposition as free from objection as possible; and, therefore, he limited the powers of the act of incorporation to this District only. He was perfectly aware that to attempt to give it a general character, so that the society might establish branches here and there, a constitutional question would arise. He hoped the Senator from Pennsylvania would withdraw his motion for a select committee. He (Mr. C.) did himself doubt whether Congress had the power to pass an act of incorporation which should have powers beyond the District of Columbia. But as to the memorial, he would say that, as it came from the District of Columbia, the proper reference was to the committee having charge of its affairs, to which it might be sent; and he hoped that it would report a bill as speedily as possible. He hoped gentlemen would not postpone the consideration of the subject.

Mr. CALHOUN conceived that the Senator from Pennsylvania had taken the proper view of this question. He thought, too, that it should be referred to a select committee. The Senator from Kentucky and himself viewed the subject in a very different point of view. A mysterious Providence had brought the black and the white people together from different parts of the globe, and no human power could now separate them. The whites are an European race, being masters; and the Africans are the inferior race, and slaves. He believed that they could exist among us peaceably enough, if undisturbed, for all time; and it was his opinion that the Colonization Society, and all the other schemes which had been gotten up through mistaken notions of philanthropy, in order to bring about an alteration in the condition of the African, had a wrong foundation, and was calculated to disturb the existing relations between the two races, and the relations between the North and the South. He knew the Senator from Kentucky viewed the subject in a very different light, for he had stated on many occasions the opinions he held. He (Mr. C.) believed that the very existence of the South depended upon the existing relations being kept up, and that every scheme which might be introduced, having for its object an alteration in the condition of the negro, was pregnant with danger and ruin. It was a benevolent object, and highly desirable that the blessings of civilization and christianity should be introduced into benighted Africa; but this was a Government of limited powers, and had no more to do with free negroes than with slaves; and if Africa was to be christianized and civilized, he hoped it would not be done by this Government acting beyond its constitutional powers. It was a matter of little importance to him, whether the memorial should be referred to a select committee, or to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PRESTON expressed his hope that the memorial might be sent to the Committee on the District.

Mr. STRANGE said that he should be compelled to vote against the reference of the memorial to any committee whatsoever. He coincided in opinion with both the Senators from South Carolina, that were an act of incorporation passed, its effects would be co-extensive with the Union itself. And he should deprecate more the location of a society at this point than at any other, because of its commanding position, and on account of its indicating the right of Congress to interfere with so delicate and important a subject. It was impossible to be so obtuse as not to see that this society, with its Briareus arms, would not exercise a great influence over the interests of the Southern country. What would be its effects, but to hold out to the slave population to become free? He meant according to the laws of the country in which they live. They did not generally desire freedom, in their degraded condition, and most of the slaves preferred living in that condition. But when an inducement was held out to them, it was done to make them discontented with the situation in which God had placed them. He had been opposed to the Bank of the United States, because he believed Congress had no power to grant a charter out of the District of Columbia; and for the same reason nearly, he was now also opposed to granting an act of incorporation to the Colonization Society in this District, because, in its very nature, its operations could not be confined to it solely.

Mr. BUCHANAN, after a few remarks, said, that no gentleman could look upon this question without perceiving that it involved one of the greatest constitutional questions that could possibly be raised. What was it? Simply to charter the Colonization Society of the District of Columbia? Why, said Mr. B. are not the members of this society scattered all over the Union, and is it not its object to establish an empire in Africa? Did not the gentleman from Kentucky say that, through its means, civilization and christianity were to be extended over Africa? These were most benevolent and praiseworthy objects, Mr. B. said, and he hoped they might succeed; but he would ask, were these grand objects to be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, constituted, as it was, to take charge of the local interests of this ten miles square? He could not think that this was a proper question for the consideration of the District Committee; but it would be an appropriate subject of consideration for the Committee on the Judiciary, which was constituted to take cognizance of questions involving constitutional law. Desirous, however, to have as much light as possible on this subject, and knowing that the Senator from Kentucky was perfectly well acquainted with it, he would greatly prefer referring the memorial to a select committee, of which that gentleman should be the head, in order that the public might be enlightened by the able report that he would make; but if this could not be done, he thought it ought to be sent to the standing committee, which had a peculiar charge over constitutional questions.

Mr. CLAY said the argument of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania was founded upon the hypothesis that the operations of this society were not to be confined to the District of Columbia, but were to be co-extensive with the Union. It should be recollected, however, that the memorialists did not come here to ask for any legalization of their operations, for they could go on, as they had already gone on for twenty years past. They could fit out their vessels from Norfolk, New Orleans, and elsewhere, without coming to ask Congress for permission. Having, then, got that power now, they did not ask the aid of Congress to carry on their operations in that respect at all. The error into which the gentleman had fallen was, in not limiting his views to this single fact—that the memorialists asked Congress to grant them simply the power to receive and to hold property bestowed upon them by voluntary benevolence.

Mr. BUCHANAN wished to ask the Senator from Kentucky one question. If a charter was granted by Congress to this society in the District of Columbia, would not the whole society be thereby organized? Would not the presidents and officers of the auxiliary societies act in obedience to this society here? He could not (Mr. E. said) conceive of two distinct societies.

Mr. CLAY could not say as to the officers of the auxiliary societies; but the actual corporators would be residents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STRANGE would say one word in reply to the last suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky. If the society was efficient, without legislation, why did they desire something else? And that brought to his mind all the consequences growing out of a society of that character. If it required to be legalized, he would deprecate the consequences of that legalization. It was apparent that they could not get along so well without legislation, as with it. He was opposed to lending them any assistance at all; for, if Congress granted them simply the powers they asked, it would be doing nothing less than to lend their countenance to the first step of a great system pregnant with evil to southern interests. He did not doubt that the gentlemen who brought forward this proposition were sincere, and that the Colonization Society were actuated by benevolent motives; but, nevertheless, he was unwilling to aid them by legislation, for the reasons which he had already stated.

Mr. RIVES remarked that, as he had made up his mind to vote for the reference of this memorial to the Committee on the District of Columbia, he did not wish to be considered as expressing any opinion that the objects of this society could be accomplished by the aid of Congress. While he did not believe that it was competent for Congress to incorporate any society whose objects extended beyond the limits of the District, and were co-extensive with the Union, he was yet disposed to vote for the reference, on the assumption that the acts of this society were to be confined to the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING of Alabama felt very unwilling that the memorial should be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, for it was general in its character, as many gentlemen seemed to think, and that was to his mind the very reason why it should not be sent to this committee, whose duty was to attend to business connected only with the ten miles square, and to guard the rights of the people living within that space. It was quite palpable that no corporate body of this character could be established here without affecting the whole Union. Why did not the society, instead of coming to Congress for an act of incorporation, apply to some of the States of the Union. Their object was clear; and he could not but regard this as an entering wedge to more extended operations, and it should be frustrated at once. He had never thrown any obstacle in the way of what he considered praiseworthy and meritorious on the part of the Colonization Society; but it was not the duty of Congress to lend them any assistance. Mr. K. concluded by moving that the memorial be laid on the table.

The memorial was then laid on the table—ayes 24, noes 12.

Mr. NILES presented the petition of Ezra Chapman; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. EWING of Ohio presented the memorial of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the removal of the land office in the Piqua district from Leonia to Franconia: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KING of Georgia presented the memorial of Charles Gay and James R. Butts, praying to be authorized to import free of duty two iron steamboats, in detached parts, with the necessary machinery, &c. referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD presented the memorial of sundry citizens of Wilmington, praying for a further appropriation for the improvement of Christiana river, and for the construction of a harbor at the mouth of the same: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TOMLINSON presented the petition of Sarah Addison; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. RIVES presented the petition of John Roberts, praying for interest on a commutation claim; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. DAVIS presented some additional papers in support of the petition of the owners of the Nantucket Steamboat company; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. NORVELL presented the memorial of the Legislature of Michigan, praying that measures may be taken for the removal of certain Indian tribes from that State: referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a memorial from the same, praying for an appropriation for the removal of obstructions from Saginaw river, and that Lower Saginaw may be made a port of entry: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. N. gave notice that he would, to-morrow, ask leave to bring in a bill for the relief of James Witherrall.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John K. Bulow, deceased; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Andrew Armstrong; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Catharine Carlisle Read; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WRIGHT said the Committee on Finance, to which had been referred, by a resolution of the Senate of the 19th day of December last, so much of the annual message of the President as relates to the reduction of the revenue to the wants of the Government, had directed him to report the following bill; and, as the bill was not accompanied by any written report, he hoped he should be indulged by the Senate in a very concise statement of some of the principles and views which had governed the action of the committee. It was not his purpose to debate the bill at this period, but merely to state its contents, and the foundations upon which it rested.

A BILL to alter and amend the several acts imposing duties upon imports.

Be it enacted, &c. That, from and after the 30th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1837, in addition to the articles exempted from the payment of duty by the various revenue laws of the United States now existing and in force, the articles hereafter named in this section of this act, imported into any collection district of the United States, shall be admitted free of duty, viz:

Floor matting, usually made of flags, or other materials; square wire, used for the manufacture of stretchers for umbrellas, and cut in pieces not exceeding the length used for stretchers; aquafortis, Brazil pebble, prepared for spectacles; crystals for watches, diamonds for glaziers, dressed furs, embroidery, all articles composed wholly or chiefly of gold, jewelry, gold and silver laces, muriatic acids, bicromate of potash, cromate of potash, prussiate of potash, chronometers, tartaric acids, barley, straw or grass baskets, composition, wax, or amber beads, all other beads not otherwise enumerated in the existing laws, Prussian blue, bolting cloths, shell or paper boxes, bricks, hair or palm-leaf brooms, button moulds, calomel, carbonate of soda, cashmere of Thibet, corrosive sublimate, down of all kinds, feathers for beds, gold leaf, hair bracelets, hair, not made up for head dresses, lampblack, linen padding, (if not suitable for cotton bagging,) sulphate of magnesia, mustard, salad oil, almond paste, perfumes, pickles, perfumed hair-powder, tooth-powder, sulphate of quinine, Rochelle salts, fossil and crude mineral salt, fancy or perfumed shaving and other soaps, including Windsor, and washballs, emetic tartar, builing tiles, paving tiles, washes, otto of roses, oil of lemon, oil of bergamot, essential oil of rose, oil of carraway, oil of lavender, oil of rosemary, cosmetics, anti-corrosive lithic paints, linen tape, sextants, quadrants, telescopes, and glasses for sextants, quadrants, and telescopes, gold, silver, and precious stones, hair cloth and hair seating, indigo, cotton and thread laces, manufactured and prepared quills, common tinned and japanned saddlery, china and porcelain wares, earthen and stone wares, watches of all kinds, and parts of watches, silver and plated ware, worsted yarn, blankets, the value not exceeding seventy-five cents each, vinegar, olive oil, teas of all kinds, chocolate, Cayenne pepper, cigars, bristles, corks, copper rods and bolts, copper nails and spikes, books, printed prior to 1775, books in other languages than Greek, Latin, and English, glass bottles, demijohns, common salt, anchovies and sardines, ground and polished looking-glass plates, silvered and unsilvered.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the thirtieth day of June, in the year 1837, the duties now by law chargeable upon all wines and all spirits made of vinous materials imported into the United States, shall be reduced one-half, and from and after that day no more than one-half the rates of duty now chargeable upon any wines and spirits made of vinous materials of any country shall be assessed or collected.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That when it shall be satisfactorily proved to the Secretary of the Treasury that any iron, imported for the construction of the hulls of iron steamboats, has been actually applied to the construction of the hull of any such iron steamboat, and that the boat to which any such iron has been applied is completed and fitted for use in navigation, he may allow a drawback of the duty on such iron so actually and permanently applied, or, if the duty shall have been paid, he may refund the same, any thing in any act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That no iron shall be considered as imported for the construction of the hulls of iron steamboats but such as is fitted and prepared for that use without further manufacture, and that nothing in this act shall be construed as to exempt from duty the engines, boilers, and other steam apparatus to be used in any such iron steamboat.

Sec. 4. Add be it further enacted, That whenever the bonds given for the duties upon the importation of any such iron shall become due and payable before the said iron can be actually and permanently applied to the construction of any such iron steamboat, in the manner required by the last preceding section, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to extend the time for the payment of so much of any such bonds as shall be equal to the drawback to which the obligor or obligors may be entitled: Provided, That no extension of time for the payment of any portion of any such bond shall exceed the period of two years from the date of the importation of the iron upon which the right of drawback is claimed in pursuance of this act.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all articles made free from duty by the provisions of the first section of this act, and all wines and spirits made from vinous materials the duties upon which are reduced by the provisions of the second section of this act, from and after the thirtieth day of June next, which shall be imported into the United States before the said last-mentioned day, and shall be put into the custom-house stores, under the bond of the importer or owner, and shall remain under the control of the proper officer of the customs until the said thirtieth day of June next, shall be free, or subject to no higher rate of duty than is imposed by this act: Provided, That no such articles or property shall be deposited in the custom-house stores except in the original packages, bales, boxes, bags, casks, cases, or bottles, as imported.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of his act be, and the same are hereby repealed:

Mr. W. said it was his duty here to say that, in consequence partly of ill health, and partly of other and paramount engagements, the committee had been deprived, during all its deliberations upon this bill, of the valuable advice and aid of one of its members; and that, therefore, nothing contained in the bill, and nothing which he should say, was to be considered as committing that member of the committee, or as expressing his views upon the important and interesting questions involved. The very late arrival in the city of another member of the committee had prevented him from partaking fully in their deliberations. The bill, therefore, is to be received rather as the conclusions and recommendations of a bare majority of the committee than of the whole committee, and it was his duty further to add, that what he should now say would be more the expression of his private views, and the motives and opinions which had governed his action, than any thing he had been either authorized or directed by the committee to say.

The reference was general, and applied to the whole revenue of the country. This revenue, or, more properly speaking, the receipts into the Treasury, consists of two parts, the money derived from the duties imposed upon importations, which is revenue proper, and the receipts from the sales of the public lands, which is, in fact, capital, and not revenue. The committee, upon their first view of the reference, considered this last branch of the subject, the receipts from lands, more properly to belong to another standing committee of the Senate—the Committee on Public Lands. Indeed, at the very time of the reference, they knew that the subject of the reduction of the amount of money flowing into the public Treasury from the sales of the public lands was under consideration before that committee; and very soon after this reference to the Committee on Finance, and before that committee had made it a subject of deliberation, the Committee on Public Lands reported to the Senate a bill, having for its object the reduction of this branch of the receipts into the public Treasury. That bill was, long since, taken up for action in the Senate, and has, for many days now last past, occupied the principal time and attention of the body.

The Committee on Finance, therefore, have not, at any time, considered that branch of the reference before them for their action, or that they have been, at any period since the reference, at liberty to consider and act upon it.

Mr. W. said, another conclusion of his own mind, and one he believed existing also in the minds of his colleagues upon the committee who were present and acting, was, that if Congress, by any legislative action, at its present session, could reduce the receipts into the Treasury to the wants of the Government, the most important measures to reach that object must relate to the lands, and go to reduce the receipts from that source. This conclusion was founded upon the amount of receipts from that source for the last two years. These receipts, for the years 1835 and 1836, counted together, had amounted to between thirty-eight and thirty-nine millions of dollars, he did not know but full thirty-nine millions; a sum which exceeded the usual estimate of the wants of the Treasury for the two years mentioned. If, then, every dollar of the revenue from customs were instantly repealed, and the receipts from the lands were to continue at the rates of the last year, there would still be a surplus in the Treasury, or the expenses of the Government must be swollen beyond the amount which is considered economical and desirable. It was, therefore, impossible to apply an efficient and adequate remedy for the existing evil of a redundant revenue by any reduction of the revenue from customs. The receipts from the lands was the seat of the evil, and to that quarter the great and commanding remedies must be directed. The committee hoped and believed, during the whole of their deliberations, that Congress would pass the necessary laws, during its present session, to lop this branch of our public receipts, and to relieve the National Treasury from the dangerous plethora now weighing upon it from that source. Mr. W.

said he yet entertained that hope, and his action upon the interesting and important subject of a reduction of our revenue from the customs had been influenced by that hope and belief.

Thus confined, as the committee believed they were, to a consideration of the reduction of the duties upon customs, another principle which actuated himself, and which he believed actuated every member of the committee who participated in their deliberations, was to move cautiously and safely; not to shock the public sense by any hasty and rash movement; not, if that could possibly be prevented, to disturb any permanent and important domestic interest of the country, which had grown up, or was now growing up, under the protection of our revenue laws; but to go as far as the existing laws would permit, to reduce this branch of the revenue without incurring any of these evils. Acting upon this principle, the committee had, in the bill which he was directed to report, and which he was about to send to the Secretary's table, added to the list of free articles every thing which had appeared to them to admit of being made free, without injury to the interests to which he had referred. Every article proposed to be made free was distinctly named in the bill, and the committee had caused a statement to be prepared, from the tables of commerce and navigation for the year ending on the 30th of September, 1835, (the last table of that description which is yet completed,) showing the name, or designation, of the article, the present rate of duty, the amount of importations for the year 1835, the amount of duty paid upon the article as calculated upon those importations, and the amount of duty proposed to be reduced, as estimated upon the importations of that year. Many of the articles named in the bill are not enumerated separately in the tables of commerce and navigation, but are given as non-enumerated articles, and so grouped as not to show, with precision, the importance of each; but the committee believe that the statement will present, with satisfactory clearness, to the mind of every Senator, the effect of the action they recommend by this part of their bill. This statement it was the intention of the committee to ask the Senate to order to be printed to accompany the bill; and they felt confident it would afford greater aid to the action of the body upon the bill than any other form of written report they could have presented.

Among the articles proposed to be made free would be found "common salt;" and Mr. W. said, while it was not his object, at this time, to discuss any of the merits or provisions of the bill, he hoped he should be pardoned for the remark, that he knew this was, by far, the most important article inserted in the free list, and an article much more likely than any other to excite a deep feeling in the country, and to meet with firm and spirited opposition. He also knew that this was, in certain portions of the Union, a protected article, and would, in that sense, be considered as inserted in violation of the general principle by which the committee had proposed to govern their action. Under these convictions, he was consoled by the reflection that no State in the Union held so deep a stake in this article, as a domestic article, and one of domestic manufacture, as the State he had the honor in part to represent here. It was an important article to a large and most respectable class of the citizens of his State, as one of production and manufacture; and it was important to the State itself, as a source of revenue to the State treasury. In these aspects he was fully aware of the delicacy of his position in having consented, as a member of the committee, to the insertion of salt as a free article, and in standing here to urge the Senate to repeal the duty upon it. He did, however, believe that the universal wish of his constituents was that the revenues of this Government should be reduced to the economical wants of its Treasury, and that they did not expect to reach that desirable result without themselves making their full share of sacrifices to the common object. He therefore relied upon their liberality and patriotism to justify him in the course he had pursued; and he did not doubt that they would justify their representatives upon this floor, and in the other House of Congress, in consenting to this reduction of more than half a million of tax upon one of the most prominent and universal necessities of life, when the money raised upon it was not only not wanted for public expenditure, but was producing dangers to our institutions greater than any which those institutions have heretofore encountered—the dangers of an over-filled Treasury, and a surplus revenue. He could not be mistaken in the opinion that if the country could be effectually discharged from these startling dangers, his constituents, patriotic and intelligent as they ever had been, and still are, would not only justify, but applaud, their representatives here, for coming forward and offering this sacrifice on their behalf to reach so important a national good.

Mr. W. said the article of "wines" was another important article which had presented itself to the notice of the committee, and which they would have been inclined to make free, had it not been their duty also to notice and regard the stipulations in relation to wines in our late treaty with France. Those stipulations must be preserved with all the national faith which has throughout the whole history of our beloved country so signally distinguished her policy towards other nations; and in the opinion of the committee they put it out of the power of Congress to make any wines free until after the expiration of the term mentioned in the treaty, during which the wines of France were to have extended to them certain advantages, in our revenue laws, over the wines of other countries. Under this impression, the committee have recommended a further reduction, to the extent of one half, of the existing duties upon all wines, from whatever country imported; thus preserving the proportions between French and other wines, stipulated by the treaty to be preserved in our future legislation upon this subject, and pursuing the same course of legislation which Congress has, upon two former occasions, since the ratification of the treaty, pursued in regulating the duties upon wines.

As intimately connected with this branch of the revenue from customs, the article of "spirits made from vinous materials," attracted the attention of the committee. They found the existing duties upon this description of spirits very high, ranging from fifty-three to eighty-five cents per gallon, according to the rates of proof at which the spirits may be imported, and that by applying the same reduction to this class of duties which the committee propose to apply to wines themselves, they would be able to reduce the current revenue by a sum not less than from 275,000 to $300,000 per annum. It was not without much hesitancy and doubt that the committee adopted this recommendation. They were, and are, fully sensible that a proposition for the reduction of the duties upon any description of ardent spirits, will not meet with favor in the minds of a very large portion of our citizens. They feel no certainty that it will receive the approbation of the Senate; but so deep was the conviction in the minds of a majority of the committee of the necessity of a reduction of every duty not protective in its character, to secure the preservation of those which are so, that they felt bound to make the proposition, and present it to Congress. The reduction in the revenue which will be effected by its adoption is so important in amount, that the committee hope it will receive the calm and candid consideration of Senators before a determination shall be made to diminish so extensively the beneficial action of the bill they present. To relieve the country from the incalculable evils growing out of a surplus revenue is the object of the bill; to do that without a reduction of the protecting duties has been the intention of the committee. They have, therefore, not touched the duty upon "spirits from grain;" and they cannot suppose that the reduction they propose upon one single other description of spirits, will bring them at all into injurious competition with domestic spirits of any kind.

Mr. W. said he was extending his remarks further than he had designed, as discussion now was not his object. He would not, therefore, refer to any other articles affected by the two first sections of the bill. The two great articles of salt and spirits were the only ones which he supposed could excite much interest, or lead to much discussion or opposition. Hence he had desired to bring them more particularly to the notice of the Senate. It might be found that other articles had been unwisely inserted. It would be strange if, in so extensive a list, it should not be so; but they would not be important, and might be stricken out. It would also, no doubt, be found that some articles had been omitted which ought to be made free; and it might be the pleasure of the Senate, when acting upon the bill, to extend reduction to articles not now included. The examinations of the committee had been careful and diligent, but they had not been as extensive and perfect as they themselves could have wished, though as perfect as the time allowed them had permitted.

He would now, Mr. W. said, offer, very briefly, the apology which the committee had to offer for presenting the bill unaccompanied by any written report. If he had been fortunate enough to make himself understood by the Senate, in the remarks he had already made, it would be seen that no report could make the provisions of the bill more clear, or show more accurately its influence upon the revenue, and upon the articles embraced in it, than the statement prepared by the committee to accompany the bill would accomplish those purposes. The only object, therefore, of a report from the committee would be to give to the Senate their views, he would say their conjectures, as to the receipts and expenditures of the Government for the present and future years. After the most mature examination and reflection, it was the unanimous opinion of those members of the committee who were present, and acting in the matter, that they could make no report upon these points which would communicate to the Senate any new information, not already in the possession of every member of the body, or which would furnish any valuable or useful guides to the action of Congress upon the bill. Were it not proposed, by legislative action, during the present session of Congress, to make great and important changes, affecting all branches of the revenue, and all the sources from which money comes into the public treasury, calculations, estimates, conjectures, might be made as to the revenues of the present year; but all such calculations, even in that case, would be most vague and uncertain at best. The experience of the last two years has demonstrated the impossibility, with all the information which can be reached by those officers of the Government whose sole business and duty it is to manage our fiscal affairs, of so perfecting estimates upon this point that they may not disappoint us many millions. Distinguished and experienced legislators, too, have frequently attempted estimates with no better success, and no member of the Committee on Finance can pretend to information, or judgment, superior to those who have thus erred in their conjectures as to the receipts into our public treasury for a given future period.

Add, then, the consideration that both branches of Congress are, at this moment, considering bills designed to diminish, for the future, the receipts into the Treasury from the sales of public lands, the impossibility that the committee should know whether any bill upon that subject will finally pass, and become a law; what may be the provisions of the bill which shall pass, in case any bill do pass; and what may be the effect, in practice, upon the receipts of money for land sales, of any given provisions which may be incorporated in any bill, and Mr. W. said he could not suppose it would be expected by the Senate that the Committee on Finance would have attempted any estimate of the amount to be reduced from the revenue from customs, in order to reduce the whole receipts into the Treasury to the standard of the economical wants of the Government. Against a body of contingencies and uncertainties of the magnitude and character specified, added to those which must always attend estimates of future revenue from uncertain sources, estimates in name would be more loose than ordinary conjectures; and so loose as to be of no other value than the mere conjectures of so many members of the body to which their report would be submitted. So much for the reasons which have led the committee to come to the conclusion not to attempt estimates, or calculations, or conjectures, as to the amount of money to come into the national Treasury during the present, or any future year. They have satisfied themselves that the reductions from the revenue from customs proposed by the bill they recommend, can be spared by the national Treasury, and leave it able to meet the necessary calls upon it. They do not pretend to say that further reductions will not be required to bring the revenue to the point so much desired, that of the economical wants of the Government. The receipts into the public Treasury are now greatly above that point. The committee have already said their examinations have convinced them that the great measures of reduction must be directed to that branch of the receipts arising from the sales of lands. They feel strongly the soundness of the principle, that reduction should be proceeded in cautiously and carefully, and, so far as that can be done, with a certainty that while we are remedying one evil we do not fall into another; that while we omit nothing which can properly be done to reduce the revenue to the wants of the Government, we do nothing calculated to carry us so far below that point as immediately to produce the necessity of again raising revenue by an increased rate of duties upon imports. These constant fluctuations, sudden and excessive changes in our revenue laws, and consequent agitations of the public mind, and uncertainties in the operations of mercantile and commercial men, Mr. W. said, he thought it most important, in any legislation, to avoid. Hence he, as a member of the committee, had determined to pursue what he considered a safe course, neither endangering nor disturbing any important protected interest of the country, or the public treasury in meeting the necessary calls upon it. He had not attempted to determine that the bill would do all that a full remedy for the existing evil demanded, but merely that, in the present state of uncertainty as to the other important branch of the public receipts and the influences upon it of the instant legislation of Congress, it was all the committee had concluded, at present, to recommend, and that so much might be done safely.

Mr. W. said there was no less difficulty in making calculations and estimates upon the other side of this great account, the public expenditures. The ordinary expenditures of the Government, that portion of the expenses required to keep all the departments of the Government in organization and operation, were laid before us by the proper fiscal officer of the Government, and appropriations to that extent might be very safely calculated upon. All the information within the power of the committee upon this class of appropriations had been equally fully in the hands of every member of Congress from the commencement of the session. No benefit here, then, could be derived from any report the committee could have made. All beyond this was within the pleasure of the two houses of Congress and the President. What extraordinary appropriations they might see fit to make for fortifications, for the navy, for public defence generally, or for any other of the great objects calling for expenditures of money, it was not only out of the power of the committee to say, but would be in vain for them to attempt to conjecture. They could not, therefore, with any certainty, estimate the expenses of the year. Mr. W. said he felt conscious that the appropriations of Congress would, as he thought those appropriations should, be graduated by a due regard to the ability of the treasury to pay, and the public and national wants to be supplied; but he also further believed that a redundant treasury always promoted, not large merely but extravagant appropriations, and one of his greatest anxieties to reduce the national revenues to the national wants arose from the conviction that in that way only can we preserve a system of economical expenditures. He would add no more upon this branch of the subject, hoping the Senate would find in these suggestions sufficient apology for the action of the committee in submitting the bill without any attempt at a report upon these vague uncertainties.

A single other remark, Mr. W. said, and he would relieve the Senate from listening to him further. He had not forgotten that another bill had been introduced elsewhere upon this same subject, and proposing to accomplish the same great purpose. He hoped he should not be considered as infringing, unpardonably, upon the rules of order, in making this reference to that measure. It might be supposed by some member of this body, it might be supposed by some member of the other House of Congress, or it might be supposed by some portion of our common constituents, that this bill coming from the Committee on Finance was designed to conflict with the measure referred to. For himself, Mr. W. said, he could say, with perfect truth, that no such motive or feeling had entered into his action. He was sure he could say the same for his colleagues upon the committee. They had considered the reference of the Senate, in the special manner in which it had been made, positive and mandatory upon them. A report of some sort was their duty, and the report which they believed most conformable to their duty, under the reference, was the bill he was about to present. The time for making their report, was not a matter of their pleasure. If made in the shape of a bill, they were bound to make it in time to permit the possibility of action upon it; and they had not been unfrequently reminded of the impatience of some members of the body for the conclusions to which they should come. Their delay had been unintentional and compulsory, and the advancement of the session had urgently admonished them that further delay would be equal to a failure to discharge the important and delicate duty entrusted to them. He (Mr. W.) thought that an examination of the two bills would satisfy every one that they could, in no sense, be antagonists to each other. The one proposes to add largely to the list of free articles, and to make material reductions upon two classes of articles not considered as belonging to the protected products or manufactures of the country. The other proposes to hasten, with very great rapidity, the reductions proposed to be made by the compromise act. It cannot, then, escape attention that there is no contradiction, in principle or action, between the two measures. Both may make too large, or too rapid, a reduction; but should the bill now presented fall short of its object, a sufficient reduction of the revenue from customs, it was his duty to say, that no other mode of further material reductions had suggested itself to his mind, in the course of his examinations and reflections upon the subject, than to adopt the principle of that bill, moderated as to time so as to suit the exigency. He would further say, that he wished those most interested in the great and important provisions of the compromise act, could see, as he thought he could see, that it was their peculiar interest to consent to a modification of that act, which should make its reductions of the revenue gradual and uniform from the present period to the year 1842; a little more rapid from this time to 1841, and much less precipitous and shocking to those interests from 1841 to 1842. As, however, the committee had no evidence before them of the feeling of the citizens most deeply interested in this policy, and as they had determined, if possible, to digest a bill which would meet with favor, and be passed into a law, they refrained from affixing any such condition to the bill they now report.

As to the instant effect of the two measures, Mr. W. said, he believed there would be little difference. The bill he held in his hand proposed to reduce a fraction over $2,400,000, from and after the 30th June next. The other measure to which he had referred, as he understood it, proposed to reduce about $7,000,000, at three periods stated, the first of which was the 30th of September next, and the only one of the three periods falling within the present year. That measure, however, was prospective, and this was not; but Congress would be again in session before that bill would have effected but one reduction, and the accounts of the Treasury for another year would have been laid before us as our guide to future and further action. He would detain the Senate no longer.

The bill and accompanying report was then read.

Mr. CLAY expressed his regret that the chairman of the committee had not thought proper to accompany a bill of so much importance as the one just read with a report, showing the probable revenue, as well as the probable expenditures, of the Government, for the present year. In considering the amount of revenue necessary to be provided for this or any other Government, two questions ought to be taken into view. First, the probable amount that can be raised from taxes, and second, the probable amount that it will be necessary to expend. In both of these particulars, Mr. C. said the Senator from New York had failed to give information, either verbally or in writing. He gets round it, said Mr. C. by supposing that it is not necessary to go into the inquiry; but every man who has heretofore been at the head of the financial concerns of the country, has thought it very proper to go into the most minute and extensive calculations, to ascertain not only what amount of revenue will be raised, but what amount will probably be expended. But (said Mr. C.) if the Senator thought it necessary to bring in a bill to reduce the revenue to the wants of the Government, how can he justify it to the country that he has not furnished any information as to what the probable expenditures will be? And if he has not done so, how can he arrive at the conclusion that there will be a redundant revenue, which he considers as one of the greatest evils that afflict the country? He would not (Mr. C. said) enlarge further on this head—he had merely risen to say that he should oppose to the utmost every disturbance of that compromise under which the most important interests of the country had flourished for years. With respect to the article of salt, the duty on which it was proposed to repeal, he would observe that the State he had the honor to represent was very little interested in it. The States most interested in this article were New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia and Ohio. So far as respected his own State, then, he had no objection to a repeal on this article, if it was not that he considered it a kind of entering wedge, by which the other great articles protected by the compromise bill were in time to be got at. Coal was another of the articles proposed to be touched, and every body shivering in this hard winter, and suffering from the present unexampled high price of fuel, would cry out in favor of the repeal; but this article, as well as salt and spiritous liquors, were all covered by the compromise act of 1833, and any attack on them would be viewed as a violation of the solemn pledges contained in that act. If you commence on these (said Mr. C.) you will not stop till you get to the great articles of cottons and woollens.

While the gentleman had brought in a bill which, to be sure, was less exceptionable than the one that was pending in the other House, were they not told by him that this one was not brought forward as an antagonist to the other; and that if the revenues could not be reduced to the wants of the Government, [an amount not specified] then some other expedient must be resorted to to bring it down to that standard? Sir, (said Mr. C.) I have accomplished the purpose for which I rose. You have the power in this and the other House, and therefore may disturb the peace of the country by re-opening all those wounds which have been healed by the compromise act; but you shall not do it with my consent, and without my solemn protest against it.

Mr. WRIGHT rose to say what he had intended to say when he was last up. The committee had considered that both the amount of the revenue and expenditures for the present year, depended so entirely on the action of Congress, that beyond the documents on the tables of members, they could communicate no valuable information. Mr. W. then moved the printing of the statement accompanying the bill; which was ordered, and the bill was ordered to a second reading.

Mr. DAVIS, after some remarks, moved that 1,000 extra copies of the statement be printed; which was agreed.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, and by unanimous consent, the bill was read the second time by its title, and made the order of the day for Thursday next.

On motion of Mr. NILES, the Committee on Manufactures was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of sundry hardware merchants of Baltimore, praying for a repeal of certain provisions in the tariff act.

On motion of Mr. KING of Georgia, the resolution submitted by him some days since, and adopted by the Senate, calling for information in relation to the republic of Texas, was rescinded.

The bill designating and limiting the funds which shall be receivable for the public revenues, came up on its third reading; when

Mr. BENTON addressed the Senate in a speech of some length in opposition to the bill; after which Mr. GRUNDY moved to lay it on the table for the purpose of taking up and acting on the resolution submitted by him for the appointment of a joint committee to count the votes for President and Vice President.

This motion having been agreed to, and Mr. GRUNDY's resolution being before the Senate,

Mr. GRUNDY said he had no objections to the inquiry proposed by the amendment, and he thought that some such provision as that proposed by the Senator from Kentucky would be very proper. He had seen in the public papers a statement charging that some of the electors who voted in the late Presidential election held offices under the General Government, and had made inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of the matter. The information he had been able to collect related to two cases only, and as to these, the report had been founded altogether on a misapprehension.

Mr. CLAY, after a few remarks, offered the following amendment:

"And also to inquire into the expediency of ascertaining whether any votes were given at the recent election, contrary to the prohibition contained in the second section of the second article of the Constitution. And if any such votes were given, what ought to be done with them, and whether any, and what provision ought to be made for securing the faithful observance in future of that section of the Constitution."

Mr. HUBBARD expressed his entire concurrence in the objects of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. He wished a strict inquiry to be instituted, and measures to be adopted to guard against the occurrence of such a violation of the Constitution as the Senator from Kentucky referred to. As it had been stated that two of the electors in his State (New Hampshire) held offices under the General Government, and were consequently ineligible, he was happy to state to the Senate that there was no foundation whatever for the report.

The amendment of Mr. CLAY was then adopted, and the resolution, thus amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HUBBARD moved that the committee be appointed by the Chair; which, by unanimous consent, was agreed to, and Messrs. GRUNDY, CLAY, and WRIGHT, were selected.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

FRIDAY, January 27, 1837.

Mr. THOMAS moved that ISAAC E. CRARY, who was in attendance from the State of Michigan, and whose credentials were presented at the last session of Congress, be now qualified, sworn, and assigned to his seat.

Mr. ROBERTSON said, being perfectly satisfied in his own mind that this individual was not entitled to a seat on that floor, he must oppose the motion; and he therefore moved to commit the question touching the election, qualification, and return of the member claiming his seat from Michigan to the Committee of Elections. He supported his motion on the ground that, at the time of Mr. Crary's election, Michigan was not a State of this Union, which only took place yesterday, and that any election made by her, when in a state of Territorial subjection, must be null and void.

Mr. THOMAS cited a number of precedents, showing that Senators and members of the House from new States, who must have been elected long prior to the ratification of their respective constitutions by Congress, had been permitted to take their seats as soon as their States were admitted. The cases of Illinois, Missouri, Mississippi, Alabama, and Indiana, bore directly, and Tennessee especally, on the point. Mr. T. cited from the journal the proceedings on those cases, in proof of their identity with that of Michigan.

Mr. HUNTSMAN called for the reading of what he termed the gentleman's "titles," remarking that he wished to see "the size of his commission."

The papers in question were then read from the Clerk's table, as follows:

State of Michigan, ss.

This shall certify that, at an election held on the first Monday of October and the succeeding day, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, pursuant to the provisions of the sixth section of the Schedule to the Constitution of the State of Michigan, ISAAC C. CRARY was duly elected the representative for the State of Michigan in the Congress of the United States.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the great seal of the State of Michigan to be affixed.

Done at the city of Detroit this 11th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, and of the independence of the United States the sixtieth.

(Signed) STEVENS T. MASON,
Governor of the State.

Mr. HUNTSMAN then said, that if gentlemen chose to amuse themselves with this question, and fight the Michigan battle over again, he, for one, was not disposed to indulge them; and therefore, added he, "Mr. Speaker, I call for the previous question most loudly."

The CHAIR stated the main question would be, "that Isaac E. Crary be qualified as a member of this House from the State of Michigan."

The previous question was then seconded by the House—ayes 97, noes not counted, and the main question ordered without a division.

Mr. YOUNG said, as he wished to record his vote in favor of the admission of Michigan into the Union, he would ask for the yeas and nays on the main question of qualifying its member.

The yeas and nays being ordered, the question was then taken and decided in the affirmative—yeas 150, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Chilton, Allan, Anthony, Ash, Ashley, Bailey, Barton, Bean, Bell, Black, Boon, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, Bynum, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, George Chambers, Chapman, Chapin, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Colles, Craig, Cramer, Cushing, Gushman, Darlington, Daubleday, Dunlap, Elmer, Elmore, Fairfield, Farlin, Forester, Fowler, Fry, Fuller, James Garland, Rice Garland, Gholston, Gillet, Glascock, Graham, Granger, Grantland, Grennell, Haley, J. Hall, H. Hall, Hamer, Hard, Hardin, Harlan, Samuel S. Harrison, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Herod, Hear, Holt, Hopkins, Hewart, Hubley, Hunt, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, William Jackson, James Jarvis, Jenifer, Joseph Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, Lawrence, Lay, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Logan, Loyall, Lyon, Job May, William Mason, Moses Mason, Sampson Mason, Maury, May, McComas, McKay, McKennan, McKean, McKim, Moore, Morgan, Page, Parker, Patterson, Franklin Pierce, Peyton, Phelps, Pickets, Rencher, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, Augustine H. Sheppard, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Spangler, Sundefer, Steele, Storer, Sutherland, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Waddy Thomson, Turner, Turvill, Vanderpool, Wardwell, Washington, Webster, Weeks, White, Elisha Whittelsey, Thomas T. Whittelsey, Yell, and Young—150.

NAYS—Messrs. Heman Allen, Beale, Bond, John Chambers, Chetwood, Childs, N. H. Claiborne, Corwin, Crane, Dawson, Deberry, Evans, Everett, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Harper, Hazeltine, Ingersoll, Love, Milligan, Patton, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phillips, Potts, Robertson, Russell, Taliaferro, Underwood, Vinton, and Lewis Williams—32.

So the House decided that ISAAC E. CRARY be now qualified to take his seat as a member from the State of Michigan.

Mr. CRARY was then proceeding to the table to qualify, when

Mr. DAWSON arose, and expressed an intention of moving to reconsider the last vote, to enable him to give his reasons for voting against the admission of Michigan, and against the motion to qualify the gentleman presenting himself as its member.

The CHAIR reminded the gentleman from Georgia that, as he had not voted with the majority, he could not make that motion.

Mr. DAWSON appealed to some gentlemen who had voted in the majority to make the motion he had indicated.

Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina, said he done so; and to enable his friend from Georgia to assign reasons for his vote, he moved to reconsider accordingly.

Mr. DAWSON briefly assigned his reasons, which were substantially that Michigan was only a Territory and not a State at the election of Mr. Crary.

Mr. PICKENS contended that Michigan was a State de facto before her admission, and must be so, by the terms of the Constitution, or she could not be admitted into the Union at all, for Congress had power only to admit "States" and not "Territories" into the confederacy. Therefore he should vote for the qualification of Mr. Crary.

Mr. EVERETT rose, and caught the eye of the Speaker.

Mr. THOMPSON rose at the same time, and said he would withdraw his motion to reconsider, but the Chair having announced the former gentleman as obtaining the floor, could not entertain the withdrawal.

Mr. EVERETT contended that Michigan could not be a State, even under the ordinance, until her admission by Congress.

Mr. CUSHMAN moved the previous question. Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina withdrew his motion to reconsider.

Mr. CRARY was then qualified, and took his seat as a representative in Congress from the State of Michigan.

TEXAS.

Mr. HOWARD inquired at what time the motion pending when the House adjourned last evening, would be again taken up?

[The motion in question was to commit certain papers and correspondence on the subject of Texas to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, made by Mr. H. himself, with the amendment of Mr. BOYD, to instruct the committee to report a resolution acknowledging the independence of Texas.]

The CHAIR replied that the regular proceedings of the day had so far been set aside by the consideration of a privileged question, and he would now proceed to call for reports.

Mr. HOWARD inquired if the motion referred to by him would come up again to-day?

The CHAIR replied that it could not at the present time, nor, in his opinion, to-day, because, at the expiration of an hour for reports, the private orders would come up.

Mr. HOWARD remarked that that was his own impression; but his object in making the inquiry was to ascertain it, and in view of that, to make a suggestion to the House, which he trusted would be favorably received from all quarters. It was that, as the question was not to be resumed until Monday next, and, as the documents lying on the table would have a very direct and important bearing upon the question the House would be called upon to decide, by general consent these documents be printed, with the understanding that the motion was in no way to affect the position of the other question which was pending. He would ask the consent of the House to make the motion to print.

This was agreed to, and the documents ordered to be printed accordingly.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Claims, made unfavorable reports upon the petitions of James and William Gilmore, and Catharine M. Smith; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill increasing the compensation of clerks: read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

WESTERN INDIANS.

On motion of Mr. EVERETT, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the "bill to provide for the security and protection of the emigrant and other Indians west of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas;" and the same was recommended to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, moved to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the "bill to provide for the enlistment of boys in the naval service," and that it be now taken up and considered.

Mr. BELL objected to giving precedence to bills over other business of an important character.

Mr. JARVIS explained that he had been unanimously instructed to make the motion by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and gave several reasons for the speedy passage of this bill.

Some difficulty of a personal character took place between the gentlemen from Maine and Tennessee, in reference to the objection made by the latter to setting aside pending business, and giving the priority to other bills that would produce debate.

Mr. MERCER, after some few remarks of a conciliatory nature, moved that a pledge be required of the two gentlemen that the difficulty might not be prosecuted further.

After some remarks from Messrs. BELL, JARVIS, MERCER, PATTON, PICKENS, GLASCOCK, WHITTLESEY of Ohio, BOULDIN, THOMAS, PEYTON, THOMPSON of Ohio, LAWLER, CRAIG, PHILLIPS, THOMPSON of South Carolina, BYNUM, HAWES, POON, BRIGGS, EVANS, PARKS, and WISE, mutual explanations took place, and then, on motion,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 28, 1837.

The VICE PRESIDENT rose and addressed the Senate as follows:

SENATORS: The period is at hand which is to terminate the official relation that has existed between us, and I leave, probably never to return to it, a body with which I have been long connected—where some remain whom I found here fifteen years ago, and where, in the progress of public duty, personal associations have arisen never to be forgotten. From such scenes I cannot retire without emotion. Nor can I give to the Senate the usual opportunity of choosing another to preside, for a time, over their deliberations, without referring to the manner in which I have endeavored to discharge a most gratifying and honorable trust connected with the office to which my country called me.

Entering upon it with unaffected diffidence, well knowing how little my studies had been turned to its peculiar duties, I was yet strengthened by the determination, then expressed, so to discharge the authority with which I was invested as best "to protect the rights, to respect the feelings, and to guard the reputations of all who could be affected by its exercise." I was sure that, if successful in this, I should be pardoned for errors I could scarcely expect to avoid.

In the interval that has since elapsed, it has been our lot, in this assembly, to pass through scenes of unusual excitement. The intense interest on absorbing topics which has pervaded our whole community, could not be unfelt within these walls. The warmth of political parties, natural in such times, the unguarded ardor of sudden debate, and collisions, seldom to be separated from the invaluable privilege of free discussion, have not unfrequently been mingled with the more tranquil tenor of ordinary legislation. I cannot hope that in emergencies like these, I have always been so fortunate as to satisfy every one around me; yet I permit myself to think, that the extent to which my decisions have been approved by the Senate is some evidence that my efforts justly to administer their rules have not been vain; and I conscientiously cherish the conviction, that on no occasion have I departed from my early resolution, or been regardless of what was due to the rights or the feelings of the members of this body.

Though I may henceforth be separated from the Senate, I can never cease to revert with peculiar interest to my long connection with it. In every situation of my future life, I shall remember, with a just pride, the evidences of approbation and confidence which I have here received; and as an American citizen, devotedly attached to the institutions of my country, I must always regard, with becoming and sincere respect, a branch of our Government invested with such extensive powers, and designed by our forefathers to accomplish such important results.

Indulging an ardent wish that every success may await you, in performing the exalted and honorable duties of your public trust, and offering my warmest prayers that prosperity and happiness may be constant attendants upon each of you along the future paths of life, I respectfully bid you farewell.

Mr. GRUNDY moved that the Senate proceed to ballot for a President pro tem.; and there being no objection made, the ballots of the several Senators present were collected in the ballot box, which, on being counted, showed the following result:

There were 37 ballots given, 25 of which were necessary to a choice; of these

Mr. KING of Alabama received	-	-	26
Mr. SOUTHARD	-	-	7
Scattering	-	-	4

So that Mr. KING of Alabama was duly elected, and was conducted to the chair by Mr. BENTON.

Mr. KING of Alabama, on taking the Chair, addressed the Senate as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE SENATE:

To be again called to preside over the deliberations of this august assembly, fills my heart with the liveliest emotions of gratitude. When at the last session it pleased the Senate to place me in this exalted situation, I solemnly pledged myself to discharge the duties it devolved on me, without favour and without partiality. I felt conscious that I had done so; but could any thing add to the grateful sense I entertain of the honor you have again conferred on me, it will be found in the unequivocal testimony you have this day borne that I had faithfully redeemed that pledge. The Senate of the United States, gentlemen, is, from its very organization, the great conservative body in this Republic. Here is the strong citadel of liberty. To this body, the intelligent and the virtuous throughout our wide-spread country look with confidence for an unwavering and unflinching resistance to the encroachments of power on the one hand, and the effervescence of popular excitement on the other. Unaved and unseduced, it should firmly maintain the Constitution in its purity, and present an impregnable barrier against every attack on that sacred instrument, come it from what quarter it may. The demon of faction should find no abiding place in this chamber; but every heart and every head should be wholly occupied in advancing the general welfare, and preserving unimpaired the national honor. To insure success, gentlemen, in the discharge of our high duties, we must command the confidence and receive the support of the people. Calm deliberation, courtesy towards each other, order and decorum in debate, will go far, very far, to inspire that confidence and command that support. It becomes my duty, gentlemen, to banish, if practicable, from this hall, all personal altercation—to check at once every remark of a character personally offensive, to preserve order, and promote harmony. These duties, as far as my powers will permit, I shall unhesitatingly perform. I earnestly solicit your co-operation, gentlemen, in aiding my efforts promptly to put down every species of disorder. For your kindness, gentlemen, I tender you my grateful acknowledgments.

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY,

Ordered, That the Secretary wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that the Senate has, in the absence of the Vice President, elected as its President pro tempore, the honorable WILLIAM R. KING, a Senator from the State of Alabama; and

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, it was further ordered that a similar notice be sent to the House of Representatives.

Mr. ROBBINS presented a joint resolution from the General Assembly of Rhode Island, protesting against interference with the compromise act by Congress; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TIPTON presented a joint resolution from the Legislature of Indiana, relative to the purchase of the Louisville and Portland Canal Stock; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce at Philadelphia, praying that Newcastle, on the Delaware river, may be made a port of entry; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LINN presented a memorial from the Legislature of Missouri, asking Congress to give a strip of land, lately belonging to an Indian to that State; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Thomas R. Bee; also, from a memorial of the citizens of Alexandria; which was agreed to.

Petitions were presented by Messrs. RIVES, PRENTISS, and SOUTHARD.

Mr. CALHOUN submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate a copy of the correspondence with the Government of Great Britain, in relation to the outrage committed on our flag and the rights of our citizens, by the authorities of Bermuda and New Providence, in seizing the slaves on board of the brigs Encomium and Enterprise, engaged in the coasting trade, but which were forced by shipwreck and stress of weather into the ports of those islands.

Mr. ROBBINS submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to procure eighteen copies of the American State papers, printed by Messrs. Gales and Seaton, under the act of the 2d of March, 1831, and joint resolution of the 2d of March, 1833, for the use of such members of the Senate as are now entitled to them.

Mr. SEVIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, asked to discharge them from the further consideration of the petition of the widow of Jonathan Ford; which was agreed to.

Mr. LYON presented a petition of the inhabitants of Niles and vicinity; and also another from the inhabitants of New Buffalo, in Michigan, for an appropriation for the construction of a harbor, and the erection of a light-house, at the mouth of Galien river, on Lake Michigan;

Also, the petition of Beckford P. Hutchinsen, Silas Titus and Charles Tryon of Michigan, assignees of Pierre Bonhomme, praying Congress to provide for issuing to them a patent for a tract of land in St. Clair county, Michigan, confirmed to said Bonhomme by an act of Congress, passed in the year 1828, relative to private land claims in Michigan Territory.

Also, the petition for the establishment of a post route from the village of Flint river, in Genesee county, Michigan, by way of the villages of Owasso and Mapleton, to the village of Lyons, in Iowa county, in said State.

Also, the petition of one hundred and eighty-eight citizens of Wisconsin Territory, in behalf of Hiram Burnham, praying Congress to grant such quantity of land as may be considered a fair compensation for money expended by him, in guiding a military detachment sent out from Fort Dearborn to apprehend certain Indian murderers on Rock river, in the year 1835.

Also, the petition of the inhabitants of Kalamazoo and Allegan, in the State of Michigan, praying Congress to provide for the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of the Kalamazoo river of Lake Michigan.

Also, the petition of Hiram Humphrey, praying compensation for loss sustained in building a bridge for the United States over Crooked creek, in Michigan, on the road from Detroit to Chicago, in consequence of said bridge being carried away by the flood, when partly completed.

Also, the petition of Amos Howe, a purchaser of public land in the year 1818, praying for relief in consequence of a mistake of the officers of the Land Office at Detroit, in fixing the minimum price at which lands were then sold at four, instead of two dollars per acre.

Mr. SEVIER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which had been referred the bill from the House for the relief of William C. Beard, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the bill to grant a certain quantity of land for purposes of internal improvement, reported the same without amendment, and said that the committee recommended its passage.

Mr. WALKER, from the same committee, also reported without amendment the bill from the House for the relief of John Jeffers.

Mr. FULTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which had been referred the bill for the relief of sundry citizens of Arkansas, who have lost their improvements in consequence of the treaty with the Choctaw Indians, reported the same without amendment.

On motion of Mr. WHITE, the Committee on Indian affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of sundry half-breeds of the Sac and Fox tribes of Indians; also from the further consideration of the memorial of the Legislature of Illinois praying remuneration for those of their citizens who have suffered by Indian depredations, the subject of the last petition being provided for in a bill now pending.

Mr. WALKER from the Committee on Public Lands to which was referred the bill to provide for the adjudication of title to and final disposition of the four sections of land reserved for the cultivation of the vine and olive in the Tombigbee country, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. NORVELL, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of James Witherall; which was twice read and referred.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, leave was granted to Richard H. Ayres to withdraw his petition and papers.

The following resolution was offered by Mr. BENTON, and, by unanimous consent, was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Senate cordially reciprocate the sentiments of personal kindness, expressed by Martin Van Buren, Vice President of the United States, towards the members of this body upon taking leave of them; and that the thanks of the Senate be presented to him, in testimony of the impartiality, dignity and ability, with which he has presided over their deliberations, and of their entire approbation of his conduct in the discharge of the arduous and important duties assigned him as President of the Senate.

SPECIAL ORDER.

The bill designating and limiting the funds which shall be receivable in payment for the public revenues was taken up; being on its third reading,

Mr. SEVIER moved to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Monday, for the purpose of going on with the land bill; which motion was lost—ayes 13, noes not counted.

Mr. WALKER addressed the Senate at length in support of the bill, and in reply to Mr. Benton; and, after some remarks from Messrs. WEBSTER, RIVES and BENTON,

On motion of Mr. RIVES,
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 28, 1837.

The unfinished business of yesterday being the motion of Mr. JARVIS to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the "bill to provide for the enlistment of boys in the naval service," was resumed and disagreed to.

On Motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, certain documents comprising estimates from the Indian Department, from the Ordnance Department and the Commissioner of the Public Buildings, were committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (having charge of the appropriation bills for those Departments) and ordered to be printed.

ARMY RESIGNATIONS.

Mr. OWENS asked the consent of the House to take up and consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish this House with a detailed statement of the number and names of the officers in the regular army of the United States, who have resigned their commissions within the last twelve months, and the dates of said resignations, number and names of the officers who have applied for and obtained furloughs within the same period of time, the date of said furloughs, and the reasons for granting the same; and the number and names of the officers who have refused to comply with the last general order of the President of the United States, requiring the officers of the army to join their regiments, and the reasons for such non-compliance; and any other matter connected with the subject that he may deem important to the public interests.

Objections being made, Mr. O. moved a suspension of the rule: Lost.

COLLECTION REGULATIONS.

Mr. PINCKNEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to amend an act approved the 1st of March, 1823, supplementary to, and amendatory of, the act entitled an act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, and for other purposes, passed the 7th of March, 1797; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

U. S. CIRCUIT COURTS IN NORTH CAROLINA AND TENNESSEE.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the Senate bill, without amendment, for altering the times of holding the Circuit Court of the United States at Raleigh, in North Carolina; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading on Monday next.

Mr. THOMAS, from the same committee, also reported a similar bill in relation to the Circuit Courts of the United States in Tennessee, which he moved to take the same course as the preceding.

Mr. DUNLAP said he had prepared an amendment which he designed to offer to this bill, being an additional section, providing for altering also the times of holding the United States Circuit Court in the western part of Tennessee.

Mr. THOMAS said, then, for the purpose of giving the gentleman an opportunity of submitting his amendment, he moved to commit the bill to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which was agreed to.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Abraham Forbes: read twice and committed.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. DROMGOOLE, from the Select Committee on that part of the President's message relating to an amendment of the Constitution of the United States, made the following report, in part, and resolutions:

The select committee, to whom was referred so much of the President's message as relates to amending the Constitution of the United States, together with all propositions and resolutions submitted at the last and present session of Congress, proposing amendments to the Constitution, report, in part: that, according to order, they have had under consideration sundry propositions and resolutions for the amendment of the Constitution in relation to the election of President and Vice President of the United States. Upon examination, they find that a report on this subject was made at the last session of Congress, on the 30th March, 1836, by a select committee. The joint resolution reported by said committee, was twice read and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. No further action was had thereon, and the said reported joint resolution remains on the calendar, and may, at the pleasure of the House, be considered in said Committee of the Whole. If, therefore, the House be disposed to act on this subject during the present session of Congress, your committee think it more advisable to consider the report now on the calendar than to begin de novo. Your committee, therefore, submit the two following resolutions:

Resolved, That the select committee to which the subject was referred, be discharged from the further consideration of all propositions and resolutions relating to the amendments of the Constitution on the subject of the election of President and Vice President.

Resolved, That this House will, on the 31st inst. resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to take into consideration the joint resolutions proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in relation to the election of President and Vice President.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina, called for a division of the question on the resolutions; and the first being agreed to without a count;

Mr. W. asked for the yeas and nays on concurring with the second resolution, (which would require a vote of two-thirds,) and they were ordered.

Mr. VANDERPOEL moved to insert the 7th of February, instead of 31st inst: lost.

Mr. CAMBRELENG and Mr. BOON both severally expressed a hope that no more special orders would be adopted, since the inconvenience of them had been sufficiently experienced last session. Mr. CAMBRELENG further inquired if it was designed to cut off the appropriation bills of this session altogether? Because, if so, he trusted the order would not be adopted.

Mr. HOWARD inquired if the order should be adopted, whether it would take precedence of other bills on each day thereafter, or only on that day?

The CHAIR replied, that after that day it would take its place on the calendar among the unfinished business.

The question was then taken and decided in the negative—yeas 66, nays 83.

YEAS—Messrs. Chilton Allen, Bailey, Beale, Bell, Bond, Boyd, Bunch, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, Carter, George Chambers, Chetwood, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Clark, Cleveland, Connor, Darlington, Dunny, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Everett, Graham, Granger, Grennell, Griffin, Samuel S. Harrison, Hawes, Herold, Hopkins, Howell, Hubley, Lawler, Lawrence, Lea, Lewis, Lyon, Sampson Mason, Maury, McCarty, McComas, Montgomery, Morgan, Morris, Patton, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phillips, Pickens, Richardson, Robertson, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Sioane, Stauder, Steele, Thomas, John Thompson, Turner, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Washington, White E. Whittlesey, L. Williams, S. Williams, and Young—66.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, H. Allen, Barton, Bean, Back, Boon, Boyce, Briggs, Brown, Buchanan, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chapman, John F. H. Claiborne, Craig, Crary, Cushman, Deberry, Eimer, Farlin, Fuller, Grelson, G. Cascock, Grantland, Grayson, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hanceman, Hawkins, Haynes, Hazeltine, Henderson, Hoar, Holsely, Holt, Howard, Huntsman, Ingham, Jones, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, Cave Johnson, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Kilgore, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Gideon Lee, Thomas Lee, Loyall, Job Mann, William Mason, Moses Mason, McKay, McKee, McKen, McKim, Merce, Miller, Montgomery, Morgan, Morris, Owens, Page, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phelps, Puckney, Potts, John Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Sioane, Sprague, Stauder, Taylor, Thomas, John Thompson, Waddy Thompson, Weeks, White, Elisha Whittlesey, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, and Yell—123.

So the second resolution was disagreed to.

Before the decision was announced,

Mr. PARKS rose and stated that when his name was called he was not in his seat, being in attendance upon a select committee, which had leave to sit during the sessions of the House; and he therefore asked leave to record his vote.

Mr. MERCER objected.

Mr. PARKS moved a suspension of the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina thought a member had a right to vote under the circumstances stated by the gentleman from Maine, viz: absence under an order of the House.

The CHAIR replied that that question had frequently been decided otherwise by the House itself.

The motion of Mr. PARKS was disagreed to.

Mr. TURRILL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Captain Elisha Ely, praying for commutation of pay; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN, from same committee, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Jacob White, for an increase of Pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DUNLAP, from the Committee on Public Lands, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Archibald C. Crary, praying to commute his pension for certain grants of land; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DUNLAP, from same committee, made an unfavorable report on the memorial of the Recorder of the General Land Office, praying for an increase of salary; which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. LEA, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions was discharged for the further consideration of the petition of Benj. Briggs.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Saterbee Clark; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

On motion of Mr. MUNTSMAN, the Committee on Public Lands were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John Garnier.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the petitions of Daniel Sellers, Hampton Lovegrove, and Christopher Dennison; which were severally ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. LOYALL, the Committee of Ways and Means were discharged from the consideration of the memorial of Geo. Whitman, praying to be allowed to import, free of duty, materials for certain iron steamboats; and the same was committed to the Committee of Manufactures.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the memorial of Gordon Robbins, praying indemnity for the loss of his vessel, which was burned by the British during the late war.

Mr. VANDERPOEL asked leave to offer a resolution proposing to change the daily hour of meeting of the House, from and after this date, to 11 o'clock, A. M.

Objections being made,

Mr. CRAIG moved a suspension of the rule.

Mr. VANDERPOEL called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and were—yeas 123, nays 45.

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bailey, Barton, Beale, Bean, Bell, Black, Boon, Boyce, Boyd, Buchanan, Bunch, Burnes, Bynum, John Calhoun, William B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Carr, Carter, Casey, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chapman, Chapin, Chetwood, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Clark, Corwin, Craig, Crane, Crary, Cushman, Deberry, Denny, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Effer, Everett, Farlin, Fowler, Fry, Glasscock, Graham, Grantland, Graves, Haley, Harper, Samuel S. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Herod, Hoar, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Hunt, Huntsman, Ingham, William Jackson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Benjamin Jones, Kennon, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, T. Lee, L. Lea, Logan, Loyall, Lyon, Abijah Mann, Job Mann, William Mason, Moses Mason, McCarty, McKay, McKenman, McKim, McKim, Merce, Miller, Montgomery, Morgan, Morris, Owens, Page, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phelps, Puckney, Potts, John Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Sioane, Sprague, Stauder, Taylor, Thomas, John Thompson, Waddy Thompson, Turner, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Wardwell, Washington, Weeks, White, Elisha Whittlesey, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, and Yell—123.

NAYS—Messrs. Heman Allen, Bond, Briggs, Brown, Childs, John F. H. Claiborne, Connor, Dawson, Elmore, Fuller, Rice, Garland, Gholson, Granger, Grayson, Joseph Hall, Hulan, Hall, Harlan, Hazeltine, Howell, Hubley, Jarvis, Kilgore, Laporte, Lawrence, Gideon Lee, L. ve. Sampson Mason, Maury, McKim, Milligan, Muhlenberg, Parker, Parks, Patton, Phillips, Pickens, Joseph Reynolds, Rogers, Russell, Schenck, Seymour, Spangler, Storer, Vinton, and Young—45.

So the rule was suspended.

Mr. VANDERPOEL moved the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BOYD moved to amend it by inserting 10 o'clock instead of 11. Lost.

The resolution was then agreed to without a division.

BUFFALO HARBOR.

Mr. LOVE moved a suspension of the rule, for the purpose of taking up and considering the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to report to this House the survey and examination made of a harbor at the east end of Lake Erie, connecting the present harbors of Buffalo and Black Rock; together with his opinion of the practicability of the construction of said harbor, and of its utility and necessity in regard to the increasing commerce upon that Lake.

The motion was agreed to; and the resolution having been read,

Mr. MANN, of N. Y. inquired of his colleague if he expected to procure any further action of the House upon the subject of the harbors of Buffalo and Black Rock during the present session? Because, if he did, he (Mr. M.) had a word or two to say on the subject.

Mr. LOVE replied that all he expected to procure before the close of the present session, was the opinion of the Secretary of War in regard to the controverted questions of the practicability and expediency of constructing the work referred to. He had no expectation to obtain legislation early enough this session.

The resolution was then agreed to.

PASSAIC RIVER, N. J.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a survey of the bar and obstructions to the navigation of the Passaic river, below the city of Newark, New Jersey; which, on motion of Mr. PARKER, was referred to the Committee of Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SOUTH ATLANTIC COAST.

On motion of Mr. DAWSON, (by unanimous consent,) the House took up, considered, and agreed to the following resolution.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to communicate to this House the report of the Naval Commission who were charged with the examination of the South Atlantic sea-coast, for the most eligible site for a naval depot and navy yard.

CANADA TRADE.

Mr. HALL of Maine, asked leave to offer the following resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of revising the laws regulating the trade upon the frontiers, between the United States and the British Provinces, and abolishing duties on lumber the growth of the United States, sawed in the said Provinces and brought into the United States; and also upon produce the growth of the Provinces brought into the United States.

Objection being made, Mr. H. moved a suspension of the rule: lost, 86 to 55, not two-thirds.

Mr. MANN of New York moved a suspension of the rule for the purpose of calling the States for resolutions and considering the same, provided that such resolutions should not occasion debate.

Mr. PARKER suggested a modification, so as to embrace resolutions calling for information from the departments, and now lying on the table for consideration.

Mr. MANN assented, but the motion to suspend was lost.

The House then proceeded to the orders of the day, and took up the

PRIVATE ORDERS.

The first business in order was the motion made on Saturday last by Mr. JARVIS to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of N. and L. Dana and Co. was rejected.

After some remarks by Messrs. JARVIS, ADAMS, PEARCE of Rhode Island, and SUTHERLAND,

Mr. McKIM moved the previous question.

Mr. WARDWELL then moved to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and were—yeas 89, nays 63.

So the bill was laid on the table.

The bill to grant to the Atchafalaya Railroad and Banking company, the right of way through the public lands of the United States, was read the third time and passed.

The bill for the relief of Ebenezer Breed, was then taken up on its third reading.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON moved to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. HAWES called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PATTON said as this vote would be the settling of an important principle, he moved a call of the House: lost.

The yeas and nays were then ordered, and were—yeas 60, nays 90.

So the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina moved a call of the House.

Mr. PATTON called for the yeas and nays on this motion, which were ordered, and were—yeas 60, nays 94.

So the House refused to order the call.

The question then recurred on the passage of the bill.

After some remarks by Messrs. CAVE JOHNSON, PHILLIPS, LAWRENCE, PARKER, and HOAR.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved the previous question, which was seconded—yeas 88, nays 36.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON then moved an adjournment: lost.

Mr. GRAVES called for the yeas and nays on ordering the main question: lost.

Mr. PARKS then moved a call of the House, and on that motion called for the yeas and nays, which were not ordered; and the motion for the call was lost.

The main question was then ordered.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, which were ordered, and were yeas 85, nays 59; so the bill was passed.

The bill to place the name of Doct. John P. Briggs on the navy pension roll was then taken up.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Kentucky moved to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PINCKNEY moved to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Friday next.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON moved an adjournment, but withdrew for the SPEAKER to present an Executive communication.

The SPEAKER then laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting an abstract of the number of American seamen registered in each port of entry of the United States during the year 1836; which, on motion of Mr. PHILLIPS, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. PINCKNEY,
The House adjourned.

[In the sketch of Mr. HANNEGAN's remarks, on the mileage bill, it was stated that Mr. H. said he travelled to Washington by the direct route. It should have been that he travelled by the only practicable, though not the direct, route, and that he charged for the route he was compelled to travel.]

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 30, 1837.

The CHAIR laid before the Senate a communication from the War Department, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 24th inst. a report from the officer in charge of the Topographical Bureau; which, on motion of Mr. GRUNDY, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TIPTON presented a memorial from the Legislative Assembly of Indiana, relative to a continuation of the Cumberland road; which was ordered to be printed, and laid on the table.

Mr. HEBBARD presented certain resolutions, adopted by the Legislature of New Hampshire; which were ordered to be printed, and laid on the table.

Mr. HUBBARD presented a memorial from Jeremiah Smith and others, praying for an appropriation to remove certain obstructions in the Patapsco river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NILES presented a memorial from W. H. Smith; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIR presented a memorial from the President and Directors of the Montgomery Railroad Company, asking that they may be allowed to construct a railroad through the public lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, two memorials, praying for a post route; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SWIFT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the bill for the relief of John G. Wool without amendment.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, asked to discharge it from the further consideration of the petition of John Roberts; which was agreed to.

Mr. TOMLINSON, from the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred a resolution as to the necessity of increasing the number of documents denominated "the usual number," reported a resolution that the number of copies of any document ordered by the Senate to be printed, shall be eight hundred and fifty; of the journal one thousand and fifty; and of bills, joint resolutions, and amendments, five hundred, to be distributed under the direction of the Secretary; which was considered and adopted.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported the bill granting a quantity of land to the University of St. Louis, without amendment.

Mr. WALKER, from the same committee, to which had been referred the petition of James Trimble, reported a bill for his relief; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the memorial of sundry merchants of New York, praying that certain extensions of credit may be granted them on account of duties payable at the customs, asked that the committee might be discharged from the further consideration of it. Also, from the memorial of Richard J. Todd, praying for a repeal of the duty on watches; also, from the memorial of a number of proprietors of coal land in Virginia, adverse to a reduction of the duty on coal; which was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the same committee, to which was referred the resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to have corrected a clerical error made in the award of the commissioners under the treaty with France, in 1831, reported the resolution from the House without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the same committee, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of George Law, administrator of John Smith; which was agreed to.

Mr. NILES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, asked that they be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Benjamin Sawyer; which was agreed to.

Mr. RIVES, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Jordan; which was read twice and referred.

Mr. CLAY moved to take up the motion which was laid on the table the other day, to refer the memorial of the Colonization Society, asking for a charter, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALHOUN called for the yeas and nays on the question, which were accordingly ordered, and the motion was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, Clayton, Davis, Kent, Knight, Morris, Niles, Prentiss, Robbins, Robinson, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, and Wall—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Cuthbert, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Nicholas, Norvell, Page, Preston, Rives, Ruggles, Strange, Tipton, Walker, White, and Wright—25.

The following resolutions were submitted, and, by unanimous consent, adopted:

By Mr. BLACK:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the Recorder of the General Land Office.

By Mr. PRENTISS:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a pension agency Montpelier, in the State of Vermont, for the payment of all pensioners of the United States resident in the counties of Washington, Orange, Caledonia, Orleans, Essex and Lamoille, in said State.

By Mr. LYON:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire into the propriety of making an appropriation to supply a deficiency of two thousand one hundred and fifty-nine dollars and seventy-two cents in the appropriation made last year to defray the expenditures of the Legislative Council of Michigan Territory.

By Mr. LINN:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting relief to General Thomas A. Smith, late receiver of public moneys in the State of Missouri, who lost, notwithstanding all proper care, one thousand dollars of the public funds on the way to the place of deposit in the city of New Orleans.

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation to pay for the service of two companies of mounted volunteers commanded by Captains David R. Hutchinson and Smith Crawford, who were called into the field under an order emanating from the Governor of the State of Missouri, to quell some disturbances between the whites and Indians which took place in the course of the past summer on the frontiers of said State.

Mr. NORVELL submitted the following resolutions, which lie on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals inquire into the expediency of granting to the State of Michigan five per cent. of the net proceeds of all public lands lying within the said State, which were sold, under the authority of the United States, from the first of January, 1836, to the first of Jul^y, 1836; such proceeds to be applied, under the direction of the Legislature of the State, to the completion of the military roads commenced therein by the United States while Michigan was a Territory.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for a survey of the Falls of St. Mary, with a view to the construction of a ship channel around said falls, between Lake Superior and Lake Huron.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands inquire into the expediency of establishing a Surveyor General's office in the State of Michigan.

The bill to designate and limit the funds which shall be receivable for the public revenue, was taken up as the special order; and

Mr. RIVES addressed the House at length in its support, and in reply to Mr. Benton.

Mr. MORRIS spoke at length in opposition to the bill; and, after some remarks from Mr. WEBSTER,

Mr. CALHOUN intimated a wish to address the Senate on the subject, when,

Mr. BENTON moved to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. WALKER called for the yeas and nays on the question; which being ordered, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 29, nays 18.

The bill from the House for the relief of Ebenezer Breed; and

The bill from the House, granting to the Atchafalaya Banking and Railroad company the right of way through the public lands; were read twice and referred.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill to limit the sales of the public lands to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, was taken up as the next special order, the question being on Mr. BUCHANAN'S amendment, to allow individuals in the old States to enter lands in the names of their minor children.

Mr. KING of Georgia moved to postpone the bill until to-morrow, in consequence of the absence of the gentleman whose amendment was pending. This question was decided in the negative—yeas 18, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Moore, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, and White—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Cuthbert, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Preston, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, and Wright—27.

The question was then taken on Mr. BUCHANAN'S amendment, which was adopted—yeas 28, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Cuthbert, Ewing of Illinois, Hendricks, Hubbard, Kent, Knight, Lyon, Nicholas, Norvell, Prentiss, Rives, Robbins, Robinson, Sevier, Southard, Strange, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, Webster, and White—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Fulton, Grundy, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Moore, Morris, Niles, Page, Preston, Ruggles, Tipton, and Wright—15.

Mr. Clay moved further to amend, by striking out the fourth section, which contains the pre-emption principle; and, after a debate, in which the motion was supported by Messrs. CLAY, MORRIS, and CALHOUN, and opposed by Messrs. WALKER and SEVIER.

On motion of Mr. MORRIS,

The Senate adjourned—yeas 23, nays 22.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

MONDAY, Jan. 30, 1837.

Pursuant to the order of Saturday, the House assembled at 11 o'clock, A. M. but the attendance being thin,

Mr. HOWELL moved a call of the House.

Mr. GRANGER asked for the yeas and nays, remarking that doubtless there would be a quorum before the roll would be gone through, which would answer the purpose of a call.

The yeas and nays were accordingly ordered, and were—yeas 57, nays 55.

So a majority of the members present agreed that there should be a call.

Mr. ALLAN of Kentucky moved to dispense with it.

The CHAIR remarked, that by the vote just taken, there did not appear to be a quorum present.

Mr. BRIGGS moved that the House be counted.

This being done, it was ascertained that there were 124 members present, and the call of the House was then dispensed with.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Messrs. JARVIS, EVANS, BAILEY and FAIRFIELD of Maine.

[Mr. HALL of Maine, renewed his motion to submit the resolution offered by him on Saturday, to instruct the Committee on Commerce to inquire into the expediency of revising the laws regulating the trade upon the northern frontier, and of abolishing duties on lumber, the growth of the United States, sawed in said Provinces, and brought back, &c. which was objected to.]

Mr. CUSHMAN of New Hampshire.

[Mr. CUSHMAN presented the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of New Hampshire, which were laid on the table and ordered to be printed.]

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

WHEREAS, Government was "instituted for the common benefit, protection and security of the whole community, and not for the private interests or emolument of any one man or class of men: And whereas, all manner of unnecessary taxation, whether it have for its object distribution, the granting of protection to certain individuals only, or of certain kinds of manufactures, to the exclusion of all other individuals, manufactures, or trades, is highly detrimental to the best interests of the whole people: And whereas any system of direct or indirect taxation for the purpose of internal improvements, to benefit exclusively certain individuals, or sections of country, at the expense of other individuals, and other sections, is highly to be deprecated on account of its manifest injustice to the great mass of the community: And whereas any distribution of the surplus revenue of the General Government to the States, whether that surplus is an accidental one or otherwise, is contrary to the true spirit and meaning of the Constitution, and if the practice of taxing the people unnecessarily for that purpose is adopted, will tend towards the creation of a consolidated Government, and to the ultimate and complete dependence of the several States upon that Government: Therefore Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court convened, That all revenue arising from imports or direct taxation should not exceed the legitimate wants of the Government, and that any system tending to increase the revenue beyond that point, is oppressive and unequal; therefore any compromise made by the representatives of the people tending to increase the same beyond that point, can have no binding moral obligation upon their successors.

And be it further resolved, That a system of internal improvements for the purpose of benefiting certain sections of the country at the expense of other sections, is not only unconstitutional, but highly oppressive to the great mass of community, and that such improvements should therefore be left to individual enterprise.

And be it further resolved, That any distribution of the surplus revenues of the General Government, would be not only contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, but if adopted will tend to the establishment of a consolidated Government, degrading to the States, and reducing them to servile dependence upon the General Government.

And be it further resolved, That our Senators in the Congress of the United States be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to use their exertions to procure such reduction of the tariff, having due regard to the general interests of the whole community, as to meet the actual wants of the Government, and such graduation of the prices and limitation of the sales of the public lands, as will best promote the settlement and actual occupancy of the same.

And that they be further instructed and requested to vote against any bill or resolution providing for the distribution to the States of any moneys which may hereafter be in the Treasury of the United States; or for the alteration or change of the laws now existing regulating the deposit of public moneys so as to distribute or relinquish the repayment of the same; and that they be further directed to lay this preamble and these resolutions before both Houses of Congress.

C. G. ATHERTON,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

JAMES CLARK,

President of the Senate.

Approved, January 13, 1837.

ISAAC HILL, Governor.

A true copy:

RALPH METCALF, Secretary of State.

MESSRS. BRIGGS, CUSHING, PHILLIPS, GREENNELL, REED, HOAR, JACKSON, LINCOLN, CALHOUN, and ADAMS, of Massachusetts.

[Mr. BRIGGS presented the petition of the heirs of Gilbert Dench, late of Massachusetts, for the amount due said Dench on a contract for transporting supplies during the revolutionary war; of Wm. Bacon and others of Richmond, Massachusetts, for a post route.

[Mr. ADAMS stated to the House that he had in his possession several petitions on the subject of the abolition of slavery, the slave trade, &c. and he asked permission to address the House on the right of the petitioners to have their petitions read. He also asked that their request might be entered on the journal, and that the question might be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. ANTHONY inquired of the Chair whether the gentleman from Massachusetts could call for the yeas and nays on a request of this kind.

The CHAIR said the gentleman from Massachusetts could attain his object by moving a suspension of the rule, for the purpose of addressing the House on the subject alluded to.

Mr. ADAMS then moved a suspension of the rules, for the purpose of addressing the House on the right of these petitioners to have their petitions read; and, on that motion, called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and were—yeas 44, nays 124, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, H. Allen, Bailey, Bond, Briggs, Buchanan, W. B. Calhoun, G. Chambers, Chapin, Chetwood, Childs, Clark, Corwin, Crane, Cushing, Deany, Evans, Fry, Granger, H. Hall, Harper, Hazeltine, Hoar, Howell, Hunt, Ingersoll, W. Jackson, James, Jenifer, Lawrence, S. Mason, McKennan, Milligan, Morris, Pearson, Phillips, Potts, Read, Russell, Slade, Spangler, Sprague, Storck, and Elisha Whittlesey—44.

NAYS—Messrs. C. Allan, Anthony, Ash, Barton, Bean, Bell, Black, Boudin, Bovee, Boyd, Bunch, Burns, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, John Chambers, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cray, Cushman, Dawson, Deberry, Doubleday, Dronowale, Dunlap, Efner, Elmore, Farlin, Fuller, Rice Garland, Glascock, Graham, Graves, Griffin, Haley, Joseph Hall, Jamnegan, Hardin, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Henderson, Herod, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Hugham, Jarvis, Joseph Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kilgore, Kingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, Gideon Lee, Thomas Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Logan, Lucas, Lyon, Job Mann, William Mason, Moses Mason, Maury, McCarty, McKay, McKeon, McKim, McLene, Miller, Montgomery, Morgan, Owens, Page, Patterson, Patton, James A. Pearce, Patigrew, Phelps, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Rogers, Schenck, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Standefer, Steele, Talfierro, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Waddy Thompson, Turner, Turritt, Vanderpool, Washington, Weeks, White, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, and Yell—31.

So the House refused to suspend the rules.]

Mr. ADAMS presented a petition from the Young Men's Anti-Slavery society of Philadelphia, remonstrating against Congress taking any steps which might lead to the introduction of slavery in Texas, and moved that it be read.

The CHAIR said if the petition related in any way and to any extent to the abolition of slavery, it must lie on the table, under the rule, without reading.

Mr. ADAMS said the memorial was against the recognition of the independence of Texas, because that measure would lead to the extension of slavery.

Mr. HOPKINS said, as he had understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to remark that the memorial did relate in some measure to slavery, he must object to the reading of the paper.

Mr. GLASCOCK inquired of the Chair whether the paper did in any way relate to the subject of slavery.

The CHAIR could not then determine.

Mr. PATTON thought the petition should be read, so that the House would be able to ascertain to what extent it did relate to the subject of slavery, if it related to it at all.

Mr. HUNTSMAN objected to the reading of the petition.

Mr. ADAMS called for the yeas and nays on the motion that the petition be read.

Mr. JARVIS asked if a motion to lay the petition on the table would dispose of the subject.

The SPEAKER, having looked into the paper, decided that it must lie on the table, under the order of the House of the 18th of January.

Mr. ADAMS appealed from this decision, and asked for the yeas and nays on the question; which were ordered.

Mr. PHILLIPS rose to ask for the reading of the paper; and if the reading was refused, he must ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved that the whole subject be laid on the table;

Mr. CALHOUN, of Massachusetts, called for the yeas and nays on this subject, which were ordered.

Mr. ROBERTSON then withdrew the motion to lay on the table.

The CHAIR then directed the paper to be read, and it was read accordingly by the Clerk.

Mr. MERCER did not think the memorial was comprehended within the order of the House of the 18th of January.

Mr. HAWES then moved to lay the appeal on the table; and on this question called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered; and were yeas 131, nays 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Ash, Barton, Bean, Black, Boudin, Bovee, Boyd, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Casey, Chapman, Chapin, Chetwood, Nath. H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coles, Craig, Cramer, Cray, Cushman, Davis, Dawson, Deberry, Doubleday, Dunlap, Efner, Elmore, Farlin, Forester, Fowler, French, Fry, Fuller, Glascock, James Garland, Rice Garland, Gholson, Gillet, Glascock, Graham, Grantland, Grayson, Griffin, Joseph Hall, Hardin, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Haynes, Herod, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, Jarvis, Jenifer, J. Johnson, C. Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kilgore, Kingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Thomas Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Logan, Lucas, Lucas, Lyon, William Mason, Moses Mason, Maury, May, McComas, McKay, McKim, McLene, Miller, Montgomery, Morgan, Owens, Page, Patterson, Patton, James A. Pearce, Patigrew, Phelps, Pinckney, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickles, Smith, Standefer, Steele, Talfierro, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Waddy Thompson, Turner, Turritt, Vanderpool, Washington, Weeks, White, Thomas T. Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, and Yell—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Chilton, Allan, Heman Allen, Bailey, Beaumont, Bond, Briggs, William B. Calhoun, Carr, George Chambers, Childs, Clark, Connor, Corwin, Crane, Cushing, Deany, Prongcole, Evans, Everett, Granger, Greenell, Haley, H. Hall, Harper, S. S. Harrison, Hazeltine, Henderson, Hoar, Howell, Hubley, Hunt, Ingersoll, W. Jackson, James, Lawrence, Lay, Lincoln, Job Mann, S. Mason, McCarty, McKennan, Mercer, Milligan, Morris, Parker, Dutee J. Pearce, Pearson, Phillips, Potts, Read, Russell, Schenck, Slade, Spangler, Sprague, Storck, Sutherland, Underwood, Wardwell, Webster, Elisha Whittlesey, and Young—62.

So the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. ADAMS presented a number of other petitions, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia. They were from Kingston, Hingham, Duxbury, and other places in Massachusetts, and some other places, [mostly signed by females.]

On the presentation of each of these petitions respectively, Mr. ADAMS moved that they be read, but the CHAIR decided that, under the order of the House of the 18th instant, they would lie on the table. Mr. A. then, in every instance, took an appeal from that decision, which appeals were respectively laid on the table, on motions made to that effect by Messrs. JARVIS, HAYNES, CUSHMAN, HOLSEY, and MERCER.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island.

[Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island presented resolutions recently adopted by both branches of the Legislature of Rhode Island, reasserting the settled opinion of the people of that State, in favor of adequate protection to national industry, in confidence of which a large amount of property had been invested; and deprecating the consequences of the frequent agitation of the tariff question, to prevent which was one of the principal inducements to an acquiescence in the tariff law of 1833; also, respectfully protesting against any action by Congress, to anticipate the gradual operation and final effect of the act of compromise, so called, (itself an inadequate protection,) prior to the time therein limited, as greatly injurious to all branches of industry, and to all interests in said State, and in the country at large, and in violation of the spirit of said act of compromise, and of the faith of our national legislators.

By said resolutions, the Senators and Representatives from that State, were requested to use their best exertions to prevent the passage of any act to impair the protection secured to the national industry in said act of compromise, passed in 1833.

Mr. P. stated that these resolutions passed one branch of the legislature with but one dissenting voice, and the other branch unanimously. The resolutions were, on his motion, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.]

Messrs. HALEY and INGHAM of Connecticut.

[Mr. HALEY presented a memorial from a number of citizens of New London, remonstrating against the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, and praying the non-interference of Congress on that subject; which took the order of the House, and was laid on the table.]

Messrs. HALL, JANES, SLADE, and ALLEN of Vermont.

[Mr. ALLEN of Vermont presented the petition of 251 males, 258 females, adults, and 74 minors between the ages of 14 and 18 years, inhabitants of the town of Westford, in the State of Vermont, praying for the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia and Territories subject to the jurisdiction of Congress, and also for the prohibition of the internal and coasting slave trade between the several States.]

Messrs. RUSSELL, CHILDS, CHAPIN, GRANGER, YOUNG, HUNT, WARD, TAYLOR, CAMBRELENG, McKEON, MASON, LEONARD, HAZELTINE, LANSING, FULLER, GIDEON LEE, and WARDWELL of New York.

[Mr. GRANGER presented a memorial, signed by 1200 merchants and others, of the city of New York, praying for the establishment of a national bank, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, inasmuch as the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom the subject might be considered as properly belonging, had already reported against it. Mr. G. briefly adverted to the importance of the memorial.]

Mr. CAMBRELENG suggested to his colleague, who seemed to consider this as a matter of very great importance, particularly at this crisis, that, inasmuch as this question had been referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and he had been directed, with one exception, by the unanimous vote of that committee, to move its discharge from it, the gentleman would give the country the benefit of his own abilities upon it. Mr. C. therefore suggested to the gentleman to move the reference of the memorial to a select committee, of which he (Mr. Granger) would then be chairman.

Mr. GRANGER disclaimed any wish for such a reference.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved its reference to a select committee, but the first motion was agreed to, and the memorial was accordingly referred to the Committee on Commerce.]

[Mr. CAMBRELENG presented, among other memorials, one from the city of Brooklyn in favor of the bill for reducing the tariff.]

[Mr. TAYLOR presented some papers relating to the services of Frederick Sammons in the war of the revolution, and injuries he received during said war. He moved they be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with instructions to inquire into the expediency of placing him on the Invalid Pension roll of the United States.]

[Mr. WARD presented the petition of James Vanden, Daniel Palmer and others, of White Plains, N. Y. praying for compensation for property destroyed by the American troops during the revolutionary war; referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.]

[Mr. LEONARD presented two petitions from sundry inhabitants of the counties of Steuben and Chemung, in the State of New York, praying the establishment of a post route from the head of Seneca Lake to the town of Corning, in said State.]

[Mr. LANSING presented the petition of Isaac Chapman and others, soldiers and artificers in the army of the United States during the late war, praying that they be allowed bounty lands; also, the petition of Erastus Corning and others, merchants and residents of the city of Albany, praying an appropriation to build a pier and breakwater at Van Buren Harbor, in Chautauque county, in the State of New York.]

[Mr. McKEON presented the following petitions: From citizens of New Jersey, for the erection of a light-house on Robbins' Reef; from citizens of New York, for the improvement of Van Buren Harbor; from representatives of Baron De Kalb, for compensation for revolutionary services; from the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, for the employment of relief vessels on the coast of the United States.]

[Mr. CHAPIN presented the petition of Ebenezer Pierce, a soldier in the American army during the revolutionary war. The petitioner states, that while in the service he was twice wounded by the enemy, once in the neck by a musket ball, and afterwards in his thigh by a bayonet, and claims half pay as an invalid, from December, 1783, to May, 1818, when a pension was granted to him by the United States: referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.]

Messrs. GALBRAITH, CHAMBERS, HARPER, PEIRSON, HUBLEY, INGERSOLL, SUTHERLAND, DENNY, McKENNAN, and C. ARK, of Pennsylvania.

[Mr. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania presented a memorial from a number of citizens of the county of Adams, Pennsylvania, praying the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia.]

[Mr. HUBLEY presented sundry memorials, signed by a number of citizens of Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against a repeal of the duty on foreign coal; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to whom the subject had been committed.]

Mr. MILLIGAN of Delaware.

Messrs. THOMAS, HOWARD, McKIM, PEARCE, TURNER, and JENIFER, of Maryland.

Messrs. MORGAN, ROBERTSON, MERCER, TALIAFERO and LOYALL, of Virginia.

[Among the petitions presented by Mr. LOYALL, was the memorial of Mrs. Ann J. Ross, praying that some provision be made for herself and children, in consideration of the gallantry displayed and important services rendered by her late husband, Andrew Ross, of the Marine Corps, who died of wounds received in battle with the Seminole Indians.]

Mr. W. B. SHEPARD, of North Carolina.

Messrs. PINCKNEY and RICHARDSON of South Carolina.

Messrs. HAYNES and HOLSEY of Georgia.

Mr. CHAPMAN of Alabama.

Messrs. CALHOON, HARLAN, and WILLIAMS, of Kentucky.

[Mr. CALHOON presented a memorial of the American Colonization Society of Kentucky, asking the aid of Congress to further the objects of said society, and moved its reference to the Committee for the District of Columbia.]

Mr. ADAMS contended that this petition came under the operation of the order directing all papers on the subject of abolition to be laid on the table. This society, he said, certainly contemplated the abolition of slavery.

Mr. PINCKNEY moved, to lay it on the table.

Lost.

The memorial, under the rule, and debate on the point raised by Mr. ADAMS being likely to arise, was ordered to lie over till Monday next.]

[Mr. HARLAN presented the petition of sundry inhabitants of Kentucky, praying for pecuniary aid from the General Government to the American Colonization Society; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.]

Messrs. The SPEAKER, STANDEFER, HUNTSMAN, DUNLAP, and LEA, of Tennessee.

Messrs. WHITTLESEY, MASON, CRANE, BOND, KILGORE, THOMSON, STORER, SPANGLER, and McLENE, of Ohio.

Mr. JOHNSON of Louisiana.

Messrs. LANE and DAVIS of Indiana.

[Mr. LANE presented the following:

The memorial of Elizabeth Timms of the District of Columbia, praying relief for injuries sustained by her in consequence of the tragical death of an honorable member of the House of Representatives in April, 1834.]

The memorial of John Cook of Lucas County, Ohio, praying relief for improvements made upon public lands, which greatly increased its value and the receipts into the Treasury.]

The memorial of Richard R. S. Bealle, representative of Capt. Robert Bealle, deceased, praying commutation pay due the deceased may be paid to his legal heirs.]

[Mr. CARR said he wished to submit to the House a resolution which he was very desirous should be adopted. It related to a subject in which many very worthy citizens felt the deepest interest, and for the purpose of enabling the House to judge of the merits of the resolution, he would send it to the Chair to be read. The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That this House will, on Thursday the second day of February next, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of taking up and considering bill number 570, granting a bounty in land to the militia men, mounted militia men, volunteers, and rangers, who defended the country during the late war with Great Britain.]

Objection being made, the House refused, at this time, to consider the resolution.]

Mr. GHOLSON of Mississippi.

Messrs. CASEY, REYNOLDS, and MAY of Illinois.

[Mr. CASEY presented the petition of sundry members of the Legislature of Illinois, praying the establishment of a post route from Maysville, in Clay county, by Green's Mills, in said county, thence to Ervington, in Effingham county, thence by the Blue Point, in said county, to Shelbyville, in Shelby county; which, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.]

[Mr. REYNOLDS of Illinois presented the petition of a number of respectable citizens of the State of Illinois, praying for the alternate sections of land on the railroad from Alton, in the State of Illinois, to Mount Carmel, to be given for the construction of a railroad between those points: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.]

[Mr. MAY presented petitions from a number of settlers residing on the unsurveyed lands lying in the northern part of the State of Illinois, praying the passage of a pre-emption law in their favor.]

Also, a petition from a number of citizens of Illinois, praying the establishment of a mail route from Monmouth to Hennepin.

Also, a petition from a number of the inhabitants of Fulton and Warren counties, Illinois, praying the establishment of a post route from Farmington, in Fulton county, via Troy, Smithfield, St. Augustine, Greenfield, in Warren county, to Burlington, in Wisconsin Territory.]

Messrs. HARRISON and ASHLEY of Missouri.

[Mr. HARRISON presented the memorial of the Mayor and Board of Aldermen of the city of St. Louis, praying an appropriation sufficient to remove the sand bar in the harbor of St. Louis. The petition of Edward J. Davenport and others, praying relief for those who suffered losses from French spoiliations, prior to 1800. The petition of David Hamilton; also, of Alexander McKorkle and others, praying the right of pre-emption.]

Mr. CRARY of Michigan.

[Mr. CRARY presented the petition of sundry citizens of Michigan for an appropriation for an accurate survey of the lakes Ontario, Erie, St. Clair, Huron, Michigan, and Superior. Also, the petition of numerous citizens of Michigan for an appropriation for the construction of a harbor and light-house at the mouth of the Kalamazoo river. Also, a memorial of a number of citizens of Michigan, praying Congress to have a survey made of the flats at the mouth of St. Clair river. Also, a petition of Gen. John M. Williams of Detroit, praying compensation for property destroyed during the late war with Great Britain.]

Mr. WHITE of Florida.

Mr. JONES of Wisconsin.

[Mr. Jones, of Wisconsin, presented petitions praying for the restriction of the sales of public lands, and the passage of a pre-emption law; for the construction of a harbor and light-house at Milwaukee; for the construction of roads from Green Bay to Chicago, from Milwaukee to the Mississippi. The petition of Jno. D. Bell, of Bellevue, Du-Buque Co. praying for a grant of the pre-emption right to one quarter section of land, at and near that place. Also, a petition for post routes.]

Mr. INGERSOLL submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Buildings be instructed to inquire into the expediency of completing the east front of the Capitol, by providing suitable statuary.

Mr. McKEON moved to amend, by inserting "and to provide a statue of Jefferson, to be placed in the Library of Congress."

Mr. INGERSOLL accepted this as a modification; and so modified, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi submitted the following resolution, which, by consent, was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to inform this House what progress has been made in the survey of the coast from the Rigolets to Mobile Point, authorized at the last session of Congress; and whether, in his opinion, any farther appropriation is necessary.

Mr. McCARTY submitted the following resolution, which, by the rule, lies over one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to transmit to this House copies of all the papers on file in the Treasury Department and General Land Office, in reference to the examination and condition of the land office at Fort Wayne, made during the fall of 1836, by Mr. West, including said examiner's report, and all letters and correspondence upon that subject, and the alleged delinquency of the receiver of public moneys at said office.

Mr. ROBERTSON submitted the following resolution, which, by consent, was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish this House with a copy of the report of the survey of James river, in Virginia, made in pursuance of an act of Congress of the last session.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Ohio,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing the name of Barnet Hagerman on the pension roll of the United States.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of La.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands inquire into the expediency of increasing the compensation of the deputy surveyors of the State of Louisiana, for surveying the public lands in the said State, which cannot be surveyed for the compensation now allowed by law.

On motion of Mr. THOMSON of Ohio,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting a township, or other quantity of land, to each of the States of this Union, to enable them to erect suitable buildings, and to print or purchase all necessary books for the instruction of the blind within their respective limits.

Mr. TURNER submitted the following resolution, which, by consent, was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War furnish to this House the report and estimates of the engineer appointed to examine and survey the harbor of Havre-de-Grace in Maryland.

On motion of Mr. GHOLSON,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of removing the land office from Augusta, in the State of Mississippi, to Paulding, in Jasper county, in said State.

On motion of Mr. SPANGLER,

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing Samuel Hall, of Knox county, Ohio, a soldier in the late war with Great Britain, on the pension roll.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON,

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of relinquishing the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States over the road from the lower rapids of the Maumee river to the west line of the Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, and authorizing the Legislature of the State to take such measures as they may think proper to reconstruct such road, and keep the same in repair; and that the memorial passed on that subject by the Legislature of said State, at their session of 1835-6, be referred to said committee.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of Kentucky,

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be instructed to inquire into the propriety of passing a law for the benefit of Robert Tobin, permitting him to locate and enter four hundred acres of the public land, as an equivalent for a four hundred acre land warrant issued by the State of Virginia, many years ago, to William Hardin, and assigned by him to Benjamin Hardin, which warrant is herewith referred to said committee.

On motion of Mr. CALHOUN of Kentucky,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting a pension to James McMullen of Kentucky.

On motion of Mr. CLAIBORNE, of Mississippi,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for erecting a custom-house at Natchez, and for a survey of the harbors of Natchez, Grand Gulf, and Vicksburg, preliminary to the improvement of the same; also, into the propriety of making provision for removing the bars, or deepening the channels, at the mouths of Pearl and Pascagoula rivers, and for removing the rafts, snags, sawyers, and other impediments in that arm, or cut-off, of the Mississippi river, known as the Yazoo Pass; also, into the expediency of endowing a hospital at Natchez for the relief of sick or disabled mariners and boatmen navigating the Mississippi river.

On motion of Mr. LYON,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the act of Congress passed on the 28th May, 1828, entitled "An act for the relief of the purchasers of the public lands that have reverted for the non-payment of the purchase money," and the act on the same subject passed in June, 1832, so as to enable the heirs and legal representatives of deceased persons to draw scrip on all forfeited land stock remaining in the name of said deceased person, upon the heirs or legal representatives of such deceased person giving a refunding bond, to be approved of by the Register of the Land office, in double the amount of the scrip issued, and under such other restrictions as may be thought proper and necessary in all cases where the original certificate given to such deceased persons have been lost or destroyed.

On motion of Mr. MANN of New York,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the laws of the United States in relation to imprisonment for debt, so as to place alien plaintiffs upon the same footing as citizens of the several States, in respect to their legal remedies.

On motion of Mr. YELL,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing an additional land office in the State of Arkansas, to be located in the county of Johnson.

On motion of Mr. YELL,

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing the necessary surveys and estimates to be made for the purpose of forming such canals and embankments as may effectually drain the valley of the St. Francis river, improve the navigation thereof, and drain the public lands now occasionally flooded by the same.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, be requested to inquire into the expediency of requiring the postage on all letters sent by the Express Mail, to be paid in advance; and that the committee inquire into the expediency of abolishing the Express Mail.

On motion of Mr. CRARY,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a surveyor general's office for the State of Michigan.

On motion of Mr. CRARY,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the survey of the Falls of St. Mary, with a view to the construction of a ship channel between Lake Superior and Lake Huron.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Wisconsin,

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the survey of Rock river from its mouth to the Fourth of the Four Lakes; and for the survey of the Wisconsin and Pecketoica rivers, the Des Moines and Iowa, the Fox, Manitoba and Sheboygan.

Mr. WHITE of Florida submitted the following resolution, which was rejected:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of transferring all the undecided land claims in the eastern district of Florida, and all claims under the 9th article of the Florida treaty, to the Judge of the middle district for decision, or of providing some other mode for their speedy adjudication.

Mr. MERCER moved to reconsider the vote by which the above resolution was rejected.

After some remarks by Messrs. MERCER, CRANE, CAVE JOHNSON, CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania, and WHITE of Florida,

Mr. MERCER moved to postpone the subject until Monday next; which was agreed to—ayes 89, noes 33.

Mr. MANN, of N. Y. (being absent on duty, as a member of a select committee, when the State of New York was called,) on leave, presented a petition.

Mr. MANN, of N. Y. moved to consider the vote by which the bill for the relief of Ebenezer Breed was passed on Saturday, and, as the bill had been sent to the Senate, he further moved that a message be sent to that body for its return.

The first motion was entered, and the second lies over for decision by the Chair.

The CHAIR laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in conformity with the suggestion contained in his annual report to Congress, submitting a statement of the further proceedings for the settlement of the claims of the United States against the Bank of the United States; which, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

On motion of Mr. GRENNEL,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

TUESDAY, January 31, 1837.

The CHAIR communicated a report from the State Department, giving the number of registered American seamen in each quarter of the year 1836; which was referred to Committee on Commerce.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the War Department, giving a list of the appropriations and expenditures for the year 1836; and

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, it was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TIPTON presented the memorial of Jeremiah Tayler of Indiana, praying for a pension: referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. T. also presented the petition of sundry citizens of Carroll county, Indiana; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LINN presented the following memorials and petitions:

A memorial from the Legislative Assembly of the Wisconsin Territory, praying for the deposit of arms, ammunition, &c. for defence of said Territory, in case of Indian invasion: referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A memorial from the same, praying for the passage of a law to authorize the appointment of a commission to adjust the titles to lots in certain towns: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

A memorial from the same, praying for the passage of pre-emption laws: referred to the same committee.

A petition from the corporate authorities of the city of St. Louis, asking an additional appropriation to aid in removing a large sand bar, which threatens to shut up and destroy their harbor: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

A petition from Joseph Begy asking relief for injury done him in consequence of a mistake committed by the clerk of one of the courts in the Territory of Arkansas, by which mistake the petitioner was deprived of several hundred acres of land which have been decreed to him by the Supreme Court of Arkansas, under authority from the United States: referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A petition from the legal representatives of Julien Dubuque, asking to be confirmed in their title to a tract of land on the west bank of the Mississippi river, in the Territory of Wisconsin, which land was granted to Dubuque by the Baron de Carondelet, in the year 1796, and which grant was made with the approbation of the Sac and Fox tribes of Indians, as they acknowledged in the treaty held with them by General William H. Harrison, in the year 1806: referred to the same committee.

A petition from Thomas Hart, praying for a donation of one quarter section of land, in commutation for money paid by him for the use of the United States, in the late war with Great Britain: referred to the Committee on Public Lands; and

A memorial from the citizens of Milwaukee, praying Congress not to confirm, but to reject the act entitled "An act to incorporate the stockholders of the Milwaukee Bank; which was referred to the Committee on Finance; and the memorial, together with the charter of the Milwaukee Bank, were ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALKER presented the petitions of sundry citizens of — county, Mississippi, and of sundry citizens of Monroe county, same State, both praying for the establishment of new mail routes; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, praying that some of the small vessels of the navy may be employed as relief ships during the winter off the coast of New York: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TOMLINSON presented the petition of sundry citizens of Connecticut, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Darien: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of Hiram Humphries, Robert Pullen and Benjamin W. Hopkins.

Mr. TIPTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which had been referred the petition of George C. Johnson, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

The following resolutions were submitted and adopted:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions inquire into the propriety of providing by law for the payment of the pension agent for Illinois, and such other pension agents who for the last year have received no compensation for their services.

By Mr. TOMLINSON:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an additional appropriation to improve the harbor of West Port, in the State of Connecticut.

Mr. CLAYTON submitted the following resolution, which lies on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making New Castle a port of entry, either distinctly from, or conjointly with, the port of Wilmington.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill to encourage the employment of boys in the naval service, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. RIVES, from the same committee, to which had been referred the bill for the relief of Thomas B. Parsons, reported the same without amendment.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD,

The report of the Committee on Claims, adverse to the petition of Joseph Nourse, was taken up.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to amend the resolution at the conclusion of the report, by striking out the word "not," so as to make it read "Resolved, that the prayer of the petitioner ought to be granted: and after some remarks from Messrs. CRITTENDEN, PRESTON, LINN and HUBBARD,

On motion of Mr. LINN, the report was laid on the table.

Mr. CALHOUN moved to take up the bill to designate and limit the funds which shall be receivable for the public revenue.

This motion was opposed by Messrs. GRUNDY and WALKER, on the ground that it would interfere with the land bill, which it was necessary to have a decision on previous to any legislation as to the revenue; and after some further remarks from Messrs. RIVES, PRESTON and CALHOUN, the question was taken and decided in the negative—ayes 16, noes 20.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, was taken up as the special order, the question being on Mr. CLAY's motion to strike out the 4th section, which contains the pre-emption principle.

Mr. KING of Georgia spoke at length in opposition to the bill, and particularly to the clause proposed to be stricken out. He viewed the bill as establishing a system of partiality, plunder, and perfidy; a system in which those who had the least merit would make the most profitable speculations. If the bill passed at all, he was indifferent as to the details of it: perhaps it would be better for the country if it should pass in the worst shape in which it had been presented. It was not surprising that it should be popular with those who were to be so greatly benefited by it; but that those whose constituents were to be plundered should tamely and quietly submit, was not and ought not to be expected. But he was much mistaken if this measure could be protected from that discontent and indignation with which the great majority of the people of the United States always visit a course of injustice and oppression. They should recollect that the public lands were public treasure, and belonged as much to the whole people of the United States as the money in the Treasury, and should be protected precisely in the same way, and should be distributed among the States with as much equality as possible. A very large portion of this property was acquired by the common blood and treasure of the old thirteen States; and the other portion was purchased with the money of the whole, derived from taxation on the consumption of the country, the consumers being principally in the old States. Under these circumstances one would suppose that the new States would be satisfied with an equal share of this domain; but no: not satisfied with the millions upon millions of acres that had been lavished upon them, with the appetites of cormorants they would swallow all. The annals of time, he said, did not exhibit a growth in population, wealth and resources commensurate with that of the new States; while, on the other hand, the history of the world did not present such a scene of premature old age and decay as was witnessed in the old States. This bill, he said, had been called an administration measure, and the friends of the administration had been as such called upon to support it. He denied that it was an administration measure; but do not, said he, talk to me about an administration measure, when you put your fingers in my pockets for the benefits of squatters and speculators. Mr. K. enlarged on the inequality of the bill in confining its benefits to those who lived in the new States, while the people of the old States who had given this domain to the General Government, were prevented from participating in its benefits; and instanced the State of Georgia, who had given the territory for two of the richest States, and yet her citizens were prevented from crossing the line, to purchase a portion of these very lands. After entering into calculations, tracing the causes of the unexampled speculations in the public lands, and showing that it must be temporary, Mr. K. went on to oppose the pre-emption feature in the bill, which he looked upon as the worst, offering all the lands of the United States, from Florida to the mouth of the Columbia, surveyed and unsurveyed, whether the Indian title be extinguished or not, to those who had the least claims on the bounty of the country.

Mr. BAYARD said that he had listened with great delight to the Senator from Georgia, who had given a true exposition of facts as connected with the speculations going on in public lands, and the effects which would result from passing this bill. Mr. B.'s first objection to the section proposed to be stricken out was, that it changed the whole policy of the Government in regard to the public lands, binding the Government to make them a source of revenue. His second objection to the bill was, that it was holding out an encouragement to the people of the old States to leave their homes, and go where a population was not wanted.

Mr. B. read a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury at the last session, by which it appeared that the whole amount of lands surveyed in each State and Territory was 166,970,000 acres; that there had been sold 44,000,000 some odd hundred thousand acres; and the consequence was that no less than 122,000,000 remained subject to private entry. But what did this bill propose to do? It proposed to open all the unsurveyed lands to emigrants. Not less than from 170,000,000 to 200,000,000 acres of unsurveyed lands were to be thrown open to the people, to go and settle upon where, and when, they pleased.

Mr. B. next adverted to the price of the public lands, and asked the Senator from Mississippi whether, taking the whole of them together, they could be valued at no more than $1 25 per acre? and then argued that the effect of the bill was nothing less than to offer a temptation to the people of the old States to go West. The bill, too, was unequal in its provisions, and the inevitable consequence would be, should it pass, that those living in the neighborhood of the public lands would get hold of all the choice land. And, they would have a decided advantage over individuals coming from the Eastern States, because they possessed that local knowledge of the best lands which those from a distance had not; for they had not had the opportunity of finding them out, not having lived in the neighborhood of the lands. In fact he looked upon the bill as opening a door to fraud, and offering a bonus to the population of the old States to remove to the West.

Mr. TIPTON vindicated the conduct of some of his constituents, against whom he considered the Senator from Georgia (Mr. King) to have made charges, as connected with their having settled on the public lands. He had done great injustice to Mr. T's constituents, by placing them on the same footing as squatters. Mr. T. went on to show wherein his constituents differed from those who purchased lands when the Yazoo country was in the market for sale. What! (he inquired,) are these men to be denominated thieves and robbers? The honorable Senator had done them great injustice; and he felt certain that, did he know the true state of the facts, he would not have made so serious a charge as this. With regard to the section under consideration, he would vote against it. Indiana had nothing to hope or to fear from it. She would be glad, however, if the old pre-emption were revived; and if Congress desired that the frauds which were said to be perpetrated in the purchase of the public lands should cease, let them graduate the price.

Mr. KING of Georgia made a few explanatory remarks, and averred that it was not the wish of a great majority of the people of the new States, so far as he could ascertain, that a pre-emption law should be passed.

Mr. TIPTON expressed himself tolerably well satisfied with the explanation of the Senator from Georgia. He was aware that a great majority of the people residing in the new States are not anxious for a pre-emption law. The majority of the people of the State of Ohio, as well as his own State, care nothing about it, and have not asked Congress to pass such law. There are but three counties in Indiana where the people did care for, and desire, the passage of such a law, and they were honest and honorable men.

Mr. FULTON said the passage of this bill would put an end to the enormous speculations which had taken place in the public lands. Such had been the effects of the combinations of speculators in the purchase of lands, that they had compelled men to pay from five to twenty dollars per acre for them, when, in fact, they would not otherwise have had to have given more than one dollar. In the State of Arkansas, during the last year, whole counties were entered by speculators; and honest, industrious men, had been compelled to quit their homes; and at a sale which took place at Little Rock last spring, some speculators combined against the honest settlers, and they purchased the whole of the land offered for sale, and in a few days afterwards they sold it at auction, and realized about one thousand dollars per share. Millions of dollars would have been expended in the same way, had it not been for the much-reprobated Treasury order, which prevented their bank paper from being received. Mr. F. defended the provisions of the bill against what had been alleged against it, and then spoke of those men who were denominated "squatters." He vindicated their character from the aspersions which had been cast upon it, and argued that they were bold and brave, and hardy adventurers, who went into the very wilderness of the country, where they settled down and cultivated the land, thereby rendering the public lands the more valuable. He remarked that the State of Arkansas was settled by "squatters," who were so much denounced here; six or eight hundred of whom, were at present at Fort Gibson, and who had wished to defend the frontier from the savage and ruthless invader. Adverting to the settlement of the public lands, he said, that instead of its being criminal to do so, Congress itself had authorized the adoption of that course. And had not Congress from the year 1824 to the present time been granting pre-emption rights? Certainly they had. With regard to what had fallen from the Senator from Georgia, in respect to the sales of land in Alabama, he would remind him that they were credit sales; and in consequence of the high prices that were given by the purchasers to the Government, it was at length importuned so much from year to year to lower the price, that it was finally reduced almost to a minimum, and cash payments were demanded. The ill consequences of high prices, too, had caused the present system.

And, with respect to the system about to introduced, he considered that it would put a stop to speculation entirely, and would greatly tend to reduce the revenue of the Government as derived from the sales of the public lands. The great recommendation of the bill was, that the Government of the United States was to be the landlord; that lands would be purchased of them, instead of unreasonable and grasping speculators, so that justice would be done to every man. In conclusion, he expressed his hope that the provision under consideration would be adopted by the Senate.

After a few words from Mr. BAYARD, on taking the question, the amendment was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Kent, King, Knight, Moore, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Ruggles, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Dana, Ewing, Ill. Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King Ala. Linn, Lyon, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Tipton, Walker, White, and Wright—24.

Mr. CLAY moved to amend the bill by providing that the right of pre-emption shall not apply to any lands prior to their being surveyed.

After some remarks in opposition to the motion by Messrs. LINN and WALKER, it was lost: yeas 23, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Bayard, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Kent, King of Alabama, Knight, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Ruggles, Southard, Strange, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Wall and Webster—23.

NAYS—Benton, Black, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Georgia, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Tipton, Walker, White and Wright—23.

Mr. BLACK moved to amend the bill by providing, that the privileges of this act shall not extend to any others than citizens of the United States, which motion was adopted: yeas 24, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Bayard, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Fulton, Grundy, Kent, King of Alabama, Knight, Page, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Ruggles, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Wall, Webster and White—23.

NAYS—Benton, Brown, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Georgia, Linn, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Walker and Wright—20.

On motion of Mr. WALKER, the bill was amended by providing that no pre-emption shall extend beyond the limits of any State or organized Territory of the Union.

Mr. TALLMADGE offered an amendment providing that this act shall continue in force until 30th June, 1842, and no longer.

Mr. CLAY said, if this bill should be passed, the whole of the public lands would be gone.

Mr. WALKER said he should vote for the amendment of the Senator from New York, and he would take the occasion to remark that should the bill pass, it would be found on the 30th of June, 1842, that Congress would have preserved from the hands of speculators at least eighty million acres of the public domain.

After a few remarks from Messrs. CLAY, RIVES, BAYARD, HUBBARD, and CALHOUN, the amendment was agreed to without a division.

Mr. MORRIS asked leave to lay an amendment on the table, which he proposed to offer as a substitute for the bill as amended by the committee, which was granted, and it was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRIS then moved that the Senate adjourn, which motion was rejected; yeas 20, nays 26 as follows:

YEAS—Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Moore, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall, and Webster—20.

NAYS—Benton, Black, Brown, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Walker, White and Wright—26.

The question was then taken on agreeing to the amendment as reported by the Committee on Public Lands, as amended, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 26, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, Kent, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Robinson, Rives, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Walker, White, and Wright—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Kent, Knight, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Ruggles, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall, and Webster—18.

The bill was then reported to the Senate as amended; and

On motion of Mr. CLAY, it was ordered to be printed as amended.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

TUESDAY, January 31, 1837.

Mr. ALFORD, member elect from the State of Georgia, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. ADAMS moved a reconsideration of the vote of the House by which a memorial from the Colonization Society of Kentucky was yesterday referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; which was entered.

[Mr. A. reiterated his argument that every petition from this society must necessarily relate to the subject of the abolition of slavery, and fell under the operation of the resolution of the 18th instant, ordering all papers on that subject to lie on the table.]

Mr. REYNOLDS, of Illinois, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a resolution proposing to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the "bill for the survey of certain rivers and roads therein mentioned," and the "bill for the survey of the Illinois and Kaskaskia rivers," and to refer said bills to the Committee on Roads and Canals; which was concurred in.

Mr. WARDWELL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill explanatory of the third section of the act, entitled an act granting half-pay to widows or orphans when their husbands and fathers died in the military service of the United States, in certain cases, and for other purposes: read twice and committed.

Mr. WARDWELL, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Benjamin Gannett, widower of Deborah Gannett, a soldier of the revolution: read twice and committee.

[This is a most singular case, as the following statement of facts show. It appears from the report that the maiden name of the said Deborah Gannett was Deborah Sampson, of Sharon, Massachusetts. That she enlisted in the army of the revolution, under the assumed name of "Robert Shurtleff," served faithfully for nearly three years, until the close of the war, when she was honorably discharged. She was at the capture of Cornwallis, was wounded at Tarrytown by a musket ball, which was never extracted; the effects of which wound followed her through life. She received a pension from the Government until the year 1827, when she died. The said Benjamin Gannett is represented to be a poor, but honest man. Has expended a considerable sum of money from time to time on account of the disabilities of his wife, the effects of the hardships she endured, and the wound she received while in the service. The marriage took place in the year 1784, a year after the war.]

Mr. WARDWELL, from the same committee, reported a resolution proposing to set apart two hours on Friday the 10th of February, after one o'clock, for the purpose of taking up and considering, unless sooner disposed of, all the bills reported by the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, but that any bill that should elicit debate should be laid aside, and no further action had thereon, on that day, unless by the consent of the House.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio expressed a hope that this resolution would not be concurred in.

Mr. WARDWELL replied that the House had always heretofore set apart some time for the relief of the old soldiers, and this resolution only asked for two hours.

Mr. PATTON moved to amend it by including also bills reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. JARVIS moved to amend the amendment by including also bills reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs relating to pensions, which Mr. PATTON accepted as a modification.

Mr. HOWELL moved to lay the whole subject on the table, which was agreed to—71 to 59.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following resolution, which was concurred in:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to send for persons and papers, and to inquire into the truth of the charges made in the memorial of William L. Brent and Richard S. Cox, complaining of the official conduct of Buckner Thruston, one of the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means, moved that the papers and documents sent in from the Treasury Department yesterday, and then referred to that committee, in relation to the claims of the United States against the Bank of the United States, be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. CONNOR, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill providing for the erection of a building for the Post Office Department: read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

INCREASE OF THE ARMY, &c.

Mr. COLES, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill to increase the rank and file of the army of the United States, and for other purposes: read twice, and referred to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COLES, from the same committee, also reported a bill concerning the re-organization of the army of the United States, and for other purposes: read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COLES, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to cause the rules and articles of war to be revised, and to report the revision to the next session of Congress: read twice, and laid on the table.

Mr. WASHINGTON, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill making appropriations for the support of the Penitentiary of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes: read twice and committed.

HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill to provide for certain harbors, and to remove the obstructions in and at the mouths of certain rivers, and for other purposes: read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH, from the same committee, also reported a bill providing for the adjustment of certain accounts: read twice and committed.

CONVENTION WITH SPAIN.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported with amendments, Senate bill to continue in force for a limited time the act, entitled an act to carry into effect the convention between the United States and Spain.

Mr. CRAIG, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported Senate bill, without amendment, for the relief of Sarah Ames, and other heirs at law of Benjamin King, deceased: committed.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported without amendment, Senate bill for the relief of Thomas Cammon: committed.

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, made an unfavorable report in the case of William Poor; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WARDWELL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report in the case of Massy Harbyson; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BOULDIN, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, made an unfavorable report in the case of William Hollins; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LAY, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, made unfavorable reports in the cases of Lucy Ellis, Barret Hagerman, and Anne Delano.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report in the case of Lemuel Lobey; which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. KENNON, the Committee on the Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of the case of James Kinney; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report in the case of John Cayford; which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, the Committee of Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John W. B. Thompson, the individual who defended the Cape Florida light-house, and became perfectly disabled in that defence; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HANNEGAN, on leave, presented a petition.

FREEDOM OF ELECTIONS.

The House then took up the motion submitted by Mr. BELL, for leave to bring in a bill to secure the freedom of elections.

Mr. BELL, who was entitled to the floor, concluded his remarks, and Mr. GRAVES obtained the floor, but gave way to

Mr. CAMBRELENG, on whose motion the House proceeded to the orders of the day.

Mr. CAMBRELENG asked the consent of the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the annual appropriation bills.

Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina, objecting, Mr. CAMBRELENG moved a suspension of the rule: agreed to without a count, and the House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, Mr. CRAIG in the chair.

On motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, the committee took up the "bill making appropriations for the current expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year 1837."

The bill having been read,

Mr. CAMBRELENG made a brief explanation in regard to the general features of the bill.

Several immaterial amendments having been agreed on,

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved an additional item of upwards of $700,000, to cover the expenses of removing, foraging, clothing, subsistence, &c. the Creek nation of Indians to their country west of the Mississippi, pursuant of the treaty of 1832, and for investigating the frauds, and the causes of the Creek war, &c. which, after some conversation between Messrs. CAMBRELENG, GARLAND of Louisiana, EVERETT, A. H. SHEPHERD, PARKER, and HOLSEY, was agreed to.

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved sundry other additional items in relation to the Seminoles, Ottawas, Miamies, Pottawatomies, Chippewas, Ioways, Osages, Kansas, Delawares, Missourias, Cherokees, Winnebagoes, Weas, &c. which were all severally agreed to.

Mr. ASHLEY moved an amendment, embracing the payment of a claim of $1610 for service performed under the Superintendent of Indian Affairs at St. Louis, Missouri; which, after a few words from the mover, Mr. CAMBRELENG, and Mr. HARRISON of Missouri, was agreed to.

Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi offered the following amendment, which he declared was of the last importance to a highly respectable and much injured portion of his constituents:

"And for the compensation of these citizens of Mississippi who were deprived of their improvements by having orphan and other claims under the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, fifty thousand dollars."

After a few words from Messrs. CLAIBORNE, LAWLER, GHOLSON, PARKS, and CAMBRELENG, it was disagreed to.

The bill was then laid aside, and the committee, on motion of Mr. GARLAND of Louisiana, took up and considered the "bill to establish an additional land office in Louisiana," [at Natchitoches.]

On motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG the committee then rose and reported the foregoing bills to the House.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the appropriations and expenditures for that department, for the year 1836, together with the balances remaining in the Treasury on the 31st of December; which, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. CUSHING,

The House then adjourned.

IN SENATE,

WEDNESDAY, February 1, 1837.

Mr. ROBINSON presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of Illinois, asking to exchange their school sections for other lands: laid on the table.

Mr. KENT presented the petition of the Mayor and Council of the City of Baltimore, praying that a depot may be established at that city for the use of the United States revenue cutters: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TOMLINSON presented the petition of Lydia Andrews, praying for a pension: referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALL presented the petition of a number of citizens of Jersey City, New Jersey, praying that that place may be made a port of entry: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The CHAIR communicated the memorial of William Brent, jr. a citizen of the District of Columbia, complaining that the electoral vote of the State of South Carolina has been given by persons elected by the Legislature of said State contrary to the Constitution.

Also, a memorial from the same, complaining that four of the electoral votes of the State of Virginia were given by persons who are members of the Legislature of that State; and,

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the memorials were referred to the select committee appointed to count the votes for President and Vice President of the United States.

On motion of Mr. PRENTISS, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Samuel Griffith.

Mr. PRENTISS, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel White; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of Andrew Bean and Thomas G. Tucker.

On motion of Mr. TOMLINSON, the same Committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John Miles, and from the further consideration of the petition of Catherine Heard and others, widows of revolutionary soldiers, praying that the pensions of their late husbands may be allowed them.

Mr. WALL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the subject had been referred by resolutions of the Senate, reported a bill to increase the salaries of certain Judges of the District Courts of the United States; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. DAVIS, from the select committee appointed on the subject, reported a bill providing for the appointment of three scientific persons to examine and test the utility of the inventions for preventing the bursting of steam boilers; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

On motion of Mr. SEVIER, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Thomas J. Morrison.

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported, without amendment, the bill giving the right of way through the public lands to the Atchafalaya Railroad and Banking company.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of William B. Parker.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, ordered that after Saturday next the daily hour of meeting of the Senate shall be eleven o'clock, instead of twelve o'clock, A. M.

Mr. RUGGLES offered the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of revising the laws regulating the trade upon the frontiers between the United States and the British Provinces, and abolishing duties on lumber the growth of the United States, sawed in the same provinces, and brought into the United States; and, also, upon produce, the growth of the provinces, brought into the United States.

The resolution submitted by Mr. Ewing of Ohio, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to communicate to the Senate any information in his possession relative to frauds in pre-emption floats in Indiana was taken up; and, after some remarks

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

BY BLAIR & RIVES.

— WEEKLY —

PRICE $1 PER SESSION.

24TH CONG.....2D Sess.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1837.

VOLUME 4.....No. 10.

from Messrs. NICHOLAS, CLAY, EWING of Ohio, and SEVIER,

Mr. CLAY offered an amendment directing the Secretary also to communicate any information in his possession relative to frauds in pre-emption floats in other States; which amendment being agreed to, the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

The bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, was taken up as the special order, the amendments made in committee having been agreed to yesterday, and the bill reported to the Senate.

Mr. NORVELL moved an amendment to the fourth section of the bill, providing that it shall not be construed so as to affect the selections of land which have been, or may be made, for the salt springs belonging to Michigan.

Mr. WALKER did not consider that the amendment was at all necessary, for the provisions of the bill covered what the Senator was desirous of accomplishing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN moved an amendment to the fourth section, making it retrospective in its character in regard to pre-emption settlement.

Mr. B. said he offered this amendment with a view to obviate the objection entertained by some gentlemen that the section, as it stood, would hold out a sort of bounty to persons residing in the old States to emigrate to the West. Now, should the amendment prevail, no such temptation would be held out as under the existing section.

Mr. RUGGLES moved to amend the amendment so as to confine the operations of pre-emptions to settlements prior to the 1st of December, 1836.

Mr. BROWN accepted the modification; and,

The question was then taken on the amendment as amended, and it was adopted by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Dana, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Hubbard, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, McKean, Morris, Niles, Page, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Ruggles, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, and White—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Nicholas, Norvell, Robinson, Sevier, Tipton, Walker, and Wright—17.

Mr. EWING of Ohio, submitted an amendment to compel the individual entering a pre-emption to occupy and cultivate his land six months previous to such pre-emption.

Mr. WALKER disapproved of the proposed amendment, and said if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio should prevail, he would vote against the bill.

Mr. EWING of Ohio said, that according to the bill as it was, a man had nothing to do but to re-remain a day or two on the land to entitle him to a settlement.

Mr. BROWN said, almost every gentleman seemed to think that some bill should pass. Now, if this amendment prevailed, the bill would be greatly impaired in the estimation of many Senators. The gentleman from Ohio was mistaken in saying that the bill required a mere temporary residence; it required not only occupancy, but cultivation also.

Mr. WALKER hoped that the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina would prevail; if not, a principle would be introduced in the bill which ought not to find its way there. Such a principle could not be found in any bill heretofore passed of this character. If, then, this new principle should be inserted, he was prepared to abandon the bill, and he would ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLAY said that, if the Senator from Mississippi should vote against the bill, as he threatened to do, it would be no great calamity. As for himself, he would vote against it if no one else did.

What! would it be pretended by any Senator, that a man, by remaining a day upon the public lands, should be entitled to pre-emption? Was that the right upon which gentlemen would grant the right of pre-emption? No: actual cultivation and possession was necessary; this was the practical operation of the pre-emption laws which had heretofore been passed. This requirement should be insisted upon by the present bill; and the requirement proposed to be inserted in the bill of a six months' residence, was only, he repeated, carrying out the intention of the old pre-emption laws.

Mr. RUGGLES remarked that he was desirous that a bill should pass restricting the lands to actual settlers, but he considered three months would be long enough.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and it was carried.

Mr. RUGGLES moved to strike out "six," and insert "three;" which was lost.

The debate was continued by Messrs. BAYARD, NILES, CRITTENDEN, BROWN, CALHOUN, and PRESTON, when

Mr. WALKER moved a reconsideration of the vote of the Senator from Maine, to insert "three" instead of "six," and asked for the yeas and nays; which being taken, were—yeas 28, nays 18.

So the vote was reconsidered; and,

On taking the question on Mr. RUGGLES'S motion to strike out "six," and insert "three," it was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUGGLES, the bill was amended so as to require an actual occupation and cultivation of the tract three months prior to the entry of a pre-emption.

Mr. MORRIS moved to amend the bill by adding a clause requiring the individual purchasing on a pre-emption, to have erected a dwelling house on the land, and to have resided therein the term of three months.

Mr. CALHOUN asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. SEVIER moved to lay the bill and amendments on the table, and asked for the yeas and nays on the question; which being ordered, the question was decided in the negative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Moore, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Sevier, Swift, Tomlinson, and Webster—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Southard, Strange, Walker, Wall, White, and Wright—26.

Mr. MOORE moved that the Senate adjourn; which motion was rejected—yeas 20, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Moore, Morris, Preston, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Wall, and Webster—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Ruggles, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, White, and Wright—26.

After some remarks from Messrs. MORRIS, BAYARD, WALKER, EWING of Ohio, EWING of Illinois, the amendment of Mr. MORRIS was rejected—yeas 21, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Knight, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Ruggles, Southard, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, and White—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Swift, Tallmadge, Walker, and Wright—25.

Mr. NORVELL moved to amend the bill by providing that the restriction which confines the benefits of this act to citizens of the United States, shall apply only to the pre-emption system.

Mr. N. observed, that the section, as it now stands, was the adoption of a policy never before known in the United States in the sales of the public lands.

After some words from Mr. LINN in favor of the amendment,

Mr. NORVELL said, that if he had thought that the motion would prevail, he would have moved to strike out the ninth section altogether, as it ought not to be in the bill at all.

Mr. WEBSTER asked if it was the intention of the Senate, in a bill giving so great a bounty as this bill, to extend it to every man in England, France, and Ireland? Would they extend the privilege of entering lands for their children to fathers in foreign countries, when the friends of the bill, with so much reluctance, consented that it should be extended to those in the old States.

Mr. W. moved to amend the ninth section, so as to restrict the privileges of pre-emption and settlement for children, to citizens of the United States; which was agreed to.

The question was then taken on Mr. NORVELL'S motion to strike out the ninth section; which was rejected—yeas 9, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Hendricks, Linn, Lyon, Norvell, Robinson, Sevier, and Walker—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Dana, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, Kent, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Prentiss, Preston, Ruggles, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, White, and Wright—22.

Mr. RUGGLES moved to strike the 28th section from the bill [this is the section permitting fathers in the old States, or mothers in case the fathers are dead, to enter a section of land for the benefit of minor children.]

Mr. HUBBARD called for the yeas and nays on the question, which were ordered; and after some remarks from Mr. RUGGLES, the motion was rejected—yeas 12, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Fulton, King of Alabama, Linn, Moore, Morris, Niles, Page, Ruggles, Sevier, and Wright—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Clayton, Crittenden, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Ewing of Ohio, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Georgia, Nicholas, Norvell, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Robinson, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, Webster, and White—26.

Mr. MOORE moved to amend the bill, by reducing the price of all lands that have been in the market ten years to one dollar per acre; and all lands that have been in the market fifteen years to seventy-five cents per acre.

Mr. MORRIS here moved that the Senate adjourn, which was carried—yeas 21, nays 20; and The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WEDNESDAY, February 1, 1837.

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Abigail Appleton: read twice, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

On motion of Mr. CRAIG, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill for the relief of Colonel Anthony White, and the same was recommitted to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel Edgcomb: read twice and committed.

Mr. BEALE, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Captain James Hunter: read twice and committed.

Mr. FRY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill granting a pension to Thomas West of Alabama: read twice and committed.

LIGHT HOUSE BILL.

On motion of Mr. SUTHERLAND, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, surveys, &c. and the same was re-committed to the Committee on Commerce.

WESTERN INDIANS.

Mr. EVERETT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill to provide for the security and protection of the emigrant and other Indians west of Missouri and Arkansas: read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. E. gave notice of his intention to bring this bill before the House at as early a day as possible, as it was a very important measure, for the purpose of its being acted upon at the present session. He did not wish to interfere with the appropriation bills; and he would, therefore, name a day, before which it was possible those bills would be passed. He accordingly gave notice that he should call up the above bill for consideration on this day fortnight.

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, made unfavorable reports in the case of Lewis Gourley and Charles Park; which were ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. TALIAFERRO, the Committee of Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Wm. Scott, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his papers.

FREEDOM OF ELECTIONS.

The House then resumed, as the unfinished business of the morning hour, the motion of Mr. BELL for leave to bring in a "bill to secure the freedom of elections."

Mr. GRAVES, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the House at length until 12 o'clock, when, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, the House proceeded to the orders of the day.

The following message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his private secretary, ANDREW JACKSON, Jr. Esq.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I herewith transmit to the House, the copy of a letter addressed to me by the Governor of the State of Maine, on the 30th of June last, communicating sundry resolutions of the Legislature of that State, and claiming the reimbursements of certain moneys paid to John and Phineas R. Harford, for losses and expenses incurred by them under circumstances explained in the accompanying papers.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Washington, 30th January, 1837.

STATE OF MAINE.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, }
Augusta, June 30, 1836. }

To his Excellency ANDREW JACKSON,

President of the United States:

In compliance with a request of the Legislature of this State, I have the honor to transmit to your Excellency the accompanying resolutions.

It will be recollected that in August, A. D. 1831, a meeting of the inhabitants of Madawaska was held for the purpose of organizing the government of said town, by the election of town officers. A subsequent meeting of said inhabitants was held for the choice of a representative, to represent them in the Legislature of this State. In consequence of these meetings, a British military force arrested several of our citizens concerned in said proceedings, carried them to Fredericton, in the Province of New Brunswick, and there confined them in jail. John Harford, to escape capture, fled to the woods, and secreted himself for about sixty days. His crops in consequence were damaged by the irruption of cattle into his fields, and he has since been compelled to abandon his land. Phineas R. Harford, at the time of the approach of the British military force aforesaid, fled to the upper settlements of Madawaska, where he was chosen by the inhabitants to accompany John Baker to Portland, to convey to the Executive of this State the situation of affairs at Madawaska.

For the losses and expenses thus incurred by the said John Harford and Phineas R. Harford, there has been paid to each of them, from the Treasury of this State, the sum of one hundred dollars.

It has been made my duty, by a resolution of the Legislature of Maine, to bring this subject to your excellency's consideration, and I would respectfully request that the sums paid as aforesaid to the said John Harford and Phineas R. Harford, may be reimbursed to the Treasury of this State by the Government of the United States:

I have the honor to be, with sentiments of high consideration and respect, your excellency's obedient servant, (Signed) ROBERT P. DUNLAP.

The message and letters of the Governor having been read, were, on motion of Mr. EVANS, referred to the Committee of Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The following message was also received and communicated.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit certain papers from the War Department, relative to the improvement of Brunswick harbor, Georgia.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Washington, Jan. 27, 1837.

The message having been read, was, on motion of Mr. DAWSON, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

The joint resolution from the Senate, for the appointment of a joint select committee, to ascertain and report on the mode of examining the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States, &c. was taken up and concurred in, and the committee on the part of the House ordered to consist of five members.

The bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union yesterday, for the establishment of an additional land district in Louisiana, was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

The House then took up the "bill making appropriations for the current expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year 1837."

The bill was reported yesterday from the Committee of the Whole, with sundry amendments, and the question pending was on concurring with the committee in their several amendments.

Mr. CUSHING, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the House at length, and went at large into an examination of the policy pursued by this Government for some years past towards the Indians, particularly with reference to the continuance of their independent sovereignty, civilization, emigration, &c.

Mr. EVERETT followed in some explanatory remarks of the report made by him some years since from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and which had been adverted to and quoted by Mr. CUSHING. Mr. E. said the report was uncommitted as to any expressed opinion of the policy of the Government, but they took it up as the already established settled policy of the Government, and then set about devising the best means to carry out that policy with justice, for the benefit of the Indians, and to ensure the best interests of the United States.

Mr. E. then adverted to the causes of the Creek war, which were now proved to have originated in the frauds perpetrated upon them by the land speculators and others. The Seminole war had also sprung out of the bad conduct of the whites, as he had demonstrated last session. He did not charge the Government with having, in any way, given its countenance to the acts perpetrated there, but it was not free from the charge of supineness. He then quoted from the Arkansas Gazette, a statement of the mode and manner in which the Creek Indians were being removed to the country assigned them on the Arkansas river. This account showed the Indians were enduring the most severe privations and sufferings, from want of clothing and proper subsistence; and were dying in large numbers on the road from these causes, and being forced with unnecessary speed, by the contractors, to hasten on their journey, &c.

Mr. PARKER was prepared to adopt some remedy for the removal of the evils complained of; and, to effect that object, he moved to recommit the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means, with instructions so to modify and amend it as to strike out all the general appropriations made therein for the Indian tribes, and insert in their place specific appropriations founded on the estimates for which the money is required and stated to be due.

Mr. LAWLER opposed the motion. There was neither time for it, nor was the specifications sought for particularly needed, as the appropriations were all founded on estimates, and were for objects all well understood. He replied to Mr. EVERETT, arguing that the Indians had forfeited their position of occupancy of their old lands, by their repeated, continual, and unprovoked acts of barbarous hostility, committing the grossest acts of aggression and depredation. It was true that some few of them were removed in irons, but not only necessity required it, but even humanity towards the Indians themselves. He questioned whether the alleged frauds had been the sole cause of the war, nor was he in possession of the fact that such frauds had been committed as had been charged, but if it could be proved, he called upon the gentleman from Vermont for his proof.

Mr. HOLSEY held a recommitment of the bill to be entirely unnecessary; for every member had the necessary specifications of the appropriations on his table, so far as they could be furnished. A reference to the stipulations of the Creek treaty would show it to be impossible to specify all the items, and adverted to one providing that arms should be furnished to each warrior, and their number was not yet known. He affirmed that the Creeks had themselves abrogated the treaty, and relieved this Government from all obligations in reference to their lands by having placed themselves in the hostile attitude they did. He complained of the conclusion to which the gentleman from Vermont had come, before the report of the commissioners to investigate the Creek frauds had been made up.

Mr. DAWSON defended the character of the people of Georgia and Alabama from having been guilty of any conduct producing the late Creek war, and ascribed it solely to the conduct of the General Government and its officers.

Mr. CAMBRELENG hoped the House would not recommit this bill. With reference to the alleged frauds, he called attention to the fact that this very bill contained an appropriation for their investigation; and he further stated that, in the course of a very few days, a report would be made by the commissioners charged with that duty. That would present a more proper occasion to discuss the subject of the causes of the Creek war, and the part these alleged frauds, if any such be found to have existed, may have had in producing the war.

With regard to the motion to recommit, he would explain, in a few words, the object of it. Mr. C. then cited one of the general items, and then read in extenso the estimates upon which it was founded, some twenty or thirty in number, some of them embracing trifling amounts, and which showed that if the specifications were carried out through the bill, would swell it to a volume in size.

Mr. GLASCOCK differed materially from his colleague (Mr. Dawson) in relation to the source of these frauds. He was fully apprehensive that when an investigation should be had into this matter, that the causes of the war with the Creeks would be ascertained to be, if not immediately, remotely, the frauds alluded to by that gentleman; but he denied entirely that those frauds were to be attributed to any act of the Chief Executive. That some individuals who had been connected with the Government, had participated in these frauds he would not pretend to deny; but he did deny that the Executive had any knowledge of it, or had the power to control it. The companies which organized for the purpose of practising these frauds, belonged to both political parties, and many of those individuals had held high situations in Georgia; but he knew that a large majority of the citizens of Georgia condemned the transaction. The whole transaction was now undergoing a strict investigation before a competent tribunal, and when that was got through with the American people would be able to place their finger upon the guilty, and treat them with the scorn their conduct merited. Such, said Mr. G. has been the zeal of the Executive in endeavoring to counteract these frauds that he had ordered the patents for these lands not to be issued until the whole matter should be investigated; and, in consequence of this course, he had called down upon his head the bitter hostility of a number of persons connected with these transactions. Mr. G. regretted to say that many of those individuals had held high official situations in his own State; but he did not consider that any imputation would attach to the State of Georgia in consequence of the act of a few of her citizens; because the people would treat those persons as their acts merited, when their transactions should be brought to light.

Mr. LEWIS regretted that when appropriations were asked for in relation to the Creek Indians, they were always met by the cry of fraud. He did not deny that frauds had been perpetrated, but the people who lived in the immediate vicinity were the first to memorialise Congress for an investigation, and heartily expressed their detestation of those who had been guilty of them. Mr. L. represented that portion of the country, and he should not be doing his duty to his constituents if he did not make this declaration of their reprobation of these frauds. He hoped, however, the further discussion of that subject would be suspended until the report of the commissioners came in, which was shortly expected.

Mr. HAYNES thought this discussion premature. If the conduct of Georgia was before the House, he would willingly contribute his mite in her defence, but, if not, he hoped the discussion would be confined to the only subject properly under consideration.

Mr. PARKER said a few words in support of his motion, and asked for the yeas and nays thereon, but the House refused to order them, and the motion was disagreed to without a division, and the amendments of the Committee of the Whole were all severally concurred in.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina submitted an additional section, providing that no Indian should hereafter be removed, by contract, from the east to the west side of the Mississippi.

After a few words from Messrs. WILLIAMS and HAYNES,

Mr. McKIM demanded the previous question, which was seconded, and the main question being ordered, on the engrossment of the bill, was put and carried without a division.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

ARMY BILL.

On motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, the House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CASEY in the Chair, and took up the "bill making appropriations for the support of the army of the United States for the year 1837."

Mr. CAMBRELENG made a general explanation of the features of the bill, and, under instructions from the Committee of Ways and Means, submitted a variety of additional items, based on estimates from the Ordnance Department, which were all agreed to.

The committee then rose and reported the bill and amendments to the House, which were severally concurred in, and the bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

NEW YORK FIRE.

Mr. CAMBRELENG remarked that he had been very much pressed by a number of his constituents to call the attention of the House to two bills then before it, in relation to the sufferers by the New York Fire, viz: one to remit the duties, and the other to explain the act of the last session. He accordingly asked the consent of the House to take up and consider those bills.

Objection being made:

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved a suspension of the rule. Lost.

LIGHT HOUSE BILL.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, on leave, reported back the Light House bill which had been recommitted to the Committee on Commerce this morning, and the same was committed to a Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of the appropriations for the naval service for the year 1836, showing the amount appropriated under each specific head, the amount expended under each head, and the balances remaining unexpended on the 31st of December last; which, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, concerning an estimate of the cost of a revenue cutter, to be constructed on such a plan as to act as a steam tow boat; which, on motion of Mr. SUTHERLAND, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JARVIS renewed his request to the House to take up and consider the "bill to provide for the enlistment of boys in the naval service," but it was objected to, and, on motion,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

THURSDAY, February 2, 1837.

Mr. NICHOLAS presented the credentials of the Hon. ALEXANDER MOUTON, elected a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. ALEXANDER PORTER.

The oath to support the Constitution of the United States was then administered to Mr. MOUTON by the President, and he took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. RUGGLES presented the petition of Moses Smith, praying for a pension: referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TALLMADGE presented the petition of the representatives of William D. Chever: referred.

Also, a memorial from citizens of Long Island, for the removal of obstructions to Fort Jefferson Bay and Setauket Harbor, and Conscience Bay: referred.

Also, a memorial from citizens of Albany, praying for a survey of the Hudson river, and the erection of buoys and beacons; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HENDRICKS presented certain papers and documents in support of the claim of M. B. Clark; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of sundry citizens of Pottsville, Pennsylvania, protesting against the repeal of the duties on coal. Mr. B. said he would take occasion to express his sentiments on the subject, when the bill of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. Niles) came up; and as the Committee on Finance had reported a bill to reduce the duties, without including the article of coal, he would move to lay the memorial on the table. This motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the memorial of F. Raviescos of Alabama, complaining of the conduct of two of the land officers in that State: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CLAY presented a memorial from a number of authors of Great Britain, asking Congress to pass such laws as will secure to them the copy rights to their works, and.

After some remarks from Messrs. CLAY, PRESTON, BUCHANAN, and GRUNDY,

On motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the memorial was referred to a select committee appointed by the Chair, consisting of Messrs. CLAY, PRESTON, BUCHANAN, WEBSTER and EWING of Ohio.

Mr. TIPTON presented a memorial from sundry citizens of Indiana, praying that a law may be passed changing the mode of selling the public lands: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. NORVELL presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, instructing their Senators in Congress to vote for expunging from the Journals of the Senate the resolution censuring the conduct of General Jackson in relation to the Bank of the United States.

Mr. N. said, that as the expunging process had been performed, he would move to lay the resolutions on the table.

This motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of Delaware, instructing their Senators and requesting their Representatives in Congress, to use their exertions to obtain the passage of appropriations for additional improvements in the Delaware river, and to endeavor to obtain a repeal of the hospital money exacted from seamen: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LINN presented the petition of sundry citizens of Dubuque county, Wisconsin Territory, numerously signed, praying for the passage of a law granting pre-emption rights to actual settlers: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KENT presented the petition of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the incorporation of a gas light company.

Mr. KENT presented the joint resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, setting forth the languishing condition of the tobacco trade, and praying Congress to take the subject into consideration: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HENDRICKS presented the memorial and joint resolutions of the Legislature of Indiana, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of ———, on the southern coast of Lake Michigan: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NICHOLAS presented the petition of sundry citizens of Ouachita, Louisiana; which was laid on the table.

Mr. TOMLINSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which had been referred the petition of Mrs. Ann S. Helleman, widow of the late Major Helleman, reported a bill for her relief, which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

The following resolutions were submitted considered and adopted:

By Mr. TOMLINSON.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to John Newton, a quarter section of land in lieu of the military bounty land patented to him in 1818, and recently ascertained to be unfit for cultivation.

By Mr. CALHOUN:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the Senate as early as practicable, the aggregate expense of collecting the duties on the lakes during the year 1836, including the expense of revenue cutters; the net amount of duties collected and the expenditures of the Government on the lakes during the same period, in constructing harbors, breakwaters, and light-houses, with the current expenses attending the light houses on the lakes during the year.

By Mr. WALL:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be requested to inquire into the expediency of reprinting the Legislative Journal of the Senate, under the direction of the Secretary, in folio form, with type of proper size, and arranged into volumes of convenient dimensions, with a complete index to be made to each volume. The number of copies to correspond with the usual number of documents printed for the Senate, and to be subject to distribution as may hereafter be made by its order.

On motion of Mr. WHITE, the bill for the relief of John E. Wool was taken up and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, the question being on the first amendment of Mr. MOORE, to reduce the price of the lands that have been in the market ten years to one dollar, and those that have been in the market fifteen years, to seventy-five cents.

Mr. MOORE said, that having been an early emigrant to that section of the country in which he lived, and having some knowledge of the privations and hardships which his fellow-citizens suffered, in common with those who emigrated to the western country, it was natural that he should feel some sympathy and sensibility, owing to what had been said on this floor respecting the State of Alabama in the way of denunciation. The Senator from Georgia (Mr. King) had talked about frauds having been committed by that class of citizens who were striving to procure a pre-emption right; and he had intimated that they, by their conduct, had contributed more than any other class of people, to bring about the Indian wars which have taken place. He (Mr. M.) denied the assertion, and would tell gentlemen what had caused them. It was the bad faith which had characterized the Government in carrying out the treaties made with the Indian tribes. He thought that some of the gentlemen's constituents had been engaged, as well as others, in great speculations in the public lands. Even admitting, which he did not, that these poor men, who had been alluded to by the honorable Senator, as having occasioned the Indian wars, had really done so, who were they who shouldered their muskets, and fought your battles? Why, these very men; not the rich men, who were enjoying all the comforts and luxuries of life at their own firesides. It was much more probable that the rich men, and not the poor, had caused the wars in question.

It would be seen that the amendment, which he proposed, was to operate on land for ten, sixteen, and twenty years, and which had not been held by a purchaser. The lands had been so long held by the Government, that it was now decidedly their interest to bring them into the market at the same time; and, he ventured to say, that if the price was not reduced at once, they never would be sold. His amendment was intended to benefit that class of his fellow citizens who had been driven out of the public land market; for it was the rich men who had heretofore been realizing enormous sums of money by purchasing lands. Should his amendment be adopted, it would enable the poor man to possess a freehold. He denied that this bill was for the benefit of the new States only, as had been asserted; it was, on the contrary, intended to benefit the people of the United States generally.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendment by yeas and nays, and it was rejected—yeas 16, nays 23.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the second clause of the proposed amendment, which was, "that any person who has resided on, and purchased, land at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre during the year 1836, and who shall be in possession of such land at the passage of this act, shall be allowed to enter one quarter section until 1838, provided he shall have proved his right before July next, before the Register and Receiver of the proper land office."

The amendment was negatived by a vote of 27 to 15.

Mr. WHITE said that he was not satisfied with the bill in its present shape, nor did he know that any amendment could be offered to it which would reconcile him to its provisions. He had voted with the friends of the bill as far as he could, in order that it might be so amended as to meet with the approval of a majority of the Senate. Mr. W. proceeded to examine and comment on the provisions of the bill.

He then went on to say that the bill was partial in its character, for it gave a preference to one portion of society over another in the purchase of the public lands. He argued that the bill, in its present shape, went to change the whole land system of the country, and excluded from becoming purchasers the great mass of society, in order to induce more emigration to the West. According to this bill, persons might obtain land, and that, too, without intending to become occupiers of it. Now, he thought it was not sound policy to do this; nor could any good reason be given why it should be done. If the bill was to remain in its present form, he could not consent to give his vote for it. Yet he must confess that he could not regret, after the subject had been so long under consideration, if nothing were done that would prove beneficial to the new States while, at the same time, no injustice should be perpetrated against the old. With regard to the large amount of revenue which had been derived from the sales of the public lands during the past year, he would tell gentlemen how it happened to be so much greater than at any former time. Why, a short time before the Indian title had been extinguished, a large portion of the finest lands were brought into the market; and the consequence was, that almost every man who wished to procure some of them, and yet not having the means, obtained accommodation at the banks, and then purchased. Afterwards, they sold to great advantage, and repaid what they borrowed. And this had been the course pursued in regard to the public lands, which some gentlemen might call "speculating." Now the moment the money deposited with the States should be withdrawn, an end would be put to this state of things. In fact, even at this time, the best lands in the south and southwest were gone; and yet Congress was about to legislate to prevent speculation and preserve the public lands! After some further remarks, Mr. W. observed: Let justice be done to the new States; but let no radical change be made in the laws, unless gentlemen were quite sure that that change was made upon a principle which the people of the whole Union would approve of. If that course were not pursued, the result might be that two parties would be got up, of the old States on one side and the new on the other, and then no man could foretell what would happen to the liberties and prosperity of the confederacy. If the amendment he proposed to offer, should be adopted, our land system would be preserved, while, at the same time, it would prevent as much as any scheme could, the frauds known to be committed, as regarded the public lands. Mr. W. concluded his remarks, by offering the following as a substitute for the amendment reported by the Committee on the Public Lands.

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That every settler or occupant of the public lands prior to the passage of this act, who was in possession, on the first day of December last, and cultivated any part thereof in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-six, shall be entitled to all the benefits and privileges provided by an act entitled "An act to grant pre-emption rights to settlers on the public lands," approved May twenty-ninth, eighteen hundred and thirty, and the said act is hereby revived and shall continue in force one year: Provided, That, where more than one person may have settled upon and cultivated any one quarter section of land, each one of them shall have an equal share or interest in the same quarter section, but shall have no claim to any other land: And provided, always, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any person who made his settlement or occupancy before the extinguishment of the Indian title to the land on which he settled, or to which he claims a right of occupancy.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, in cases where individuals were entitled to the benefits of the pre-emption act of June, eighteen hundred and thirty-four, and were deprived of said rights by the location of Indian reservations having been placed on their improvements, after such settlements were made, the persons having been so entitled shall be allowed to enter one quarter section of any of the public lands (not reserved from sale) in the State in which such persons resided: Provided, That such persons shall produce satisfactory proof before the proper land officers, and make their selections of said quarter sections before the first day of June next.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all lands which have been offered for sale at fifty cents per acre; all lands which have been offered fifteen or more years, and less than twenty years, shall be hereafter sold at seventy-five cents per acre; and all lands which have been offered ten or more years, and less than fifteen years, shall hereafter be sold at one dollar per acre: Provided, That not more than one hundred and sixty acres shall be sold to any one purchaser, nor to any other than actual settlers at such reduced prices.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the consent of the United States shall be, and hereby is, given to the States within which the public lands are situated, to impose and levy a tax on all lands which may hereafter be sold by the United States within their respective limits.

Mr. WALKER made a few remarks, expressive of his disapproval of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, and of his opinion, that should the Senate entertain the idea of adopting the substitute, the consequence would be, that no bill would be passed at the present session.

Mr. SEVIER was in favor of the amendment, because it removed many of those vexatious restrictions in the settlement and sales of the lands, which existed in the bill. The bill, he said, had undergone so many amendments of which he disapproved, that he was prepared to vote against it; but if this amendment prevailed, he would with pleasure give it his support.

Mr. BLACK expressed his approbation of many parts of the amendment, but thought as there was no prospect of the most material parts of them being adopted, that their discussion would delay the bill. The attempt to introduce the graduating principle had been made several times and failed, and it was useless, he thought, to try it again. As he preferred going on with the bill, faulty as it was, he must vote against the amendment.

Mr. BENTON thought that one of the main objects of the bill had been almost taken away by the principle introduced by the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. He was in favor of all the objects embraced by the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, but he despaired of seeing them adopted, the votes on the graduation principle having been so often taken and decided against them, that he had no hopes of seeing them introduced for at least two or three years to come. Mr. B. took a review of the speculations in the public lands several years ago, which had resulted in so much ruin and distress, and likened the present rage for speculation to that in the above period. He did not, however, despair of seeing the graduation principle in time introduced, though it could not be done now—the darkest hour in the night being that just before the morning. Though he approved of the objects embraced in the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, he must be compelled to vote against it, as he wished the bill to go on.

Mr. WHITE said, he was gratified to find that the principles of his amendment was approved of by several gentlemen; and he was the more gratified that no one had been able to offer any argument against it.

Mr. BENTON then observed, that as he considered it of importance that the Senate should act with a full understanding of the amendment just offered, so much of which he approved of, he would do what he had not before been willing to consent to since the land bill was under discussion; that is, he would move that the bill be laid over for the present, in order that the amendment might be printed, and laid on their tables in the morning.

At the suggestion of Mr. WHITE, Mr. B. subsequently moved that the Senate adjourn, and that the amendment be printed, which was agreed to; and

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 2, 1837.

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported Senate bill, without amendment, for the relief of Andrew Knox, of Mississippi; which he moved to be ordered to a third reading.

Mr. CHAMBERS of Pennsylvania was opposed to the motion, since it presented no claim for taking precedence over other land-claims of a similar character. He moved to refer it to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARRISON stated that the case of the applicant was a very hard one, and without precedent with any other then before the House. Mr. H. made a brief statement of the claim, and the circumstances giving rise to it, and hoped the bill would not be committed.

After a few words further from Mr. CHAMBERS, Mr. HUNTSMAN, Mr. BOON, Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, GHOLSON and CLAIBORNE of Mississippi, the motion of Mr. CHAMBERS was disagreed to.

Mr. HUNTSMAN moved to commit it to the Committee on Private Land Claims. Lost.

[The following was the substance of this claim: The surveyor employed to survey this township, contrived to throw the sixteenth section upon the settlement of the claimant, who was entitled to pre-emption, instead of throwing it in the centre, by commencing at the N. E. corner, because the settler refused to give him $500. That was the allegation; but the fact was in evidence, that, either through contrivance, or ignorance, the surveyor did not commence at the proper point, and the school section was thrown into one corner.]

The question recurring on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. ADAMS contended that, inasmuch as the bill involved the subject of pre-emption, and referred also to the school section, or public land and public property, it ought to be committed. He therefore moved its reference to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MERCER replied by remarking that the public features of the bill grew out of the nature of the private claim, and were not per se of a public nature.

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri also remarked, that the bill provided for nothing more than a change of the claimant's claim.

Mr. CHAMBERS of Kentucky was perfectly satisfied of the justice of the claim from the explanation he had heard, and thought the bill should pass instantly. The claimant had been deprived of his right because he refused to give a bribe to the surveyor.

Mr. ADAMS contended that they ought not to give away their public property because a man had been deprived of his rights through the roguery of a public officer, at least not without a fuller examination if the allegations were true. The title to the bill was not the proper one. It purported to be a private bill, whereas, he maintained, it was clearly a public one.

Mr. BOON remarked that this bill was not presented in the character of a claim, for the individual benefitted by it only asked for that justice to which he was entitled without coming there, and of which he had been deprived by the contrivance before referred to.

Mr. KENNON said the Senate had three times passed this bill, and the Committee on the Public Lands had unanimously recommended its passage. Moreover, every one interested in it, all the inhabitants of the township, and those charged with the trust of the school section, were all in favor of it.

Mr. CARR bore testimony to the fact of the township having been improperly numbered, the school section having been thrown in the northeastern corner; for, not satisfied with the petitioner's statement alone, Mr. C. went himself to the land office, and examined the plat. The case he also described to be a very hard one.

The motion to commit to a Committee of the Whole House was then put, and disagreed to; and the bill was ordered to be read a third time now, and it was then read a third time and passed.

CUMBERLAND ROAD.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, the bill to provide for the completion of the Cumberland road east of the Ohio, then on the Speaker's table, was committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MERCER, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a bill relinquishing certain lands in the State of Ohio; [this was the title of the United States to the road lands through the "Black Swamp;"] which was read twice, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to report to the House of Representatives, at their next session, upon the propriety of establishing a system of telegraphs for the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved its consideration at that time; but it being objected to, the resolution lies over one day for consideration.

Mr. BEAL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported Senate bill for the relief of Ransom Mix, with an amendment; which was committed.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Leonard Loomis: read twice and committed.

Mr. REED asked the consent of the House to submit a resolution directing the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire into the expediency of ordering to be built six sloops of war of the second class.

Objection being made, Mr. R. moved a suspension of the rule, but the motion did not prevail, only 73 voting in the affirmative.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported, without amendment, Senate bill to authorize Peter Warner of Indiana to purchase a certain half-section of land in said State; which was committed.

AMERICAN SEAMEN.

Mr. MCKEON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to abolish protections to American seamen, and to provide passports: read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel P. Hugo: read twice and committed.

On motion of Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, the Committee of Claims were discharged from the further consideration of the case of R. L. Breckenridge; and the same was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

On motion of Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, the same committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the administrators of Gen. Gratio; and the same was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion of Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, the same committee were discharged from the consideration of the petition of Mr. A. Whitehead; and the same was committed to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion of Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, the same committee were discharged from the consideration of the petition of Christopher Holmead; and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Henry Pearson; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Claims, made reports on the petitions of George Thornborough and John Kennedy, praying payment for property destroyed in the military service of the United States, when it was Ordered, That the said claims be referred to the Third Auditor of the Treasury for adjustment.

Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Matthew Stewart for extra work done on the Cumberland road, reported the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Matthew Stewart, and that the same be referred to the Secretary of War.

Mr. CHAMBERS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of David McCaleb; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Manufactures, made an unfavorable report on the memorial of George Whiman, praying to be allowed to import, free of duty, iron and other materials for certain steamboats; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Jeremiah Linswell, praying for arrears of pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LAY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the petitions of Lot Stricker, J. I. Rollins, Jeremiah Adams, and Gideon Safford; which were severally ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, the Committee on Invalid Pensions were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Lazarus Sprague, and the petition ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CRANE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Catharine Teifair, daughter of Captain Wool, of the revolution, praying for bounty land; also the petitions of the heirs of Jacob Sommers, deceased, and Hannah Wise; which were severally ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the petitions of William Keller and William Poole; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Eleanor S. Moore, praying for a pension for the services of her husband, a lieutenant in the revolutionary war; also the petition of David B. Whitey, a soldier, praying to be placed on the pension roll; which reports were severally ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMBRELENG asked the consent of the House to read a third time the Army and Indian appropriation bills, ordered to a third reading on yesterday.

Mr. BOYD inquired what was the order of the day at this time?

The CHAIR remarked that if no motion had been made, the reference of the President's message would be the first subject in order.

Mr. BOYD said that this being the case, he would inquire whether he was not entitled to the floor on that question?

The CHAIR replied that he would have been if the subject had been announced to the House.

Mr. CAMBRELENG remarked that when the Civil and Diplomatic bill came before the House, he understood that an amendment would be offered, which would open the whole question in relation to Texas and Mexico.

Mr. BOYD objected to the reading of the bills at this time.

Mr. CAMBRELENG then moved a suspension of the rule for the purpose of reading a third time the Army bill, and the Indian appropriation bill; and also to take up and consider all the appropriation bills reported from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved to include the light house bill.

Mr. MERCER moved to amend the latter motion by including the bill to complete the Cumberland road east of the Ohio. Lost.

Mr. JARVIS further moved, to include certain bills reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. Lost.

Mr. CLAIBORNE of Mississippi declared himself opposed to a suspension of the rules, for the purpose of making special orders, unless in some great public emergency; it led to favoritism and partial legislation, affecting most injuriously the new and weaker portions of this Union. But if the rules were to be suspended to enable gentlemen to get up their favorite bills, he desired to include a bill of more importance, in his estimation, than any on the calendar; and for that purpose, he sent the following amendment to the amendment to the Chair.

And also bill, No. 85, reported at the last session, entitled "A bill to graduate the price of public land, to make provision for actual settlers, and to cede the refuse lands to the States in which they lie."

Mr. OWENS said it must be obvious that the greater part of the day would be consumed in these ineffectual motions, and he therefore moved the previous question; which was seconded by the House—ayes 75, noes 71.

The main question was then ordered to be put—ayes 77, noes 60.

The yeas and nays were then ordered on the motion submitted by Mr. CAMBRELENG, to suspend the rule for the purpose of taking up and considering the bills introduced by him, and were, yeas 113, nays 74—not two-thirds—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Anthony, Bailey, Barton, Bean, Black, Blocker, Bouldin, Bovee, Buchanan, Bunch, Burns, William B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Chapin, Chetwood, Childs, Clark, Cleveland, Coles, Conner, Corwin, Craig, Cramer, Cushing, Cushman, Darlington, Denny, Doubleday, Efner, Evans, Everett, Farlin, Fowler, Fry, Fuller, R.

Garland, Graham, Granger, Grantland, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hiland Hall, Hard, Hardin, Harper, Samuel S. Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Hazeltine, Henderson, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Hubley, Hunt, Huntsman, Ingham, James, Jarvis, Cave Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Klingensmith, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, Lawrence, Lay, Gideon Lee, Joshua Lee, Thomas Lee, Lewis, Logan, Loyal, Lucas, Job Mann, William Mason, Moses Mason, McKay, McKennan, McKeon, McKim, Miller, Montgomery, Morgan, Morris, Owens, Parker, Patterson, Peyton, Phelps, Pinckney, Joseph Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Russell, Seymour, Shinn, Slickes, Smith, Sprague, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Turner, Turrill, Vanderpool, Wagener, Wardwell, Weeks, Thomas T. Whitteley, and Young—113.

NAYS—Messrs. Alford, Chilton Allan, Ash, Bell, Bond, Boon, Boyd, Briggs, Bynum, John Calhoun, Carr, Carter, Casey, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chapman, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Crane, Crary, Dawson, Deberry, Dunlap, Elmore, Forester, French, Gholson, Glascock, Graves, Grayson, Grennell, Griffin, Harlan, Albert G. Harrison, Herod, Hoar, Howell, Huntington, Joseph Johnson, Henry Johnson, Kennon, Kilgore, Luke Lea, Love, Lyon, Sampson Mason, Maury, McCarty, McLene, Milligan, Patton, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Pettigrew, Phillips, Pickens, John Reynolds, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Standefer, Storer, Sutherland, Taliaferro, Waddy Thompson, Underwood, Vinton, Washington, Webster, White, Elisha Whitteley, Lewis Williams and Sherrod Williams, and Yell—74.

So the motion was decided in the negative.

On motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, the following engrossed bill was taken up on its third reading:

A bill making appropriations for the current expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year 1837.

Mr. GRENNELL expressed his opposition to the mode by which the Indians had been removed, adverting to the article quoted yesterday from the Arkansas Gazette by Mr. EVERETT.

Mr. ALFORD was sorry to see gentlemen here expressing so much sympathy for a race of men who had committed such atrocities as the savages in Georgia and Alabama. He depicted, in most glowing colors, the scenes which had occurred in that region of country. The Indians had murdered whole families, and robbed them of their goods, yet gentlemen set up this sickly cry of sympathy for these poor savages. Mr. A. had met these savages face to face, and arm to arm, in hostile array; and he repeated, that if gentlemen had been with him, they would have found these savages the last persons in the world to be taken for an object of sympathy. He did not believe, as some do, that the President was concerned in frauds which had been committed on the Creeks; and he was of opinion, that if the President's views had been carried out, the evil would have been corrected; he believed there were those around the President who had misrepresented the state of facts. These frauds were perpetrated, he believed, by citizens from nearly all the States, as well as citizens of Georgia and Alabama; but the fault was in the treaty. It was the treaty being imperfect which led to them; and he believed that every purchase and contract in the Creek nation was null and void. So far as related to the removal of those Indians, he preferred their removal by contractors, because it was necessary they should be removed, and the agents of the General Government who had been charged with this duty had failed to perform it. The contractors would perform it; therefore, he preferred them.

Mr. GRENNELL denied that he was an advocate of the savage barbarities, but he had sympathies for them, and he was opposed to the continuance of visiting vengeance, as a corresponding measure of cruelty, upon the heads of their women and helpless children, on account of their warriors.

Mr. EVERETT reiterated his explanation made yesterday in reference to the report made by himself on the subject of the Indian tribes; and adverted to the causes of the Creek war. After a few further remarks, the purport of which was not distinctly heard, Mr. E. alluded to the brief sketch of his remarks in the Globe of this morning, and remarked that he was sorry to say that the reports of the proceedings of the House were more correctly reported in that than in any other paper.

The bill was then read a third time and passed.

The bill making appropriations for the support of the army of the United States for the year 1837, was also read a third time and passed.

Mr. CAMBRELENG asked the general consent of the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the naval service bill.

Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina objecting.

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved a suspension of the rule.

Mr. THOMPSON asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and were—yeas 132, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Homan Allan, Ash, Bailey, Beaumont, Black, Buckee, Bond, Boulton, Briggs, Buchanan, Wm. B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Carter, George Chambers, Chapin, Nath. H. Claiborne, Clark, Coles, Craig, Cramer, Crane, Crary, Cushing, Cushman, Darlington, Deberry, Denny, Doubleday, Dunlap, Efner, Everett, Farlin, Fry, Fuller, Gholson, Glascock, Graham, Grazer, Grantland, Grennell, Haley, J. Hall, Hiland Hall, Harlan, Harper, Samuel S. Harrison, Hawkins, Hazeltine, Henderson, Hoar, Holt, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingham, William Johnson, James, Jarvis, Jenifer, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, John W. Jones, Benjamin Jones, Lane, Lansing, Laporte, Lawrence, Lay, G. Lee, Thomas Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Loyal, Job Mann, Wm. Mason, Moses Mason, Maury, McKay, McKim, McKim, McLene, Miller, Milligan, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Parker, Patton, James A. Reynolds, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Russell, Slade, Smith, Sprague, Standefer, Steele, Storer, Sutherland, Taliaferro, John Thomson, Turner, Turrill, Underwood, Vanderpool, Vinton, Wagener, Werd, Wardwell, Washington, Webster, Weeks, Elisha Whitteley, Thomas T. Whitteley, Yell, and Young—132.

NAYS—Messrs. Chilton Allan, Boyd, Bunch, Bynum, John Calhoun, Casey, John Chambers, John P. H. Claiborne, Dawson, Elmore, Grayson, G. H. Hard, Albert G. Harrison, Howell, Lawler, Sampson Mason, Pettigrew, John Reynolds, Waddy Thompson, White, Lewis Williams, and Sherrod Williams—23.

So the rule was suspended, and the House accordingly, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. PATTON in the Chair, and took up the "bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year 1837."

The bill having been read through, was taken up by sections.

Mr. CAMBRELENG explained that the principal increase in this bill above that of last year, was in consequence of the equipping the exploring expedition; besides this there was an appropriation for fitting out the ship-of-the-line Pennsylvania, and two sloops of war.

The first section was read as follows,
"For pay of commissioned, warrant, and petty officers, and of seamen, $2,434,836."

Mr. JARVIS said, in this item was included the appropriation for the exploring expedition to the South Pacific, which seemed to be about to be carried on to an extent he did not think the country would justify. He therefore moved to reduce the item $150,000.

In support of his motion Mr. J. adduced the testimony of Cap. Cooke, who bequeathed as a legacy to the world that no vessel sent on an exploring expedition should exceed, if possible, three hundred tons, two of which would be sufficient. This principle had been adopted by the British and French Governments. He was afraid that if the expedition was fitted out on the magnificent scale proposed, it would excite ridicule.

Mr. CAMBRELENG hoped the motion would be adopted. He concurred entirely with the view taken by the gentleman from Maine, (Mr. Jarvis), and he felt it his duty to state his concurrence in those views. He had made inquiries of many practical men, and some of the highest officers of the navy, on this subject, and from the information he had obtained from them, he was perfectly satisfied that the views taken by the gentleman from Maine were correct, and he hoped the House would concur in it, and reduce the appropriation.

Mr. PHILLIPS said if the leading friends of the administration, in view of the present posture of the question, in view of the present expectation of the world, in view of the responsibility assumed by the President, were disposed to interpose any obstacle to the completion of this expedition, upon them be the responsibility of its failure; for fail it would, if this motion should prevail.

Mr. CHAMBERS of Kentucky cited the law passed last session authorizing the President to employ a sloop of war, and such other smaller vessels as might be necessary for the expedition, appropriating $150,000 for that purpose.

Mr. JARVIS remarked that the gentleman from Massachusetts seemed to regard this as a party measure. It was no such thing. It was one in which the honor and renown of the nation was concerned. Mr. J. denied that he was opposed to the expedition; on the contrary, he wished it fitted out with credit to the public, in a manner to insure its complete success, and to redound to the honor and fame of every officer employed. His proposition was made to that end. He stated he had received the opinions of many officers of the navy, of great skill and judgment, and they were all confirmatory of his own as to the kind of vessels that ought to be employed.

Mr. ADAMS thought the gentleman from Maine, the Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, had done the President and heads of departments injustice. Mr. A. entreated gentlemen to withdraw the motion to reduce the appropriation. He did not consider it too large for the objects to be obtained. He would vote three times the amount if called upon to do so, because it was his hope that this expedition would shed honor on the American character, instead of holding it up to the ridicule of the world.

Mr. ROBERTSON made an inquiry as to the amount required for fitting out the Macedonian.

Mr. CAMBRELENG replied, by citing the following estimates:

Estimate of the amount that will be required for the support of the frigate Macedonian, the store-ship Relief, the two barques Pioneer and Consort, and the schooner Pilot, employed on the Surveying and Exploring Expedition, for one year.

For the pay of commissioned, warrant, petty officers, and seamen, and for the scientific corps,	$210,848 50
For provisions,	55,552 50
For repairs, and wear and tear of the vessels on the expedition,	50,000 00
For medical and hospital stores,	4,000 00
For ordnance and ordnance stores,	7,000 00
For contingencies,	16,000 00
	$346,411 00

Mr. C. also cited some other estimates, connected with the exploring expedition, amounting to upwards of 300,000.

Mr. C. suggested to the gentleman from Maine not to press his motion at that time, but to withdraw it, and renew it in the House.

Mr. C. then adverted to the great scale on which the expedition was projected, and contended, with the gentleman from Maine, that the object he had in view was to insure its success. By sending a large frigate, she ran the hazard of being dashed to pieces on the rocks, and the expense to the country would exceed a million of dollars, if fitted out on the plan proposed. He expressed himself warmly in favor of the objects of the expedition, and reiterated that his support of the motion of Mr. Jarvis was to prevent the expedition from being shipwrecked, as it inevitably would be, in the opinion of many men of skill and judgment, if it embarked on the magnificent scale proposed.

Mr. VINTON preferred leaving the execution of the law to the Executive, where the responsibility was placed by the law of last session. From all he had read, and from what he had gathered of the importance of the trade of those seas, he believed an efficient force should accompany the expedition. It was of the first importance to impress the savage with a great idea of our power, and for this millions were yearly expended. As yet the barbarians of the Polynesian Islands had seen only our merchantmen; but send a vessel of war to them and they would be impressed with a new idea of our power that would certainly lead to the best results, and be the means of securing upon a good basis our future trade and commerce there. He was, therefore, for voting whatever was reasonably asked for, without attempting to dictate what particular ship or class of vessels should be employed.

Mr. BRIGGS said it was evident that they could not get through this bill to-night, and he therefore moved that the committee rise; agreed to.

The committee then rose and reported.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution of the House, covering a report of the commissioner charged with the examination of the ports south of the Chesapeake bay, with a view to the establishment of a navy yard or a naval depot; which, on motion of Mr. JARVIS, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitting to the House a statement of the balances remaining unsettled by collectors of the customs for more than three years prior to the 30th of September last; which, on motion of Mr. McKIM, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

On motion, the House adjourned.

SELECT JOINT COMMITTEE.

On the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS, Mr. CAMBRELENG, Mr. REEL, Mr. CONNOR and Mr. LYON of the committee on the part of the House; and Messrs. GRUNDY, CLAY, and WRIGHT on the part of the Senate.

To ascertain and report a mode of examining the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States, and of notifying the persons elected of their election.

SELECT COMMITTEE.

Ordered, That the memorial of the Tobacco Planters, and resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, upon the subject of the high rates of duty imposed by foreign Governments upon American tobacco, be referred to a Select Committee; and

Messrs. JENIFER of Maryland,
COLES of Virginia,
INGERSOLL of Pennsylvania,
McKIM of Maryland,
ROBINSON of Virginia,
KENNON of Ohio,
CALHOON of Kentucky,
SHIELDS of Tennessee,
HARRISON of Missouri, were appointed said committee.

IN SENATE,

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1837.

On motion of Mr. SOUTHARD, leave was granted to McKean Buchanan to withdraw his petition and papers.

Mr. LINN presented two petitions from the citizens of Milwaukee, Wisconsin Territory, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a harbor at that place: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LINN also presented a petition from sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for appropriations for the construction of roads in said Territory.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, leave was granted to Thomas G. Prettyman to withdraw his petition and papers.

Petitions were further presented by Messrs. SOUTHARD, ROBBINS and EWING of Illinois.

Mr. RIVES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which had been referred the bill from the House to change the title of certain officers of the Navy, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. RIVES, from the same committee, also reported without amendment the bill authorizing surveys for the purpose of establishing a southern naval depot on the coast of Florida, and the bill making appropriations for constructing a dry dock at Pensacola.

On motion of Mr. LINN, the Committee on Private Land Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of Charles Hoyt and Benjamin Collins, Charles Johnson and others.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to which had been referred the petition of L. B. Chandler and others, of St. Clair county, Illinois; reported a bill authorizing them to import, free of duty, certain railroad iron: which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the same committee, to which had been referred three several acts of the Territorial Legislature of Wisconsin, incorporating the stockholders of the Bank of Wisconsin, the Mineral Point Bank, and the Miner's Bank of Dubuque, in said Territory, reported a bill approving and confirming the same, with certain limitations and restrictions; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to suspend for one year the tax or hospital money imposed on seamen; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. DAVIS then submitted the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to ascertain what it will cost to erect three hospitals, of suitable dimensions, for the relief of sick and disabled seamen and watermen upon the waters of the Mississippi river, at the most suitable places for that purpose; also, what it will cost to erect the same number, if needed, on the most important points on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be further instructed to draw up the project of a law to regulate the disbursement of funds for the relief of sick and disabled seamen, and for the government of hospitals erected for that purpose.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to enumerate those posts and places in the United States where, because suitable accommodations for the sick cannot be obtained, or from any other cause, there is a strong necessity for hospitals, and to make report upon this and the other instructions in these resolutions at the next session of Congress.

Mr. NILES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Ann B. Van Brune; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which had been referred the bill for the relief of William Hogan, administrator of Michael Hogan, deceased, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the same committee, to which had been referred the petition of Andrew Forrest, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. KENT, on leave, introduced a bill for the relief of Anna M. Smith; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The following resolutions were submitted, considered, and adopted:

By Mr. SWIFT:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act of Congress of the last session, granting pensions to the widows of deceased officers and soldiers of the revolution, as not to exclude from the benefit of its provisions any person who shall be a widow at the time of her application for a pension under said act, in consequence of her having married subsequent to the decease of her former husband, for whose services she claimed the benefit of said act.

By Mr. LINN:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the propriety of making some compensation to the Ioway tribe of Indians, for their interest in the lands ceded to the United States by the Sacs and Fox Indians in the treaties of July 15th, 1830, and 21st of September, 1832, to which lands it was admitted in the treaty of August, 1825, the said Ioway Indians had a joint claim with the said Sacs and Foxes; and also into the expediency of negotiating with the deputation of Ioway Indians, now in this city, for the extinguishment of their title to the lands to which the Sacs and Foxes, and themselves have still a joint claim under the said treaty of 1825.

Mr. MORRIS submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary inquire whether the river Mississippi, and the navigable waters leading into the same, as well as the navigable waters leading into the river St. Lawrence, which are declared, in the ordinance for the Government of the Territory northwest of the river Ohio, to be common highways and for ever free to the inhabitants of that Territory as well as citizens of the United States, are so far within the power of the General Government as that Congress can provide by law for the regulation of steamboat and other navigation on the same, for the security of commerce, the prevention of casualties and accidents, and the recovery of damages for injuries from neglect or purposely done, and for the punishment of acts of violence.

Mr. BUCHANAN submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a light-house on Sand Island, opposite Mobile Point, and of placing buoys and beacons in Mobile bay.

The bill from the House, making appropriations for the current expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaties with certain Indian tribes for the year 1837; and

The bill from the House making appropriations for the support of the army for the year 1837; were severally read twice and referred.

The bill from the House for the relief of John E. Wool, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. DAVIS offered the following resolution, on which he asked immediate consideration, and accompanied it with an introductory explanation, as follows:

"Mr. DODGE, the Consul at Bremen, represents his belief that the merchants of that place, who import goods to this country, evade the 7th section of the act of 1823, which requires that such persons should verify their invoices before the Consul, by neglecting to take the oath before him. This implies that entries are fraudulently made here, by the perjury of those who take the necessary oath, or by the negligence of the custom-house officers."

Resolved, That the letter of Mr. DODGE be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, with instructions to inquire if any abuses, such as he intimates, are practised here, or in any other country, in the importation of goods into the United States; and to report to the Senate, at the next session of Congress, the result of his investigation.

The resolution was, by consent, adopted.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands except to actual settlers and in limited quantities.

Mr. NORVELL moved to reconsider the vote on striking out the eighth section of the bill.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and decided in the negative as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Ewing, of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Robinson, Ruggles, Tipton, Walker, and Wright—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Hendricks, Hubbard, Kent, King, of Georgia, Knight, Morris, Preston, Prentiss, Robinson, Southard, Swift, Wall, and White—23.

Mr. RUGGLES moved to amend the eighth section, by striking out of the third line the word "female," and inserting in lieu the word "male," so as to restrict the entry by parents to male children only.

Mr. BUCHANAN said he would much rather lose the whole section than exclude the ladies.

Mr. RUGGLES presumed the ladies would not be very desirous of entering on the arduous task of cutting down forests and clearing wild lands, and on that account he had introduced the amendment.

Mr. CLAY asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and decided in the negative—yeas 3, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Niles, Ruggles, and Wright—3.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing of Illinois, Ewing of Ohio, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, Kent, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Knight, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Norvell, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Robinson, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, and White—38.

Mr. NILES moved to amend the eighth section by inserting the words "by said parent."

Mr. BUCHANAN had no idea that such opposition would have been made to this section. He had consulted with western gentlemen before he offered his amendment to it, and he had thought it would meet their approbation. The bill, as it stood, confined the sales of the public lands to those who are in the West. He thought the people of the West would feel the paralyzing effects of the bill, should it pass in its present shape, although they express their willingness to make a sacrifice to diminish the surplus revenue. He was willing to reduce the revenue derived from the sales of the public lands to effect that object. But, when he was asked to vote for a bill which would cut off his own constituents from deriving any advantage from it, he could not agree to it. He was willing, at an early stage, to meet the feelings of gentlemen from the West; but now he was willing to let the section stand or fall upon its own merits, and if necessary, he was willing to put his vote against the adoption of this or any similar amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT remarked that his object in voting for a bill of this character, was to reduce the revenue, and to effect that end by confining the sales of public lands to actual settlers. He did not see why such a principle might not be incorporated in this bill. Was there any one present who admitted that the lands of the Government in market were now offered for sale below their intrinsic value? He would not vote for a proposition to raise the price, because he did not believe the lands were worth more than one dollar and twenty-five cents. But, if he believed in the opinion re-echoed in that body, he should feel it his duty to move to raise the price. He believed the minimum price of the Government was high enough, nor did he think that public policy would admit of its being raised. Entertaining this opinion, he would not admit that it was a privilege conferred on as citizen to give him an opportunity of purchasing the public land, unless he wanted to use it.

He believed it was a privilege when a man wanted a farm to cultivate, that he should have land at the lowest price. Mr. W. argued that it was not to be supposed that lands could be sold at the end of ten years, when the country would of course be very much improved in every respect, at the same price as at the present time, though, according to the argument of gentlemen, it would appear that such was to be the case. His judgment was this, that the interests of the whole Union, and of those who live where the lands are located, required that Congress should put them into their hands at as low a rate as reason would dictate, and as rapidly as the growth of the country would permit. But when a sort of pre-emption right was opened to a man, unaccompanied with a settlement, that was not the way to promote a settlement of the lands. Mr. W. concluded with saying, that he hoped the vote might be reconsidered, for he had no wish that it should be stricken out, but only modified so as to make it acceptable to the Senate.

Mr. BUCHANAN and Mr. WHITE made a few remarks in reply to Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. HUBBARD thought the section should be amended in some particulars, and that authority should be given to the States to tax the public lands in which they lie. He had so voted in the case of Arkansas and Michigan.

Mr. NORVELL moved to amend the second section of the substitute proposed by Mr. White, by adding to the end of the same the words: "And, Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed contrary to the several acts granting lands for the purposes of education, the salt springs, or for any other purpose provided for under the existing laws of the United States."

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. WEBSTER here moved an adjournment: rejected—yeas 21, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Geo. Knight, Moore, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Spence, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall, and Webster—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Black, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Walker, White, and Wright—25.

Mr. RUGGLES moved to amend the second section, by providing that every purchaser shall be required to take the quantity purchased by him in not more than four different subdivisions, nor in less subdivisions than a 16th of a section.

After a debate, Mr. CLAY moved an adjournment, which was negatived—yeas 22, nays 24.

The question was taken on Mr. RUGGLES'S amendment, and carried—yeas 24, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Buchanan, Clayton, Crittenden, Dana, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Morris, Niles, Page, Prentiss, Rives, Robbins, Ruggles, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, and White—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Nicholas, Norvell, Robinson, Sevier, Tipton, Walker and Wright—17.

Mr. DAVIS moved to amend the bill, by providing that no pre-emption shall be granted where the value of the land exceeds five lands, and that the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall take measures to ascertain the value.

The motion was rejected—yeas 16, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Spence, Swift, Tomlinson, and Webster—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robbins, Ruggles, Sevier, Tipton, Walker, Wall, White, and Wright—22.

The question then recurred on Mr. WHITE'S motion to strike out all after the first section and insert a substitute, and it was decided in the negative; yeas 14, nays 29 as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Davis, Ewing of Illinois, Hendricks, Kent, Moore, Norvell, Preston, Robinson, Sevier, Walker, Webster, and White—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Ohio, Fulton, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Knight, Linn, Lyon, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Prentiss, Rives, Robbins, Ruggles, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall and Wright—29.

On motion of Mr. LINN,
The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

FRIDAY, February 3, 1837.

The following resolution, reported yesterday by Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Commerce, was taken up, and concurred in:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to report to the House of Representatives, at their next session, upon the propriety of establishing a system of telegraphs for the United States.

Mr. W. B. SHEPARD, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a resolution proposing to set apart Wednesday and Thursday, the 15th and 16th of February, from and after the hour of 12 o'clock on each day, for the purpose of considering bills relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. EVERETT hoped the gentleman would name some other day than Wednesday, as on that day it was Mr. E's intention, with the leave of the House, to call up the "bill to provide for the security and protection of the emigrant and other Indians west of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas." He suggested Thursday and Friday, the 16th and 17th.

Mr. SHEPARD had no objection to the alteration, and he moved a modification to that effect, but it was disagreed to by the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Virginia, moved to amend the resolution by including the "bill to extend the provision of an act entitled 'An act supplementary to the act for the relief of certain surviving officers and soldier of the revolution,' approved 7th of June, 1832."

Mr. WARDWELL moved to amend the amendment, by including all the bills reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions: lost.

The amendment of Mr. JOHNSON was also disagreed to, and the original resolution non-concurred in.

Mr. TALLAFERRO, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of John Krepps: read twice and committed to the same Committee of the Whole to which had been committed the bill for the relief of John W. Oliver.

Mr. JARVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the following resolution, which was concurred in:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of instituting an examination of George's Bank, for the purpose of ascertaining the practicability of forming an artificial island upon it, to lessen the perils arising from that most dangerous shoal to every vessel approaching the eastern coast of the United States from foreign countries, and to vessels of the United States engaged in the coasting trade between the eastern and southern States.

Mr. BOND, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of James P. Rice: read twice and committed.

Mr. PEARCE of Rhode Island, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the petition of John Kern, deputy collector, and John D. George, deputy naval officer, of the port of Philadelphia, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the memorial of John Kern, and John D. George, be referred to the First Comptroller of the Treasury to be by him transmitted to the collector of the port of Philadelphia, who is hereby directed to settle the claim of said Kern and George, for services as clerks, by them performed in carrying into effect the 18th section of the tariff act of July, 14th, 1832, according to agreement.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio desired to know something about this resolution before he could vote for it.

Mr. PEARCE explained that an appropriation had been made, for the payment of clerk hire, to carry into effect the tariff act of 1832. The service had been performed by the deputy collector and deputy naval officer, after office hours; but the collector had construed the law in such manner that they could not procure their pay, and this resolution was for the purpose of providing that they should be paid.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina was opposed to paying out money in this way. They were not authorized to make appropriations unless by bill or joint resolution; and he hoped this resolution would not pass.

Mr. PEARCE then went into a full explanation of the manner in which the service had been performed, stating, at the same time, that it had been performed better by these clerks than it could have been by others; yet if other clerks had performed the service there would have been no question as to the propriety of paying them.

Mr. CAMBRELENG suggested that the most appropriate course would be to move to discharge the committee from the subject, and refer it to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PEARCE said the subject had been before the Secretary, and the only question was as to the construction of the law. It was in consequence of the construction the collector had put upon the law, that the money was refused to be paid. He had done what he considered to be his duty in reporting the resolution; but if the House refused to adopt the report, he had nothing to say.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina said it appeared that the Secretary doubted whether he had the power to pay this money, and the passage of this resolution was to relieve him of the responsibility of the matter. He contended the House had not the power to direct the Secretary to pay this money.

Mr. HARPER contended that these men ought to be paid, inasmuch as the money had been appropriated for the purpose of paying this clerk hire; and they had performed the service, and that, too, out of office hours.

Mr. PEARCE then moved the following as a substitute for the original resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the same, with the report of the committee, be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WILLIAMS of N. C. then moved to lay the whole subject on the table. Lost.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON was opposed to allowing claims of this kind. If they admitted this claim there would innumerable claims come before them of a similar nature.

Mr. HOAR could not see the propriety of referring this subject to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PEARCE again urged upon the House the propriety and justice of allowing this claim. There was no doubt of their having performed the service, and that too better than it could have been done by strange clerks.

Mr. HOAR moved to amend the substitute by striking out that part of it which referred the report of the committee to the Secretary of the Treasury; which was agreed to, yeas 75, noes not counted.

Mr. HARPER then moved to amend the resolution by referring the claim to the Secretary of the Treasury for settlement.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON moved to refer the whole subject to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. HARPER could not see the propriety of referring this subject to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. HARDIN was opposed to allowing these claims, as there would be no end to them if once admitted. He considered the Government had the right to have the whole time of the clerks in its employ. Of late years, the clerks had fixed their own hours; they would go to their offices at ten o'clock, and perhaps leave them by two; but if any thing was done by them out of what they called their office hours, they must ask for extra pay! The House had had various applications of this kind, but had always refused to grant them; and he hoped they always would do so.

Mr. REED believed this claim to be just, and he would be pleased to see the committee bring in a bill for the relief of those individuals. This would be the proper course, and he thought the House should take the responsibility of paying these individuals, without sending it to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BOON thought if gentlemen were about to establish the principle that the Government should require the whole of the time of its officers, they should begin at home, and not permit members of the House, while they were getting their eight dollars per day, receiving compensation for services rendered out of the House. It was just as proper that this restriction should be placed upon members of that House, as upon clerks in the departments.

Mr. LANE said he fully concurred in the opinion expressed by the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts. (Mr. Reed.) That he rose to correct one observation which fell from his friend on this point from Kentucky. (Mr. Hardin.) which, in his opinion, did great injustice to the clerks in the departments. He had been called upon to do business in the different departments during the present session, and had called at all hours, from 9 to 12, and lately from 9 to 11; that he had at all times found them in their offices, zealously and faithfully despatching every duty, carrying into effect what he considered a very severe law of the last session.

Mr. HARDIN briefly replied to the gentlemen from Indiana, (Mr. Boone and Mr. Lane.)

Mr. PEARCE denied that this was a claim for extra pay or extra services. He had not advocated it upon that principle. It was a claim for services which would have been paid if other individuals had performed them, and the moneys was already appropriated in anticipation for the payment of these services. Butly the construction put upon the law by the collector, he withheld the money.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON then read the law on the subject, and Mr. HARPER made some further remarks in support of the claim, when

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio moved that the House proceed to the orders of the day, which was agreed to.

Mr. REED, by the leave of the House, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of building six sloops of war of the second class.

Mr. PHILLIPS asked leave of the House to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the House of the progress which has been made in the arrangements for the surveying and exploring expedition authorized at the last session of Congress, and of the objects and measures to which said expedition is to be devoted.

Mr. HALL of Maine objecting,

Mr. PHILLIPS moved a suspension of the rule for this purpose; which was agreed to.

Mr. MASON of Ohio moved the following amendment, which Mr. PHILLIPS accepted as a modification:

"And also of the size and the names of the vessels designated by the Department to be employed in the exploring expedition; with the number of the officers and men therein; together with a statement of the expenditures already incurred in fitting out the expedition, and an estimate of the further expenditures which will be necessary until its successful termination, on the plan now projected."

Mr. ROBERTSON then moved the following amendment. Strike out all after the word resolved, and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to this House the number of vessels designed, and fitted out, or now fitting out, for the exploring expedition to the Pacific and South Seas; the class to which they respectively belong; the cost already incurred, and that which is estimated will be incurred, in completing their equipment; the time when the expedition may be expected to sail, and its probable annual cost afterwards; also whether either of the said vessels, or any other public vessel, has been put in requisition for the conveyance of General Santa Anna to Mexico, or elsewhere; and, if so, the authority under which such requisition has been made; with all orders to and from the Department relative thereto."

Mr. PHILLIPS hoped this amendment would not prevail. The resolution, as modified, called for all the information desired in relation to the south sea expedition, therefore he could not see the necessity for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina, called for the yeas and nays, on the proposed amendment, which were not ordered; and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MERCER then submitted an amendment calling on the Secretary for a list of the officers of the navy, with the dates of their respective commissions, and the number of years each had been at sea, since the year 1814.

Mr. JARVIS suggested that it would be more proper to move this as a separate resolution. The information required by it could not be obtained for a considerable time, and would prevent an early answer being made to the original resolution. After a few words from Mr. MERCER, his amendment was disagreed to. The resolution as modified was then agreed to.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War ad interim, transmitting a report of the survey of James River, made during the last session of Congress; which, on motion of Mr. SUTHERLAND, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House another communication from the same, transmitting a report of the survey of the harbor of Havre de Grace, which, on motion of Mr. SUTHERLAND, was similarly referred.

The House then passed to the orders of the day.

The bill to place the name of Dr. John P. Briggs on the navy pension fund, was read the third time and passed.

The motion to reconsider the vote of the House rejecting the "bill for the relief of Ebenezer Breed" was decided in the negative.

The House then took up the "joint resolution granting a pension to Mrs. Deacatur," the question being on its third reading.

Mr. JARVIS moved to commit it to the Committee on Naval Affairs: which motion, after some remarks from Messrs. JARVIS, WASHINGTON, PARKER, CAMBRELENG, REED, CRAIG, CHAMBERS of Kentucky, HARPER, and GREENELL, was disagreed to—yeas 55, noes 71.

The resolution was then further discussed by Messrs. PATTON, JARVIS, REED, PEARCE of Rhode Island, WASHINGTON, HOWARD, PARKER, MANN of New York, CAMBRELENG, and UNDERWOOD.

Mr. REED asked for the yeas and nays on the engrossment of the resolution; which were ordered, and were, yeas 119, nays 52, and it was ordered to be read a third time this day.

Subsequently the resolution was read a third time and passed.

The "bill for the relief of David Kilbourne," was then taken up.

This bill had passed the committee and was on its engrossment. The case was a well known one, had been for several years before Congress, and been more than once rejected, and repeatedly set aside. Kilbourne alleges that he was a Canadian spy, and after much suffering, succeeded in escaping, with the total loss of his property by confiscation.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

Mr. HOWELL called for the reading of the bill and report, which was ordered.

After some remarks by Mr. WARDWELL, the question was taken and decided in the affirmative—yeas 53, nays 65.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in compliance with a resolution of the House of the 30th ult. informing the House of the progress made in the survey of the coast from the Rigolets to Mobile Point; which, on motion of Mr. JARVIS, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. VINTON,
The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

SATURDAY, February 4, 1837.

Mr. CLAY presented a memorial from sundry authors of the United States, complaining of the existing laws in relation to copy rights, and praying that the same may be revised and amended; and moved to refer it to the select committee appointed to consider the memorial of the authors of Great Britain on the same subject.

After some remarks from Messrs. CLAY and PRESTON, the reference was ordered.

Mr. CLAY then moved that an additional member be added to the same committee, to be appointed by the Chair; which being agreed to, Mr. RUGGLES was appointed.

Mr. NORVELL presented the petition of sundry citizens of Michigan, praying for appropriations for internal improvements; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TIPTON presented a memorial and joint resolution of the Legislature of Indiana, on the subject of internal improvements: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. LINN presented a memorial from sundry citizens of Missouri, on the subject of spoliation on American commerce by the French prior to the year 1800; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRIS presented a memorial from a citizen of Cleveland, Ohio, setting forth that for several years past there has been a continued rising of the waters of Lake Erie, and a consequent washing away of the southern shore of said lake, which he (the memorialist) attributes to the obstruction caused by the dam constructed at Black Rock for the purpose of making a harbor. The petitioner prays that the Government will cause the same to be removed: referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the select committee appointed to consider and report on the mode of examining and counting the votes for President and Vice President, &c. and whether any votes have been given by persons not competent under the constitution, made a special report thereon, which was read.

The report states that in some instances not more than four or five electors have been chosen in some of the States, who are officers of General Government, (deputy postmasters,) and that such votes are, in the opinion of the committee, not in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution; but at the same time the few votes thus given will not vary the result of the election, as it was not contemplated by any one that the appointment of one ineligible elector would vitiate the vote of his State. The report concludes with recommending the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the two Houses shall assemble in the chamber of the House of Representatives on Wednesday next at 12 o'clock, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that one person be appointed a teller on the part of the Senate, and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote, and the persons elected, to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President of the United States; and, together with a list of votes, be entered on the journals of the two Houses.

Resolved, That in relation to the votes of Michigan, if the counting or omitting to count them shall not essentially change the result of the election, they shall be reported by the President of the Senate in the following manner: "Were the votes of Michigan to be counted, the result would be for A. B. for President of the United States ——— votes. If not counted, for A. B. for President of the United States ——— votes. But in either event A. B. is elected President of the United States." And in the same manner for Vice President.

Mr. NORVELL arose, and said that the resolutions were joint resolutions. The first prescribed the usual manner in which the two Houses assembled together on the second Wednesday in February, for the purpose of counting the votes for President and Vice President of the United States. To this, of course, he had no objection. The second resolution in relation to the votes of Michigan, declared, in substance, that if they were not essential to the election of a President they should be announced, but need not be received as good. Their reception, then, as sound votes, depended upon a contingency which it was known would not happen. He called for a division of the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, in order that he and his colleague might have an opportunity of recording their votes against the second resolution. Michigan, when the people of that State gave their votes for Presidential electors, was a sovereign State, acknowledged to be such by an act of the Congress of the United States. She was now, before her electoral votes were to be counted, a sovereign State of this Union, acknowledged to be such by another act of the Congress of the United States. He had, therefore, risen to enter his most solemn protest, in behalf of the people of Michigan, against any decision of this body, or of Congress, which would, even by implication, have the effect of preventing their electoral votes from being counted for President and Vice President of the United States; and upon the motion to adopt the second resolution, he requested that the yeas and nays might be taken.

Mr. GRUNDY observed that the committee were unanimous for reporting the second resolution objected to by the gentleman from Michigan. The same course had been pursued with regard to the State of Missouri, and under the like circumstances; and when Senators recollected that this was the very place where the rock lies which may destroy this Government, they would perceive that the committee had good reasons for recommending the resolution objected to. Suppose (said Mr. G.) the two Houses should differ and separate, and suppose the House should refuse to send for the Senate again; where will be your President or Vice President? Though he had been one of the most anxious for the admission of Michigan, yet he thought it better, under the circumstances, that her vote should not be counted, except in the way provided for by the second resolution. To count the vote could do no good, inasmuch as it would not vary the result, and it might do harm. No man was more anxious than he was for the admission of Michigan, yet he must express the opinion that she was not a State of this Union when she gave her vote.

Mr. NORVELL said, that if this Union should ever receive a shock, as intimated by the Senator from Tennessee, it would arise from the practice of injustice by this Government towards one or more of the States of the confederacy, and not from the right decision of such questions as the one now pending. The reception of the votes of a State entitled to vote for the Chief Magistrate of the nation, by whom she, as well as the other States, was to be governed, could never endanger the Union. The result of the late election, he knew, could not be varied by the votes of Michigan; and less hazard would, therefore, be encountered at this time in properly deciding the question upon receiving the votes of States in similar circumstances with Michigan, than at any other time. The case of Missouri, quoted by the Senator from Tennessee in support of the second resolution, was not, upon this point, a case analogous to that of Michigan. Missouri was a State when her electors were chosen, but she was not a State of the Union when the two Houses of Congress assembled to count the electoral votes for President and Vice President. She was not admitted until some months afterwards; but the State of Indiana did present a precisely analogous case to that of Michigan. Indiana, when her electors were chosen, had formed her Constitution and State Government; but she was not admitted into the Union until some time in the succeeding December. She became, however, a member of the Union, before the electoral votes were counted. When the two Houses assembled, and, in counting the votes, came to those of Indiana, objection was made to their reception. The two Houses separated. Some discussion arose in both on the subject; but, before the point was directly decided by either, a message was sent by the House of Representatives to the Senate, that they were ready to proceed in the count. When they came together again, the votes of Indiana were counted, and recorded among the electoral votes of the other States. Such is exactly the situation of Michigan. But he had not risen to provoke debate. His object was simply to protest against the principle of the second resolution reported by the Senator from Tennessee, and to ask for himself and his colleague the poor privilege of recording their names against it. He did not know that they would be sustained by the vote of any other Senator present.

Mr. CLAY said that the committee had followed exactly the course adopted in the case of Missouri; and the Senators from Michigan would see that there was to be no exclusion of their votes, though no use might be made of them. Whether they were counted or not, the result would be the same. Now, when gentlemen reflected for a moment upon the operations of this Government, the difficulties to be settled, the important questions pending, and especially the one as to the election of a Chief Magistrate, they would see at once the necessity of avoiding doing any thing which would have the effect of creating excitement, or throwing any difficulty in the way at this particular juncture, when they were about to decide on so very important a question as would have to be disposed of on Wednesday next.

With regard, then, to what the Senator from Michigan (Mr. Norvell) had said as to Michigan being similarly situated to Missouri and Indiana, when they were admitted into the Union, and yet they were permitted to vote: he could not agree with him. The case of Michigan was not exactly that of Missouri, nor that of Indiana. The act of Congress passed admitted her on certain conditions, and, having accepted those conditions, she became a State, and performed all her functions as a State, and had given her votes for President and Vice President; and but for the formality of this resolution, which was deemed necessary by the committee, she was put upon precisely the same footing as the States which had been mentioned. Whilst, then, he admitted there was some slight difference between the case of Michigan and that of Missouri and of Indiana, he could not admit that Michigan should vote, except in the manner pointed out in the resolution; for he thought, under all the circumstances connected with this matter, it would be better to take the course recommended by the committee.

Mr. CALHOUN remarked, that notwithstanding what was said by gentlemen to the contrary, during the debate on the admission of Michigan, they would now see that she was a State, de facto, at the time she formed her Constitution. Now, if they applied the reason of that case to this, what was the result? Michigan was not a State in this Union when her Senators were elected, nor when she voted for President and Vice President. The case was really a clear one, and any reason which would exclude these votes, ought to have excluded her Senators from taking their seats on this floor. He did not believe that doubtful questions of this kind should be waived, and this question should be settled at once. He should, therefore, feel himself bound to vote against the resolution.

Mr. LYON asked what course the committee would have recommended in case the vote of Michigan had varied the result. Would Michigan in such case be deprived of her vote? Mr. L. referred to the vote of Indiana which, under similar circumstances, had been counted, and contended that Michigan was as much entitled to count her vote as was the State of Indiana. He thought the Senate would not make so unjust a discrimination between the two States as the resolution contemplated, and he would unite with his colleague (Mr. Norvell) in protesting against it.

Mr. GRUNDY replied that the gentleman could not expect him to answer a question which the wisest of their predecessors had purposely left undetermined. What might be done under the circumstances adverted to by the Senator from Michigan, should they ever occur, the wisdom of the day must decide.

Mr. PRESTON concurred in all the views taken by his colleague, in regard to this question. He confessed his inability to perceive any difference between admitting the Senators to take their seats in that body, and admitting Michigan to vote as the other States of the Union would vote. Looking at the matter in very point of view, he was willing that she should be allowed to vote.

After a few words from Messrs. WEBSTER, GRUNDY, and CLAY,

The question was here taken, and the first resolution reported by the committee was adopted without division; and the second was adopted—yeas 34, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Dana, Davis, Ewing of Illinois, Ewing of Ohio, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, Kent, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Knight, Linn, Moore, Nicholas, Page, Prentiss, Rives, Robbins, Robinson, Sevier, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, and Wright—34.

YAYS—Messrs. Calhoun, Fulton, Lyon, Morris, Niles, Norvell, Preston, Walker, and Wall—9.

Mr. HUBBARD offered the following resolutions, which were considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing the name of Henry Stevens, of Windsor, in Vermont, on the list of annuitants under the act of June 7, 1832.

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to communicate to the Senate copies of all such manuscript papers now on file in his Department, having any relation to the claim of Richard W. Meade, originally made against the Government of Spain, except those papers which have been heretofore printed by order of either House of Congress upon the subject of this claim.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported the following bills; which were severally read, and ordered to a second reading:

A bill giving the assent of Congress to the revocation of that portion of the ordinance of the several States therein mentioned, which exempts from taxation for five years, all lands sold by the United States;

A bill to establish two additional land offices in the Territory of Wisconsin, west of the Mississippi river; and

A bill to amend the act of July 2, 1836, for the laying off of certain towns in Wisconsin.

On motion of Mr. WALKER, the Committee on Public Lands, was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the trustees of the University of Norwich, praying for a grant of land.

Mr. TOMLINSON, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a bill to establish a pension agency at Montpelier, Vermont; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. RIVES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Col. Anthony Gale; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. MORRIS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill providing for the appointment of an additional Attorney for the Territory of Wisconsin; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

The following bills from the House were severally read twice and referred:

A bill for the relief of Abigail Appleton;

A bill authorising the Secretary of the Navy to place the name of Doctor John T. Briggs on the navy roll;

A bill to increase the pension of Hanson Hamlin;

A bill to amend the act to establish branches of the United States Mint, passed 3d March, 1836;

A bill respecting discriminating duties upon Dutch and Belgian vessels and their cargoes;

A joint resolution granting a pension to Susan Decatur, widow of Commodore Stephen Decatur; and

A bill for the relief of David Kilburn.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, was taken up as the special order, the question pending was on the motion of Mr. WALKER to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. WALKER renewed his motion to recommit the bill, and stated that his object was to have it so modified as to meet the views of every gentleman, if possible.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. CALHOUN said he could see no possible good whatever to be derived from recommitting the bill. It was, indeed, quite apparent that a large portion of the Senate were of the impression that nothing ought to be done on the subject. The difficulties connected with the bill were totally irreconcilable; and he was among those who believed it to be radically wrong, and that the Senator could not modify it in any shape that would render it expedient that it should pass. He would state briefly some of the general objections he had to the bill. Such were the magnitude and number of the objections entertained by gentlemen all round, that it was really not worth while to proceed any further with it. The object of the bill, as stated by the chairman of the committee from which it was reported, was to restrict the sales of the public lands, in order to put an end to speculation, and to diminish the revenue derived from that source. Now, all that was very good, and sounded well to the ear. But, really, so many were the means of those in power by which they might fleece the community, that it was enough almost to make every lover of his country despair of it. Well, then, if he was not very much mistaken, the bill so far from repressing speculation, would lead to the greatest speculation this continent had ever witnessed. The speculation, which a particular state of things had given rise to, had been produced by those in power. They had profited by that state of things, and should this bill be passed it would only consummate their wishes. The Senate had been told by the gentleman from Mississippi, (Mr. Walker,) that as large a territory as any State in the Union had, within a few years, fallen into the hands of speculators; and the Senator from Georgia, (Mr. King,) had said that twenty-eight or thirty millions of dollars worth of the public lands were now in the hands of speculators. What had produced all this speculation? Why, nothing but the state of the currency: the enormous increase of paper money. What had brought about that state of things? Those who were now in power. They began their experiment in 1833, and they were told what would be the result of it. And just what they were told had happened. The authors were those very men in power who now came forward and attempted to procure a remedy for the evils existing. Was it not notorious that the President of the United States himself had been connected with the purchase of public lands? Yes, the "experiment" (and Mr. C. delighted in the word) was the cause of speculation in public lands, and if this bill should not be passed, speculations could not go on, and the price of the public lands must consequently be reduced. He contended that every man could not but see that it would be utter ruin to those who had borrowed money to speculate in lands, if the system was not to go on.

The bill contained one particularly obnoxious provision, and that was that no man could purchase lands, unless he was provided with a license. Odious as he held a license on the liberty of the press to be, he regarded this feature of the measure as even worse. What! a freeman not to be permitted to purchase, without a license, the public domain! He would say that nothing on the face of God's earth would induce him to give a vote which would place a Carolinian in such a condition, as men were liable to be under such circumstances. We were living under a dynasty, who fancy they have a right to use all the offices, and all the money and all the means under their control for their own benefit. Pass the bill, and by the year 1842, there would be 100,000 voters depending upon the patronage and wishes of those in power. Could any thing be more odious? Was a license on the press more odious?

The fact was, the Senate had already spent too much time on the bill, and he hoped they would not spend another moment. Putting out of view the political consequences which would result from passing it, what, he would ask, was to be its monetary effect? The Senator from New York (Mr. Wright) had stated that he was averse to raising the price of the lands. Now, he (Mr. C.) would inquire whether a man would not rather, at once, give two dollars an acre for land, and have no trouble about it, than give one dollar and twenty-five cents, besides being subjected to much trouble and incumbrance? Certainly he would.

The individual who purchased of the holder was decidedly better off than he. Could not any man see what would be the effect of passing the bill? It would lead, as he had said before, to enormous speculations. He maintained that the lands, on an average, were worth three dollars per acre; and he observed, that if no legislation were had on the subject, by the end of six or seven months speculation would cease. The state of things at present existing were artificial, and could not continue. If, however, it was deemed proper to legislate at all, the first and most obvious course for the Senate to adopt was to raise the price of the public lands. The only objection to that was, that it would benefit those who had already purchased. But, as to their legislating in that way, he had no fear. No, it would be unpopular; those who had purchased must be secured. The land offices would have to be closed. Whichever course, then, was adopted, would be liable to some objections. The latter course he should prefer of the two, as it was less objectionable.

He wished to put the public lands upon some fair and fixed condition, which should give to the United States a reasonable revenue. Perhaps the best plan would be to transfer the whole to the new States, on their agreeing to give ten per cent. and with certain limitations, for their good as well as our own. He did not know that any thing could be done on the subject now; but, he repeated, he would rather make a cession of the lands at once upon liberal terms, than allow the Government to be further troubled concerning them.

Entertaining these views, he hoped the subject would be permitted to sleep, or that the Senate should come to a direct vote, or that the bill should be laid on the table.

The question was then taken on the recommitment of the bill, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 23, nays 20, as follows:

YEA—Messrs. Benton, Black, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Walker, and Wright—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, Knight, Morris, Prentiss, Preston, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, and White—20.

On motion,

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SATURDAY, Feb. 4, 1837.

Mr. GARLAND of Virginia, by leave of the House, from the select committee to investigate abuses in the Executive Departments, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the chairman be directed to ask the House of Representatives for an order to print so many copies of the journal of the committee as they may think proper to order for the use of the members, to be printed and laid on their tables, with their report, not exceeding 1030 copies.

Mr. G. explained that this resolution was introduced with a view to have the journal of the committee printed and kept in possession of the committee, to be laid before the House at the same time they made their report. If this was not done it would take some time to have the journal printed after the report was made; consequently it would delay the action of the House, as it might be some days after the report was made before this journal could be printed and laid upon the tables of members.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON inquired what number of copies the resolution proposed to print.

Mr. GARLAND replied that it was not stated on the face of the resolution; but it was the intention of the committee that the usual number should be printed.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON then moved an amendment, that the number to be printed should not exceed 1030; which was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was then adopted.

The House then resumed the consideration of the unfinished business, being the resolution reported by Mr. D. J. PEARCE, from the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Resolved, That the memorial of John Kern, and John D. George, be referred to the First Comptroller of the Treasury, to be by him transmitted to the collector of the port of Philadelphia, who is hereby directed to settle the claim of said Kern and George, for services as clerks, by them performed in carrying into effect the 18th section of the tariff act of July 14, 1832, according to agreement.

Mr. PEARCE had moved the following as a substitute for the original resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and the same, with the report of the committee, be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury for settlement.

The question pending was the motion of Mr. CAVE JOHNSON to refer the whole subject to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON referred to the law of 1834, showing that under its provisions the officers in question were bound to give their whole time to their duties without any extra compensation. The reason of the law was obvious, being to prevent persons from neglecting the public business during office hours, for the purpose of getting extra compensation for doing the work out of office hours.

Mr. CAMBRELENG hoped no more time would be consumed upon it, but that it would be referred, as recommended by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUTHERLAND remarked, they had already wasted more money in discussing it, than the whole subject was worth. He contended that it was unnecessary to send it now to any committee of the House since all the facts had been fully elicited.

Mr. McKAY could not see the propriety of referring it to the Secretary of the Treasury, for he had already expressed his opinion of the law, that it did not authorize the payment to be made by him, and the House could not enlarge the powers of a law by a simple resolution. He would prefer referring it back to the Committee on Commerce, with instructions to report a bill embracing the claim.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, concurred with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that it was unnecessary now to send this subject to a committee, and for the reason stated by that gentleman.

The motion to refer it to the Committee of Claims was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina then moved to refer the subject to the Committee on Commerce, with instructions to report a bill for the relief of the claimants: lost.

The amendment of Mr. PEARCE was then put, and agreed to, 63 to 58.

Mr. CAMBRELENG moved a reconsideration of the last vote, as he wished to move to strike out the words "for settlement."

Mr. SUTHERLAND and Mr. PEARCE said there would be no objection to strike out these words, and, Mr. E. WHITTLESEY suggested that the amendment be agreed to by general consent.

Mr. McKAY moved to lay the whole subject on the table; which was agreed to—ayes 63, noes 62.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported some amendments to the civil and diplomatic bill; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. YELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill to establish an additional land district in the State of Arkansas, (composed of the counties of Scott, Crawford, Johnson and Pope; the land office to be established at the county seat in Johnson county;) which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS, the Committee on the Judiciary had leave to sit during the sessions of the House, to prosecute the investigation of certain charges of official misconduct preferred against Judge Thruston, one of the judges of the United States Circuit Court, for the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. SUTHERLAND, the reports and papers in relation to the surveys of the harbors of Havre de Grace, Maryland, and Richmond, Virginia, were ordered to be printed.

HARBORS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors therein mentioned, for the year 1837: read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARRISON of Missouri, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported Senate bill, with sundry amendments, to authorize the Washington county (Mo.) Turnpike company to construct a road through the public lands. The amendments were all concurred in, and the bill, as amended, ordered to be read a third time on Monday.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Robert Keyworth: read twice and committed.

Mr. HARPER, from the select committee on the subject of patents and the patent laws, reported a bill for the relief of John J. Roane: read twice and committed.

At the suggestions of Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio, and Mr. HOWARD, the House, by general consent, took up the bill on its third reading, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled an act to establish branches of the mint of the United States," passed 3d March, 1835;" and it was read the third time and passed.

Also, the bill entitled, "An act respecting discriminating duties on Dutch and Belgian vessels, and their cargoes," on its third reading was taken up, and a verbal amendment having been made thereto by general consent, (on motion of Mr. ADAMS,) was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. GARLAND of La. by general consent, the "bill to extend the limits of the port of New Orleans," was read the third time and passed.

The House then passed to the private orders.

On motion of Mr. OWENS, the Committee of Ways and Means were discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of G. B. Lamar, praying for the modification of the tariff, to allow him to export, free of duty, materials for iron steamboat, &c.; and the same was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion of Mr. BOON, the Committee on Public Lands were discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Moses Pierre, praying compensation for services and sufferings from the year 1806 to 1821; and the memorial was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. E. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of William Bonsell, praying remuneration for property lost during the last war with Great Britain, reported the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the papers of William P. Barnett, and that the same be referred to the Third Auditor, under the act of January 18, 1837.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the memorial of Thomas Mullikin and Thos. Kirkpatrick, executors of James Roddey; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BOND, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the petitions of Angelica Gilbert and Timothy Shay, praying relief; which were severally ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. LEA, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of Ab'm Boyce, A. Blakely, and William Jones, severally praying for increase of pensions; and the petitions were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JANES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made unfavorable reports on the petitions of Mary Kennedy, and Mary, widow of E. Duncomb; which were severally ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Wm. Phelps, praying compensation for revolutionary services; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CRANE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, made an unfavorable report on the memorial of W. R. Custis, devisee of Lieut. Thos.

Custis; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CHAMBERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Simon Burton, jr.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Committee for the District of Columbia were discharged from the consideration of the memorial of Elizabeth Tims, and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion of Mr. FRY, Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of William Andrews, and that the same do lie upon the table.

"Bill for the relief of David Kilbourn," on its third reading.

After some remarks by Messrs. HARDIN, STORER, WARDWELL, HOAR, PARKER, and BRIGGS,

Mr. REYNOLDS moved the previous question, which was seconded by the House, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. HARDIN called for the yeas and nays on the main question, which were ordered, and were—yeas 83, nays 73.

So the bill was passed.

The House then took up the bill for the relief of S. Morris Wain, on its engrossment.

After some remarks by Messrs. INGERSOLL, McKIM, JARVIS, LAWRENCE, GIDEON, LEE, HARPER, HARDIN, CAMBRELENG, PARKER, and PHILLIPS,

Mr. ROBERTSON moved to recommit the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means, with instructions to report a general bill, regulating the principles on which, in their opinion, it would be just and expedient to remit duties on merchandise,

After some further remarks by Messrs. CAMBRELENG, PARKER, LAWRENCE, PEARCE of Rhode Island, McKIM, PHILLIPS and HARPER,

Mr. JARVIS moved the previous question, and on the votes being taken there was no quorum found voting.

Mr. McKENNAN moved an adjournment, but withdrew it at the request of

Mr. THOMAS, who, from the Joint Committee appointed to report as to the mode of proceeding in counting the votes for President and Vice President, made a report; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McKENNAN then renewed his motion to adjourn, but withdrew it at the request of Mr. PEYTON, who made a statement to the House in relation to a difficulty which had occurred in the room of the select committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the Executive Departments.

Mr. PEYTON commenced by saying that the House would bear him witness, that he had never heretofore asked a similar indulgence; nor ever annoyed it with any thing personal to himself that had been said of him out of doors, nor was it on his own account, individually, that he had at that time asked the indulgence that had been extended to him by the courtesy of the House; but he thought it was due to the committee of which he was a member, and due also to that House of which he was a member, to correct a statement which had appeared in the official paper of that morning. The part of the article to which he referred, he would read. Mr. P. accordingly read the following portion of an extract which appeared in the Globe of Saturday, from the New York American:

"If this statement be true, or even approach the truth, it is evident that a gross outrage was committed by Mr. Peyton towards a witness summoned to testify before the committee, and therefore under its protection; and an act of such disrespect to the committee itself, as should have subjected Mr. Peyton to its severest censure."

Now, as a full and satisfactory response to that statement, it seemed only necessary to state to the House what took place in the committee upon that occasion. His friend from Ohio, (Mr. Hamer,) one of the members of the committee, a gentleman differing with him in politics, moved a resolution of censure upon Mr. Whitney, for what he did in insulting Mr. P. which resolution was adopted by the unanimous vote of the committee. The committee, just to itself, had also authorized him to publish that resolution, with what followed on the journal, and which, as transcribed, he had the right to lay before the House, by permission of the committee. The witness, Mr. Whitney, after having been sent out, was brought in, the resolution read to him, his answer to the interrogatory propounded to him returned; he made an apology for having insulted the committee, took back his answer, tore it up in presence of the committee, and then and there proceeded, in a quiet manner, to answer the next question propounded to him. This would show whom it was that all the committee considered to be in the wrong in that transaction.

Perhaps, however, it might not be amiss for Mr. P. to state to the House the whole occurrence, as every gentleman upon that committee would, he had no doubt, substantially corroborate. He would first, however, remark that this matter has been mentioned in the committee since the publication of Mr. Whitney himself, and it has been unhesitatingly averred, and every gentleman present in the committee called upon to testify to the correctness of that statement, that every allegation made by Whitney was false in every particular, with the single exception of what related to the interrogatory and his answer.

Mr. P.'s friend from Virginia observed yesterday, in the presence of the committee, that, when the matter came up in the House, he should denounce the whole statement of Mr. Whitney as false, and call upon every gentleman present to say if it was not essentially false in every particular. Every member of the committee would bear witness to the fact that Mr. Whitney, while before the committee as a witness, had, up to the moment the occurrence referred to took place, been treated by Mr. P. with the courtesy due to a witness, and even to a gentleman; with as much courtesy as he could have extended to Chief Justice Marshall himself, had he been before the committee; and, he would frankly confess, it required no little exercise of philosophy, and patience, too, to extend that courtesy to him from the course of conduct he had pursued towards Mr. P. from the very first time he came into the room. Mr. P. had propounded to him, perhaps, some sixty questions, and out of that number he might have answered ten or a dozen, or less. His manner was, throughout, disrespectful in the extreme; for he threw down question after question in the most contemptuous manner, denouncing them as inquisitorial, and refused to answer them. Still, Mr. P. mindful that he was a witness before the committee, would not, and did not, insult him.

The witness, however, continued Mr. P. mistaking the feeling which prompted him to tolerate such a course, presumed at length too far. He (the witness) thought the threatening denunciation he had made in his "card," published in the official paper, wherein he demanded personal satisfaction of Mr. P. having passed unnoticed, that therefore, the assertion that he (Mr. P.) was shielding himself behind his constitutional privileges, was true; and, on the night the occurrence took place, Mr. P. having propounded to him the very question he had raised on that floor, Whitney then committed the gross insult which called down upon him the unanimous censure of the committee. The interrogatory Mr. P. propounded, and the answer of the witness were as follows:

Question. Did you receive any letter of recommendation from R. B. Taney, or did he in any manner countenance or encourage you in applying for the agency contemplated; or did he positively refuse to receive or countenance you in that capacity while he was at the head of the Treasury Department?

Answer. I decline answering this interrogatory; more particularly as the individual propounding it has asserted positively and publicly that the substance of the latter part of it is true, beginning with "or did, &c." therefore, being the party accused, I am not a proper witness. I think, in justice, that the individual who has made the allegation should be called to produce his proof.

Now, the committee had a right to call upon Whitney for proof in relation to that statement, though his testimony alone, whatever it might have been, would not have been sufficient; but Mr. P. would have permitted it to pass, since he did not choose to get into a personal altercation with such a man. He looked upon Whitney as shielded from insult by his character, as much as a mad dog would be, unless coming in personal collision with him. But, upon the occasion referred to, he accompanied that response with a scowl, an indignant frown, and a most insulting look at Mr. P. which, perhaps, no gentleman observed but himself. Well, even then Mr. P. tried to restrain himself, and he appealed to the chairman whether Whitney was to be permitted to insult him in that manner. He then turned towards Whitney himself, and, walking up to him, told him that though he had before said that Mr. P. had shielded himself under his constitutional privilege, yet that, if he dared to insult him (Mr. P.) to his face in that manner, he desired no constitutional privileges, for he would at once chastise him. He then dared Whitney to repeat his insult. Mr. P. was greatly excited at the time; and what man who had a soul fit to be saved, would not have been excited?

In Whitney's statement he alluded to Mr. P.'s having attempted to draw a weapon upon him. It was false. Mr. P. drew no weapon. Whitney himself put his hand in his pocket as if he had intended to draw a weapon, and Mr. P. it might be, then thrust his hand into his bosom, but drew no weapon. Every man there thought Whitney was armed; and his action seemed to show as if he was preparing for attack. Not knowing his purpose, Mr. P. put his hand into his bosom, and, at that moment, his friend from Virginia (Mr. Wise) interfered and insisted that he should say no more or do more; but so far from his having gone with Mr. P. to the witness, to attempt to intimidate him in the manner stated, by looking at him, it was totally false, as every member of the committee would testify.

Whitney was soon sent out; and Mr. Hamer moved a resolution of censure upon him for his insult to Mr. P.; and shortly after this he (W.) came in, apologized to the committee, took his seat, and was treated afterwards by Mr. P. as he had been before, with the most perfect respect. Mr. P. also apologized to the committee for having allowed himself momentarily to lose his temper.

Mr. P. said he thought this explanation, and this statement of facts, due to the committee, to its chairman, and to the House, whose committee they were. All he would add, in conclusion, was, that he should look upon any man as deserving the epithets betowed upon him in the official paper who would insult a witness under examination; but, at the same time, he envied not the wretch, who, callous and insensible to every feeling of honor, would not resent an insult, when assailed by a ruffian and browbeaten to his face. Mr. P. expressed his grateful acknowledgments to the House for the courtesy extended to him, and sent the resolution of the committee, and the proceedings in relation, to the Clerk's table, which, at his request, were read as follows:

"Mr. HAMER moved that the foregoing answer to the 15th question be returned to the witness, being no reply to the interrogatory, and disrespectful to a member of the committee.

"The witness being called in, the chairman informed him of the decision of the committee, and returned him his answer. The witness assured the chairman that if he had been in any manner disrespectful to the committee, he very much regretted it, and apologized for it."

Mr. WISE, having also obtained leave to address the House, commenced by stating that he had not asked the special indulgence so much in behalf of himself personally, as in behalf of the committee of which he was a member. The proceedings of the committee had been, he said, misrepresented, and most wofully belied, by that most infamous wretch. When Whitney first appeared before it, Mr. W. saw, or thought he saw, upon his very first appearance, what his examination might result in. Mr. W. thought he discovered that Whitney was disposed to experiment upon him and his honorable friend from Tennessee. He had felt his way in the Globe newspaper. He had tried their patience there, and had endeavored to enlist a hireling press to sustain him in his false and insulting allegations. They had both failed to notice him; they had both refused to recognise him as a gentleman in any respect whatever. His manner, too, when he came before the committee, was clearly, to Mr. W.'s mind, that of a supercilious, contumacious, contemptuous witness. He would write his answers at the table where the committee were sitting, and would then fold his arms, cock up his legs, and cast his glances towards Mr. W. and his friend, (Mr. Peyton,) as if he designed and wished to insult them by his looks. Nothing, however, was said by either of them. No notice was taken of his mere insolence of manner, until he attempted to experiment a little further. His course Mr. W. then thought, and still thought, was altogether that of a fellow trying how far he could go. Such was Mr. W.'s impression at the time, and such it was still.

On the night when the occurrence alluded to took place, Mr. W. was sitting, with several of his colleagues, on the committee; and Mr. Fairfield, of Maine, he believed, and himself were sitting apart, telling anecdotes in the most pleasant and agreeable manner to each other, whilst the silence that prevailed generally in the committee was only interrupted by the enunciation of a question and the return of an answer. Whilst sitting in one corner of the room, thus engaged, with every feeling in his bosom unruffled, an answer was announced. It was read; and, the moment it was returned, he saw that his friend from Tennessee, who was sitting near the chairman, became greatly excited. His face beamed with indignation. He (Mr. Peyton) first commenced his appeals to the chairman. He rose and declared that the insolence of that witness had become insufferable, and had been endured long enough. He had declined to answer question after question, because they were, he said, "inquisitorial." This question was "inquisitorial," that question was "inquisitorial;" and he rung the changes upon that word "inquisitorial" so often, until, if his insinuations could have established the fact, they would have begun to think they really were a Spanish inquisition.

Mr. Peyton then walked towards the witness, as described, and told him, in substance, what he had already told the House, and told him more. He told Whitney that he was a thief and a robber.

Mr. W. said, as he was called upon for a witness, he should tell the truth as it occurred, and every word as near as he could recollect. Mr. Peyton told Whitney, "he was a thief and a robber; and that, if he dared to insult him, there or elsewhere, he would put him to death upon the spot." He was then called to order by the Chairman, who, Mr. W. would say, had not failed to discharge his duty in all and in every respect. His friend was thus called back to a recollection of himself, and took his seat. He then appealed to the Chairman to bear him witness that he had treated that man as if he had been a gentleman before the committee, but that he was not to be insulted by him to his face. The witness then rose and commenced addressing the chair. Mr. W. believed the substance of his remark was that, "being called before that committee as a witness, he was entitled to protection." Mr. W. believed, however, that the witness did not complete the sentence before the gentleman from Tennessee called out and told him to hold his tongue, and sit down, for he must not speak there, but in writing; and that, if he uttered another word, he would—Mr. W. could not remember the exact phrase—but it was in substance, that he would inflict some punishment upon him.

During this time Whitney stood in the position of a man who had some weapon or other in his hand, for he kept his right hand in the corresponding pocket of his pantaloons. Indeed, said Mr. W. I suspected it so strongly, that, standing in a line between the two parties, I watched the motion of that arm, and immediately went round the table, placing myself at an angle where, if that arm had moved an inch, he should have died upon the spot! I confess it, sir, coolly and deliberately, for I thought I saw the insidious assassin in every movement made by the wretch on that occasion.

Fortunately, Mr. Wise happened, he said, not to interpose but in a friendly manner; for, instead of waiting for the motion of Whitney's arm, he took the better part of going in, without saying a word, took hold of his friend, put his hand upon his bosom and closed his waistcoat, telling him that the blood of such a wretch was not fit to stain his hands. This was the whole of that part of the transaction. His friend from Tennessee said the wretch was only worthy of his notice when he insulted him in his presence, and that he would kill him as he would a mad dog if he should dare to repeat it. This was the substance. Whitney was then ordered to retire; and when he came back, he came, as Mr. W. thought, and was glad to perceive, humble, using these words, and they were taken down as they fell from his lips, and recorded by the clerk: "Mr. Chairman, if I have been guilty of any disrespect, I am sorry, and will apologize for it."

Mr. W. had told even his secret intentions; that is, they were his own private intentions at the time, and he had neither concealed nor omitted a single thought, but let him not be misunderstood as to that intention. He should only have interposed to protect his friend from imminent danger. His (Mr. W.'s) actual interposition spoke for itself. It was peaceful. It was to prevent any further disorder.

In conclusion, Mr. W. called upon the members of the committee of all parties, friend or foe, of any and every party, to bear witness whether the statement he had just given was not substantially true; and whether there was a single jot or tittle in the statement of that most infamous wretch which has gone forth in the official organ, that was true, except the mere statement in relation to the interrogatory. He had called upon the honorable chairman of the committee in particular to bear him witness whether the facts were not as Mr. W. had stated them, as they passed before his eyes, and in the hearing of all.

Mr. GARLAND of Virginia said that it was extremely unpleasant to him at any time, and under any circumstances, to make a statement in reference to a personal controversy, but from the various hues in various directions which had been given to the transaction referred to by his colleague, (Mr. Wise,) he thought it due to the committee, to the House, and to the country, that a correct statement should be made. Mr. G. said without expressing any opinion in regard to the "card" referred to, or any other part of the transaction, he would simply say, that the statement of the facts and circumstances related by his colleague was substantially correct, and detailed very much as they happened. Some things stated, he did not see; others occurred which were omitted, not affecting the substantial correctness of the narrative. Mr. G. said he did not see the scowl and contemptuous look which the gentleman from Tennessee states Mr. Whitney to have given him, his eyes were turned in another direction at the time it is said to have happened, but he distinctly remembers hearing the gentleman from Tennessee complain of it at the time, and as the principal cause of his excitement. Mr. G. said the occurrence was very sudden, and the gentleman from Tennessee was certainly very much excited. He said that with a view to restore quiet, he stated to Mr. Whitney that a question would arise as to the disposition of his answer, and that he must retire, which he did. After Mr. Whitney had left the room, Mr. Peyton became more tranquil, apologized to the committee, and stated that he had been very much excited on account of the insult which he regarded as having been given him in the answer of Mr. Whitney, and the scowl and contemptuous look with which it was accompanied. Mr. Whitney was then called in, and the resolution of the committee in reference to his answer read to him; he then apologized to the committee in the terms contained in the copy of the journal of the committee just read.

Mr. GILLET said he rose to make but a few suggestions. The situation in which he stood as a member of the select committee, required him to make a few remarks, lest his silence should be misconstrued. It would be obvious to all who frequently attend our courts of justice, that it is hardly possible for nine persons to witness a transaction, and all concur, in giving their testimony concerning it, though all might be equally and perfectly honest. Each would remember the part that made the strongest impression on his mind—one would pay more attention to the words spoken, while another would particularly note the gestures. He much doubted whether, if each member of the committee should retire to his room, and write out what he recollected of the transaction in the committee room, any two would be found to agree upon the order and details of it. It would not be strange if they differed as much in their accounts, as Mr. Whitney differed in his with either gentleman who had spoken on this subject. This disagreement of persons in their accounts of what had transpired, was perfectly reconcileable with honest intentions, consequently he should not impeach the character of members of the committee, or of the witness who was before them, if all did not concur in the order and details of what had transpired. Unless we can agree among ourselves as to that occurrence, we could not, with any propriety, condemn one who differed no more from us than we among ourselves.

He had just come in from the committee room, and did not understand how this discussion arose, nor the precise object that was in view. He presumed it was intended to put the House and country in possession of an accurate and true account of what occurred between Mr. Peyton and Mr. Whitney. As so many jarring accounts had gone forth, such a desire is not without reason in its favor. He had not heard the accounts given by those who preceded him, and hence he could not say whether those accounts were in accordance with his own recollection or not. It was no part of his purpose to express an opinion at this time of the correctness of the statements of others, and certainly none in relation to statements which he had heard only in part. Nor would he now express any opinion concerning the card of Mr. Whitney. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Wise) had a day or two ago given notice to the committee, that when the report should be made to the House, as he understood him, he should bring up the subject of that card, and should deny the truth of all, except the copies of the question and answer. At that time, and not at the present, he expected this matter would come up as a subject of discussion. He thought the committee had not generally expected it to come up to-day, and he believed they were not generally in; but if they were, he strongly doubted the propriety of members rising in their places, and making verbal reports of what they recollected. He thought it better that the committee should agree among themselves, as far as they were capable of doing so, as to what had transpired, and present it in a tangible and definite shape, so that it would command credence wherever it went. When the committee shall agree, the country will feel an assurance that they have arrived at the truth.

If we cannot agree upon the facts, how, sir, are those who report what we now say to agree? Will every reporter and letter writer give the same account of what we affirm in the matter? He thought he hazarded nothing in saying, not two of all these would agree. It will be the same with others who hear what we now say. Nay, sir, before we leave this House a difference of recollection will be found to prevail as to what we have said. By to-morrow we shall find a very wide difference in this respect. As the news of the debate spreads, these differences will multiply in proportion to the distance they travel, and all will remain in uncertainty. Newspaper readers will fall into the errors of the publishers, and while one part of the community will believe one account, other portions may equally believe others, and all wide from the truth. From these, among other considerations, he thought this manner of placing this matter before the public was highly exceptionable.

He had entirely abstained from stating one word of what did occur, as he recollected it. Before he sat down, he should propose a resolution in these words: Resolved, That the Select Committee, of which the Hon. James Garland is chairman, be directed to report to this House the facts in relation to the difficulty that occurred between Mr. Peyton, a member of that committee, and Mr. Whitney, a witness called before that committee, while said witness was under examination. He did not know that the House was desirous of becoming acquainted with the occurrence referred to, but if it was, he thought this would be a suitable and proper manner of obtaining the facts. The narrative given by the witness had been, he understood from those who had listened to gentlemen who preceded him, objected to as inaccurate or untrue. If the committee be required to report the facts, the correctness of this statement would be tested. This would be doing justice to its author, and to the objectors. Then the public mind, which is feverish with continued excitement on questions of a disputed character, would be tranquilized and settled on one at least. Continual talking on the subject would no more settle this question, than it had settled those which the committee were ordered to inquire about. True, the committee cannot, perhaps, report the intentions of those who were the principal actors in the scene—he had understood these intentions, in whole or in part, had been already communicated to the House. He presumed those who had gone largely into details did not intentionally give more than what was recollected; and he would say that he had not yet heard it alleged by any one, that Mr. Whitney's account had been amplified beyond the truth, except in a single word in the relation of what he said after he returned to the committee. He should not express any personal wish as to the disposition of this matter. If its importance entitled it to the consideration of the House, he thought the same reasons would impel us to seek the undisputed truth, and place it before the public; and by that, let those who have made statements be judged.

This endorsing or denying the allegations of others was what he did not intend to do. The matter affirmed to be true or untrue, might be misreported, and the affirmation be made to cover statements never intended to be vouched for or denied. From differences in recollection, new controversies might arise, giving birth to feelings not to be designedly promoted by this House, and not productive of good any where. Thus far, he understood, the statements of facts had been mingled with much other matter, not well calculated to enable others to understand them. If the committee should report the facts, they would not be interspersed with biting and criminating epithets heaped upon the witness, having nothing to do with what transpired in the committee room. He thought the true way of arriving at the truth, was to call for it in an authentic form, and then the House could judge where the blame ought to rest. This he thought due to all parties, and could not fairly be objected to by any one. He therefore would send to the Speaker the resolution which he had read, and ask the House to adopt it.

The SPEAKER remarked, that resolutions were not now in order, and could only be received by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD of Kentucky said he objected.

So the resolution was not received.

Mr. WISE repeated, that there was not one single statement even by itself, much more when taken in connection with the others, of the article which had appeared in the Globe, nor any part nor parcel, jot or tittle, of it, excepting the mere statement of the question and answer, that could be regarded as true; and he repeated it again, that there was not a single member of the committee who could endorse that statement as true, excepting the mere question and answer, as before stated; and that it was intentionally, emphatically, and in italics, false. It might be that every gentleman on that committee could not tell, and if he were an honest and a true man he would not tell, the story precisely in the same way, though, like that of his own and his friend, they would be substantially the same; and it might be that some gentlemen who were there had lost their wits so badly that they could not tell any thing about the story at all; but to every man who had nerve enough to hold his self-possession, he hesitated not in saying would testify that the statement in relation to Mr. W. and especially his going up to that wretch, and ogling eye to eye with him, was wholly false; and with the exception of an oath which he confessed he made use of, and the remark that Whitney was not worthy of his friend's notice, he would appeal to gentlemen to say whether he had not acted the part of a pacificator. He, instead of attacking the witness, had interposed between him and the gentleman from Tennessee, and had entreated his friend to be seated, for it was a fact that his passion was such that he knew not where it would have carried him. He knew that the gentleman from Tennessee regarded that wretch as a minion of Executive power, sent there to insult and batter down honest inquiry; that he not only regarded him as Reuben M. Whitney, in himself too base for notice, but he regarded him as an agent, a tool, and instrument, backed and endorsed by those who were the highest in power. Mr. W. said he was cool, he was calm at the time of the difficulty, but his friend's passion was that of a person who had received a gross insult, and Mr. W. felt it to be his duty to make him, as a friend, preserve his self-respect. That gentleman had used the language of passion, at the same time that he acted the part of a man of high honor and elevated feelings, which no man on that committee could gainsay. Inquire into the circumstances of a rencontre between Reuben M. Whitney and the honorable Bailey Peyton and connect their names together in a resolution! He protested against any resolution to that effect, because it was too great a disparagement of his friend, (Mr. Peyton,) or even the lowest individual in the community. His friend was a committee-man, and was bound to preserve his own personal rights on the committee, and the dignity of the committee itself; and whether, in the exacerbation of his passion, he had paid a disrespect to the committee, was for the committee to decide. He had, however, apologized to the committee. In justification of himself, Mr. W. had wished to call on gentlemen, in order that they might speak and testify to the part which he had acted. He had gotten all the testimony he desired from the honorable chairman of the committee, and he wished for no other statement. He had notified the members of the committee that he should call upon them for a statement in relation to this matter, and he had gotten that statement in the manner he wanted it, from him whose duty it was to preserve order, and whose duty it was to notice these acts; and he defied any person to say that, on that occasion, he went up to the witness and ogled him, or that his friend from Tennessee did so. If (said Mr. W.) you had been there, I tell you what you would have seen. You would have seen the difference between an honest, bold, courageous, manly disposition, and that of a low, base, vile, cowardly, dishonest wretch. That is the only spectacle you would have witnessed; and he said, let these two classes of spirits join and consort together.

Mr. ANTHONY said, as it must be obvious that no good could result from this discussion, he moved that the House adjourn; but withdrew the motion at the request of

Mr. HAMER, who said he should not detain the House with any remarks of his were it not for an observation that fell from the gentleman from Tennessee, (Mr. Peyton) and had been repeated by the gentleman from Virginia, who last occupied the floor (Mr. Wise.) They had stated that the gentleman from Virginia had notified the members of the committee, that when this subject came before the House, he would call on them to pronounce Mr. Whitney's Card false in every part, except so much as related to the proceedings of the committee. If he now remained silent, after what had occurred, it might be inferred that he had borne testimony to the falsehood so charged. He did not intend that such inference should be drawn. He agreed with the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Gillet,) that no nine individuals, who might be present at an affair of this kind, could be found, who would afterwards state all the details alike; and at this time he would not go into details. As to Mr. Whitney's "card," he would neither pronounce it true nor false. He had, as he stated in conversation with the gentleman from Virginia the other day, read it but hastily, when it first appeared; and he had not taken the trouble to look at it since. But, as he was up, he would say, that, without going into particulars, the outlines of the transaction, as given by the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Virginia, were substantially correct.

He thought it due to himself to state what had been his own course in the matter. When the excitement took place, and the Hon. Chairman called "order," he (Mr. Hamer,) rose and commenced making a speech, the object of which was to aid the Chairman in producing order out of disorder. He had continued upon the floor, occasionally interrupted by other gentlemen, until he closed his remarks, by submitting the resolution which was unanimously adopted by the committee. He thought the resolution due to the committee; due to the individual member involved, and due to the witness himself, who had, in some measure, provoked what followed.

His opinion was, that a witness called before a committee, having an interrogatory propounded to him, ought either to answer or to decline. If he declined answering the question, that was enough. He had no right to proceed further, and make remarks about the committee, or an individual member of it, which were of a personal character, or which reflected upon them in any manner disrespectfully. Such a practice could not be tolerated; and the committee were unanimously of that opinion.

After this sudden gust of passion, this momentary excitement, the gentleman from Tennessee expressed his regret, and apologized to the committee, for what had taken place, on his part. The witness was called back, and apologized to the committee, for any thing he had done of a disrespectful character. He (Mr. H.) had hoped the whole matter would have remained there; but it seemed, that by some means, it had got out, and was travelling through the country in the newspapers. False and exaggerated statements in regard to it were, no doubt, circulated in public journals; and although he deprecated all discussions of this sort, yet he thought the gentleman from Tennessee perfectly justifiable in bringing the subject before the House, for the purpose of making a statement in his own defence.

Having said thus much, he would trouble the House no further.

On motion of Mr. VANDERPOEL,
The House adjourned.

IN SENATE,

MONDAY, February 6, 1837.

Mr. SEVIER presented the petition of Jacob Brown; praying for the correction of an error in the entry of certain lands: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TIPTON said he was requested to present to the Senate two memorials, signed by citizens of Carroll and White counties, in the State of Indiana, praying Congress to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia. These petitions (said he) are printed papers, couched in terms both decorous and respectful, and signed by citizens of great respectability. I acknowledge (said Mr. T.) the right of the people to petition Congress for a redress of grievances; and I feel it to be my duty, as one of their representatives, to present their petitions to the Senate, and to ask for them a respectful consideration; but I feel it also to be due to the petitioners, to the country, and to myself, to state respectfully, but firmly, that my reflections on this subject have brought me to a very different conclusion from that which they seem to have arrived at.

I am unable to perceive, sir, whence it is that Congress derives the power to interfere with slavery in the District of Columbia. Our fathers, in framing the Federal Constitution, recognised the existence of slavery in a portion of the States of the confederacy, by permitting slaves to be enumerated in apportioning representation on the floor of Congress; and every attempt made by the inhabitants of the non-slaveholding States to disturb the rights of our neighbors to this species of property, distracts the peace of the country, and endangers the existence of our Union.

It is contended that Congress has exclusive legislation over the District of Columbia. If that be granted, it is but a delegated and limited power not originally derivative. Slavery existed in Virginia, Maryland, and other States, before the Federal Constitution was adopted. Slavery then belonged exclusively to the several States, and there it still remains. The States, in entering into the Union, did not yield to the Federal Government any right to interfere with the question of slavery in the States or in this District.

The States of Virginia and Maryland ceded to the Federal Government this ten miles square, called the District of Columbia, for a seat of Government, and granted to Congress legislative powers over the District for that purpose. This power was given to Congress by the States for special purposes, and is limited from the very nature of the grant. Congress cannot abolish the right of trial by jury, abridge the liberties of the press, nor establish a national church in this District, any more than in any one of the States; nor has Congress a right to interfere with slavery in this District, while Virginia and Maryland continue to be slaveholding States.

Were it possible that the petitioners could effect their object, and abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, they would erect a receptacle in the midst of two slaveholding States for fanatics, abolitionists, and runaway slaves, who could, from their stronghold here, spread dissatisfaction, death, and destruction to the surrounding country; and had the States who ceded the District to the Federal Government have anticipated such a result, they never would have ceded it.

Mr. T. said that he was happy to be able to state to the Senate that there was but thirty-three names signed to these petitions, and that he hoped and believed that there was but a very small portion of his constituents in favor of the course that these petitioners have recommended. That he thought it best to meet this question fairly; and taking the suggestion of an honorable Senator from Virginia, not now here, (Mr. Tyler,) he would move to refer the memorials to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Let that committee give us a report that will present a full and fair view of the subject. This, he thought, would quiet the public mind. This course was adopted some years ago, when Congress was overrun with petitions for stopping the mail on Sunday. The memorials had been referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and an able report from the chairman of that committee had put that exciting subject to rest, as he hoped and believed, forever.

Mr. CALHOUN rose and asked the Chair whether the petitions could be received before the preliminary question was put? He was aware that the practice of the Senate was almost tantamount to it; but, when it was known that the unanimous consent of the body did not exist, the regular mode of proceeding was to propound this question to the Senate: "Shall the petition be received?" The rule, as laid down in page 140 of the Manual was plain and express on the subject. Now, he objected to receive this, or any similar petition. He was aware that last year a different rule was adopted, for the question of reception was left to be made by Senators, instead of the Chair putting the question to the Senate, as was formerly done, thus changing the onus, and compelling Senators to make out a case for reception, instead of the presiding officer. He trusted, therefore, that the Chair would raise the question of reception.

The CHAIR would state the regular parliamentary rule. When a petition is presented, the member who presents it shall state the substance of it. It is required that this shall be done, in order that the Senate may judge whether it is such a petition as ought to be received. The practice has been to receive it as a matter of course, there being no direct objection to it. The Chair is decidedly of opinion, that whenever the question is made, either by a Senator rising in his place, or objecting in his seat, to the reception of the petition, this question must first be put, whether the petition shall be received or not. This is the deliberate opinion of the Chair.

Mr. EWING of Ohio said, that it was decided, last year, that memorials of this character were not to take the usual course of a reference. His opinion had been expressed at that time, and he could assure the Senate that it was not at all changed now. He held it to be a constitutional right, which the people of the United States possessed, to petition Congress. If their petitions were couched in respectful terms, and were otherwise unexceptionable, they had a right to be received, and referred to one of the standing committees. He thought that injurious consequences to the country would grow out of refusing to meet these memorials in a proper manner. There were not so many abolitionists in the State of Ohio last year, as at present, and this he attributed to the fact, of their memorials sent here last session not having been treated with the respect to which they were entitled. Now, if the Senate did not receive the memorials offered to be presented by the Senator from Indiana, they would involve the right of petition with the question of abolition; and, as the minds of men did not always discriminate, they might be under the misapprehension that the right of petition was refused, and that in consequence of confounding the abolition memorials with those on other subjects. Last session he foresaw what would be the result of the action of the Senate then at the present time. The consequence of not receiving the petitions of the abolitionists, last session, had been to increase the number this year to nine-tenths more. He had some petitions by him, and he should offer them, though he was opposed to the prayer of the petitioners. He was against Congress interfering with the question of slavery in the District of Columbia, or elsewhere; and his constituents, he was ready to admit, had made no complaint to him on account of the existence of slavery here. He was of opinion that Congress possessed full power over every matter connected with this District, but it was highly inexpedient to touch the rights of the people living within the ten miles square.

The CHAIR reminded the Senator that he was taking rather a wide range, and that the question before the Senate was as to the reception of the memorials.

Mr. EWING resumed his remarks, by stating that he trusted he should be excused for saying thus much on the subject, for he had deemed it right to do so, as it was one of the highest importance. He would merely add a few more words to what he had already said. The memorialists were orderly, good citizens, and were entitled to be treated with respect. They were not, as was said last year, "incendiaries." What they had said, however, was perhaps not founded on an exact knowledge of the state of things here. But their feelings and opinions were expressed honestly and candidly. And he held that it was but a matter of justice, a constitutional right which they could insist upon, to have their memorials referred to a committee.

He was decidedly of the opinion that referring petitions of this character to the Committee on the District of Columbia was the best course—certainly the most likely one that could be adopted to put an end to the agitation of this very exciting subject. Let the committee make a report on it—meet the arguments used by the petitioners, answer them, and speak to them in the language of kindness, and not of harshness, and more would then be done to allay excitement and prevent further petitions from being sent here, than any other method that could be adopted. He would conclude with expressing his hope that the motion of reception would be withdrawn, and that the Senate would consent to refer the memorials to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TIPTON observed, that when he presented the memorial, he stated as distinctly as he could the objects embraced in it, so that every Senator might understand it; and he had taken the usual course in moving a reference, in order that the Senate might make some disposition of it. He was perfectly satisfied with the decision of the Chair, and he left it to the Senate to decide whether they would receive and refer the memorials; but he would respectfully ask of gentlemen from the slaveholding States to reflect on the consequences of refusing to receive these and similar memorials. The honorable Senator from South Carolina surely would not deny the propriety of giving a hearing to every petitioner who presented himself before that body in decorous and respectful language. He could tell the gentlemen from the slaveholding States that they could do nothing so well calculated to quiet the excitement on the subject of abolition, as well as to enlighten the public mind, and give it a proper direction, as to let these petitions go to a committee, be considered by it, and reported on, so that the arguments of the petitioners may be met by the arguments of the committee. He was sure that nothing could be done that was so well calculated to calm the excitement in his State; and he felt confident, that if one of the standing committees of that house made such a report, it would be perfectly satisfactory to a great majority of the petitioners, and that they would cease to trouble Congress on the subject.

Mr. MORRIS suggested whether it would not be better, in order to save the time of the Senate, for every gentleman who was charged with petitions of a similar nature to present them now, so that the question as to their reception might be taken on all of them together.

Mr. SWIFT concurred with the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Ewing) that the better course to pursue was to send all the memorials to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that they should make a report on the subject, the circulation of which would tend, more than any thing else, to put down agitation. He was not willing that those who petitioned Congress in relation to slavery should be called "incendiaries." They might make a mistake, or be guilty of some impropriety of language in penning their petitions, but he must say that the memorialists were as honest and intelligent men as was generally to be found. He hoped the course suggested would be adopted.

The CHAIR stated that no other petitions could be received while the question was pending on the two already presented, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALHOUN hoped that by unanimous consent the question would be taken on the reception of all the petitions at once. He expressed his satisfaction at the decision of the Chair, but he thought the onus ought to be on those who presented the petitions to show that they were worthy of reception. He hoped that when Senators presented such petitions they would make the proper motion that they be received.

The CHAIR said that by unanimous consent all petitions in the possession of Senators, on the subject of slavery in the District of Columbia, would be received; and there being no objection,

Mr. EWING of Ohio presented a petition from sundry citizens of Athens county, Ohio, and a petition from sundry citizens of the State of New York.

Mr. SWIFT presented a petition from sundry citizens of Vermont;

Mr. MORRIS presented a petition from 2265 ladies of Ohio; a petition from 3710 electors of the State of Ohio; a petition from 780 electors of Cuyahoga county, Ohio; a petition from a number of the electors of Laporte, Indiana; also, two petitions from the State of Tennessee, one from 108 ladies and the other from 107 men; all praying for the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GRUNDY asked the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Morris) to file with the petitions the letter which enclosed to him the two from Tennessee.

Mr. MORRIS said that the Tennessee petitions were enclosed in a letter from the State of Tennessee, to a citizen of Ohio, by whom it was enclosed to him.

Mr. WHITE asked for the name of the person in Tennessee, who had enclosed the petitions to Ohio.

Mr. MORRIS did not recollect the name, and had not brought the letter with him. He did not know the person who wrote the letter; but had noticed that it was postmarked in Tennessee. As to the citizen of Ohio, who had enclosed the petitions him, he had been assured by a member of the other House who knew him, that he was a man of the highest respectability, and that his word might be perfectly relied on.

Mr. PRENTISS presented several petitions on the same subject, from citizens of Vermont.

Mr. KNIGHT presented a petition, signed by sundry citizens of Rhode Island, on the same subject.

Mr. CALHOUN asked how many signatures there were to the above petition.

Mr. KNIGHT replied, that there were about three thousand.

Mr. BUCHANAN said he had seven memorials to present, asking Congress to abolish slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia. Five of these were from 229 of the ladies of Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and the remaining two were signed by sixty-one of the inhabitants of the city and county of Philadelphia.

He was not able this morning, from indisposition, to discuss this question; and if he were, he certainly should not undertake the task, believing that, at this time, a discussion of the subject could do no good, but, on the contrary, might produce much evil. After reflection, he never was better satisfied with his own course upon any occasion than he now was with that pursued by him at the last session of Congress, in reference to these abolition memorials. He believed that the discussion which then took place had done much good, at least in his own State; because it had enlightened the public mind on a subject not sufficiently understood, and brought it to reflect upon the dangerous consequences to the whole Union which might result from the abolition excitement.

At present, circumstances had changed. He deprecated a renewed discussion of the question, which would only tend to keep up the excitement in the South and in the North, without any countervailing advantage. He should, therefore, say nothing to encourage it.

If these memorials should be received, and he would vote for receiving them, he should then move to lay them on the table. At the same time, if any Senator would make the motion which he had made at the last session, to reject the prayer of the memorials, he would vote for it. He believed, however, that such a motion would lead to a protracted debate, and he, therefore, would prefer that it should not be made. He had now said all that he intended to say on this subject during the present session.

Mr. MORRIS observed that the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Buchanan) had said that he was perfectly satisfied with the course which was taken by the Senate at its last session—to receive and reject the petitions when presented. Now, this motion, and the decision upon it, was viewed in quite a different light in that portion of the country which he (Mr. M.) had the honor, in part, to represent. To receive and reject, at the same instant, without examination, without inquiry, without commitment, seemed to the people of Ohio—at least to the petitioners—as rather a mockery of their rights. What had been the consequence in that State, resulting from the action of that body last year in reference to their petitions? Why, very few petitions were presented then, and he knew of no more than two abolition societies, but since, he learnt by the letters he had received, as well as by the petitions sent him to present, that abolition societies were now springing up in almost every county of the State, and they were not through papers of their own, but political papers, contending that they had a right to be heard by Congress.

Mr. M. argued that the most wise and prudent course that could be adopted, was to refer the memorial offered to be presented by the Senator from Indiana, to the Committee on the District of Columbia, in order that they might make a report on the whole subject matter of it. Or, let it be referred to a committee to be composed entirely of southern gentlemen, who might draw up a report, in which it would be well to reply to the arguments of the petitioners, for the purpose of convincing them that they are wrong in the impressions they entertain; and the report should be disseminated among them, and then they would be given to understand that their prayers cannot and ought not to be complied with by Congress. It would afford him much gratification if this kind of knowledge were spread before every family in the Western States. He would give his vote for printing any number of copies of a report written by some of the ablest pens in the country, going to show that the course of the abolitionists was pregnant with much injury to the southern portion of the country—to injure the other portions of it, and in fact to disturb the peace and harmony of the whole Union.

Mr. M. after making some further observations, concluded with saying, that if the petitions should be received, he would move that they be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, with instructions to inquire into the power of Congress in that particular; and further, as to the slave trade, whether it consisted of slaves already here, or whether they are brought to this district for the purpose of sale. Also, whether the power given to Congress to regulate commerce between the different States, includes the right to deal in slaves. This fact was desirable, in order to afford a refutation, if any could be given, to what was said to the contrary.

Mr. HUBBARD remarked that he extremely regretted that this subject had been brought before the Senate at this late period of the session. It must be recollected that a very decisive vote had been given in this body, at the last session, expressive of their determination not to act upon petitions of a character similar to those which have just been presented; and he could not but feel a deep regret that this subject was now brought forward—a subject calculated to produce great excitement here and elsewhere.

But as members of this Senate had been charged with the presentation of memorials, he could not but regret that the honorable Senator from South Carolina had interposed any objection to the reception of these memorials. He believed that the course pursued at the last session was the proper and correct course; and that he fully concurred in the views of the Legislature of New Hampshire in relation to this absorbing subject. When he rose to address the Senate, he supposed that he had in his drawer a paper containing a printed copy of a preamble and resolutions which had been adopted by a great majority of the Legislature of his native State. He intended to have called for their reading, as the preamble and resolutions very fully express his own sentiments and his own feelings, but he had not been able to put his hand upon the paper; and as not many days can elapse before he can be furnished with an official copy of the document to which he had referred, he would, on presenting them to the Senate, avail himself of the opportunity to express his concurrence therewith. He had no doubt as to the course the Senate ought to pursue. His own views upon this subject he had very fully expressed at the last session of the Senate. He had reflected upon the opinions he then advanced, and he had seen no cause for regret at the grounds then taken by him.

He then believed, and he still believes, that no beneficial results would attend the action of Congress upon the subject of slavery in the District of Columbia. In his opinion, an evil rather than a good, would be the effect of any action on the part of Congress. He was so well satisfied with the disposition of the memorials presented at the last session, for the abolition of slavery in this District, that if the memorials now presented should be received, and his friend from Pennsylvania should not renew the motion which he then made, to reject the prayer of these petitions, he would himself present such a motion, as a motion to lay the whole mass upon the table.

Mr. CALHOUN said that it was very desirable to him, as one of the representatives of the southern States, to hear the contents of these petitions, in order that he might know how they spoke of his constituents. Let us hear (said he) what these petitions, which gentlemen contend are couched in such decorous and respectful language, say of the southern people and their institutions. I wish the South (said he) to know what these petitioners say of them. I have put my hands (said he) on two of these petitions without looking at the inside of them, and without making any discrimination between them and the others, and ask that they may be read.

The Secretary then read the two memorials from Indiana handed up by Mr. TIPTON.

Mr. CALHOUN resumed. Such was the language which had been held, which struck at the basis of southern institutions, and which could not be entertained here without involving the South in bloodshed and massacre. What they set forth in their memorials, outraged the rights of God and man. What was this body but a community of States, united together for the purpose of maintaining their separate institutions? And yet the representatives of twelve sovereign States of this Union were actually asked to sit there, and not say a word, and hear themselves, and those whom they represented, denounced, under the penalty that if they spoke they would but aggravate the evil. To a reflecting mind, all this was, indeed, truly awful. Yes, Senators were to sit there and hear themselves gravely denounced, and while some of their own body were ready to throw the blame upon them for speaking one word in defence of southern rights.

Mr. C. said he did not belong to the school of those who believed that agitations of this sort could be quieted by concessions; on the contrary, he maintained all usurpation should be resisted in the beginning; and those who would not do so were prepared to be slaves themselves. It was a question in which he knew of no concession or compromise. He knew full well if the South yielded the ground of reception, where it must end. It would prepare the way for further action at the next session; and the next step would be, that the petitions should be acted upon. He saw already that some gentlemen were prepared to take the sense of the Senate on the question of reception. The last year, a motion had been made to lay petitions of this character on the table, without discussion. He would ask southern Senators to put it to themselves, whether or not they did not begin to see that the next step which was to be taken was, that they should not only be received, but referred? Did he not, he would ask, tell the Senator from Pennsylvania, at the last session, that such would be the case? that he saw from the position which the Senator from Pennsylvania and his friends took, that it could not be otherwise; that if the Senate were bound to receive, they were bound to go through. It would be remembered, that the very position taken by one of the Representatives from South Carolina (Mr. Pinckney) at the last session, was, that all abolition petitions should be laid upon the table. But time had proved that that course had not arrested the getting up of them. They had increased; and the rebutting the petitions would require would be that Senators should quiet the question here; and so, step by step, gentlemen went on; and he regretted, profoundly regretted, that there was not a man from the non-slaveholding States who would go against this evil.

What was the argument? The only argument was, that the Senate were bound to receive petitions. Now, so help him God, he did believe it was as indefensible a proposition to attempt to prove that Congress could abolish slavery in the States as to say that they were bound to receive petitions. He maintained that there was no obligation to receive them. What did the rule say? The question on reception was to be put. The decision of the rule was correct, and the sense of the rule showed the sense of those who formed the Constitution. No individual had any right more than to present a petition, and that right depended upon whether he could get any one to present it. And the first rule was, the question on their being received or not? To yield this point, was to yield it to the abolitionists at the expense of the rights of this body. He rose not to argue, for he knew how vain that was for the purposes he had in view. He had never doubted the character of the Senate. He said, three years ago, when it was acting on the tariff question, that the consequences which were now following it, would take place. He knew then, that the intelligence which belonged to the whigs and democrats was against the incendiaries. He saw where the present agitation commenced; it commenced at the bottom of society—among the lowest and most ignorant—and afterwards spread itself among men of a better stamp, but men who desire agitation, who gloried in it. He knew well that the force of their eloquence was having its effect every hour, till at length it would get into the pulpits and schools, and by and by a majority would be found in the other House in favor of the schemes of the abolitionists. This was inevitable. The only course for Congress to adopt was at once to close their doors against these petitions. There was no remedy, but in the concerted, united action of the southern people; and that action must be prompt. He believed that if they were to come to an understanding at an early day, the disease might be at once arrested; for they had ample power to do it. If this agitation was to go on, the result would be the overthrow of the Union. He knew not that any thing he could say would have the effect of arresting the evil. He feared it was almost beyond the reach of mortal voice to stop it.

He had done his duty, and he trusted that no man would rise up on that floor, and say that he was not justified in protesting against the reception of these memorials. He had spoken under the solemn obligation of duty only, and should have been glad not to have said a word on the subject, had it not been absolutely necessary that he should do so.

Mr. TIPTON did not rise to prolong the debate, but to express his surprise and regret at the feeling manifested by the Senator from South Carolina. There surely was nothing in the petitions that he (Mr. T.) had presented, nor in the remarks accompanying their presentation, calculated to produce the state of feeling into which the gentleman seemed to have been roused. The petitions were in decorous and respectful language, and his remarks were intended to be of the most conciliatory character, while he claimed as a matter of right that they should be heard. The Chair stated the parliamentary rule, and he had acquiesced. What then did they hear from the Senator from South Carolina? Why, he called on the Senators from a certain section of the Union to stand by him, and deny to the petitioners what we, from the north, believe to be our dearest rights. I never, continued Mr. T. encouraged my constituents to get up petitions against slavery. In presenting their petitions here, I did but my duty; and I hope the honorable Senator will not take it upon himself to state that my constituents have asked for any thing that was unreasonable; or, that in presenting a decorous and respectful memorial, have claimed more than is due to every American citizen. All they wanted was a hearing, and this much he felt it his duty to claim for them. Grant this, said Mr. T. and it will satisfy my constituents, as it ought to satisfy those of the Senator from South Carolina. Mr. T. then called for the yeas and nays on the question, which were accordingly ordered.

Mr. BAYARD here moved that the question as to the reception of the memorials be laid on the table.

Mr. MORRIS asked for the yeas and nays on this question, which were ordered, and the motion was decided in the affirmative—yeas 31, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clayton, Cuthbert, Ewing of Ill. Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, Kent, King of Ala. King of Ga. Linn, Moore, Mouton, Nicholas, Norvell, Page, Preston, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Walker, White, and Wright—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Hendricks, Knight, Morris, Niles, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, and Wall—13.

Mr. DAVIS presented several memorials from Massachusetts on the same subject; and

Nr. BAYARD moved that the question as to their reception be laid on the table; which motion was agreed to without a division.

Mr. MORRIS presented an additional memorial from Ohio, and Mr. WEBSTER presented several from Massachusetts, all on the same subject; and after some remarks from Messrs. MORRIS, WHITE, and WEBSTER,

Mr. BAYARD again moved that the question as to their reception be laid on the table.

Mr. KING of Georgia said that the question now presented was precisely the same as that taken on the most of these memorials last session. It was true that they were at first compelled to take the direct vote on receiving them; and he gloried in the vote he then gave, for the fanatics never should provoke him to pursue a course that was wrong. But he would ask when, and by whom, were the rights of the South surrendered? How did it happen that the Senator from South Carolina had just found out that the rights of the South had been surrendered, after they had been pursuing the same course with regard to these petitions that had been pursued for the last fifty years. In justice to the gentleman who occupied the chair last session, he must say that the decision made by him on the parliamentary rule, was the same as that made now.

After some further remarks from Messrs. CALHOUN, PRESTON, BAYARD, WEBSTER, and SOUTHWARD,

Mr. CUTHBERT said that he had entertained the hope, that the first decision of the question which was made as to the reception of these memorials, would have been final. When it was intimated by the gentleman from Ohio, that it would be best for those who had memorials to present them then in order, that one decision might be made on all, that the country might not be agitated; that a single decision might prevent excitement here, as well as satisfy those abroad, he had indulged the hope that gentlemen would have accorded to sentiments so just; so consonant with good feelings. But he regretted that such had not been the case; that a corps de reserve had been held back, and now produced to protract a discussion, which there was so much reason to hope could be avoided. Among those who had seen fit to pursue this course, was the Senator from Massachusetts, (Mr. Webster,) and he regretted to say, that the gentleman had only followed up the course taken by him last winter.

Mr. WEBSTER here explained that he was not in his seat when the other abolition memorials had been presented, and had only just learned that it had been deemed advisable to dispose of all such memorials at that time.

Mr. CUTHBERT said that, in that view, he would, with pleasure, withdraw what he had said as to the time the gentlemen presented his memorials; but he had a word or two to say to him on another branch of the same subject. Do the questions presented by the gentleman stand independently of each other? Shall the National Legislature touch this point, and avoid that; or does the one necessarily bring on the other, and a series of actions take place when they would stop at a single point? He said a series of actions, because it was admitted by the gentleman that the mere reception of the petition was of no value, unless there was some action upon it; and to show what this action was to lead to he would quote the gentleman himself.

In a printed document to which his attention had been called, purporting to be the proceedings of a meeting, of which the gentleman was chairman, held in Boston in 1819, when the excitement on the Missouri question was the highest, he found a resolution wherein it was declared as the sense of the meeting that Congress not only possessed the power to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, but that it had the indisputable authority to prevent the transfer of slaves from one State to another. These two positions did not stand far from each other—they were not isolated; and they showed to the South what they were to expect if they submitted to the slightest encroachment on their rights. They were admonished by them that if they yielded to one encroachment, they would soon be forced by another process to, defend themselves from more dangerous aggression.

Is it a cause of surprise, then, asked Mr. C. that all our apprehensions are excited—that our indignation is aroused to the highest pitch at the commencement of a course of action which is to end in the ruin of our country? How stands the question? Gentlemen allege that there are certain means by which Congress may act without leading to these immense and overwhelming evils, which we of the South apprehend when an attempt is made to bring the action of this Government to bear on our peculiar interests.

Mr. President (said Mr. C.) I appeal to you—I appeal to every Senator from the South, and ask, can you touch any thing, even the remotest point connected with this delicate and dangerous subject, without creating distrust, alarm, and horror? Would it not endanger the stability of our Union, and perhaps end in a dissolution of our happy confederacy? If this be true, and no action of yours can take place without exciting that dread, that deep and unappreciable indignation which must be followed by such alarming consequences, then it becomes you to beware of taking the first step. Would any object to be gained here at all compensate for the alienation of so large a portion of your population, and a separation of the South from the other members of the confederacy?

This brought him to another point of view in which this subject was regarded. He appealed to the experience of all who had considered this subject—he appealed to all who knew the character of these abolitionists—to all who understood the operations of the human heart, if it was not always the result, that when a great scheme of reform, or a great plan of improvement, was on foot, the smallest advantage was regarded by the reformers, as the point from which they might march to conquest. Has not, asked Mr. C. this always been the case? The smallest advantage, said Mr. C. gained by the abolitionists in that body, would be hailed from one end of the country to the other—nay it would be trumpeted throughout the world, as a signal proof that victory hovers over their standard. To-day they will say we have gained so much, to-morrow we shall achieve more; and the great and unappreciable blessed of liberating the last slave of the human race will be ours. Were gentlemen then prepared to commence a course of action which would inflict ruin on the great body of the community deep and irremediable? Were they prepared to sow the seeds of dissension, and reap a harvest of blood and desolation? Surely not? Of all the calamities which had ever threatened our country, this was the most to be dreaded, and the most cautiously to be avoided. There was another view to be had of the subject.

Since the agitation of this question of abolition, unfortunately commenced in this country, there was a facility of communication, a medium of intercourse, with the great body of the slaves, by which they well understood what was done here, and by which they would well understand what was the first step towards the great plan of their emancipation. When you take any step here, said Mr. C. will you be able to satisfy them that it is the last? They will readily perceive that it is the first, but will you be able to tell them that it is the last? Impossible, impossible, said Mr. C. You will excite a feeling of alarm and indignation at the South, while you will raise the hopes and speculations of the North. You will awaken hopes in the slave population, which never can be put to sleep, and cause discontent, if not rebellion, among an otherwise contented and happy race. What then was the duty of a good and wise man under such circumstances? It was plain. Awaken not hopes which may lead to a fierce contest, which will inevitably create alarms and distrusts you never can soothe. Kindle not the flame which may light the insurgent to blood and conflagration, and consume the altar of your liberties in the general conflagration. Your course is a plain one. Let matters remain as they are. We of the the South ask no favors of you but to keep your hands from, and not to bring the action of this Government to bear on, our domestic institutions, for remember that you never can repair the mischief that you may do.

Mr. WEBSTER said the gentleman from Georgia had very unnecessarily, as he thought, brought him (Mr. W.) into the discussion. He (Mr. W.) was not in his seat when the various petitions on the subject of slavery were presented, and, therefore, had not the opportunity of presenting with them those that had been accumulating in his drawer. He supposed, however, that a gentleman who had petitions there might take his own time in presenting them, subject only to the business and convenience of the Senate. The gentleman, it seems, had referred to the proceedings of a meeting held in Boston in 1819, of which he was chairman. He had no recollection of those proceedings.

Mr. CUTHBERT referred the gentleman from Massachusetts to where he might find the printed pamphlet; it contained resolutions declaring opinions which if carried out would lead to the inference that Congress possessed the power to prohibit the transfer of slaves from one State to another.

Mr. WEBSTER could not now say what might have been the opinions expressed in the resolutions referred to, or what they would lead to if carried out. He however had no hesitation in giving it as his deliberate opinion that Congress did, under the Constitution, possess the power of legislating on the subject of slavery in the District of Columbia.

With respect to the other subject in the resolutions, the power to regulate the transfer of slaves from one State to another, there was no doubt in his mind but that Congress also possessed this power. The Constitution conferred on Congress the power to regulate trade between the States, and so long as slaves remained as property, they were the subjects of commerce, and as such came within the views of the Constitution. Mr. Webster said, he would refrain from expressing any opinion as to the expediency of the exercise of the above powers; he only wished to be understood as claiming that Congress possessed them. Mr. W. referred to the act of Congress on the subject of slaves escaping from one State to another, to show that Congress had already exercised the power which the Senator from Georgia took him to task for asserting that it possessed.

Mr. CUTHBERT observed, that the country could now, from the admissions of the gentleman from Massachusetts, learn what his opinions were. So far he (Mr. C.) was satisfied. The gentleman could give but one interpretation to the Boston resolutions, which had been referred to. The occasion on which they were introduced—the subject which then agitated the country from one end to the other—the time and manner of introducing them—all concurred in proving that the gentleman could have had but one object in view. The meeting was called during the agitations of the memorable Missouri question, and the first resolution declared that Congress possessed the power to abolish slavery in the Territories of the Union, while the second was declarative of the power to prohibit the transfer of slaves from one State to another. View the whole character of the proceedings, said Mr. C. and no other construction can be put on them than such as is revolting to the feelings of the South, and dangerous to the peace of the country.

The debate was further continued by Messrs. KING of Ga. RIVES, CALHOUN, WEBSTER, CUTHBERT, WALL, and EWING of Ohio; after which

Mr. HUBBARD moved to lay the question on the table, and this motion was decided in the affirmative—yeas 31, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clayton, Cuthbert, Dana, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, Kent, King of Ala. King of Ga. Linn, Lyon, Moore, Nicholas, Norvell, Page, Preston, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Spence, Strange, Walker, White, and Wright—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Clay, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Hendricks, Knight, Morris, Niles, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall, and Webster—15.

Petitions were further presented by Messrs. WRIGHT, WALL, BENTON, HENDRICKS, SOUTHWARD and TOMLINSON; after which

Mr. EWING of Ohio moved that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WALKER called for the yeas and nays on the question; which being ordered the motion was rejected—yeas 17, nays 26.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which had been recommitted the bill to limit the sales of the public lands to actual settlers, reported the same with several amendments; which were read, and,

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

BY BLAIR & RIVES.

— WEEKLY —

PRICE $1 PER SESSION.

24TH CONG.....2D SESS.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1837.

VOLUME 4.....No. 11.

On motion of Mr. WALKER, the same was ordered to be printed and made the order of the day for to-morrow.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, MONDAY, February 6, 1837.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS, the House, by general consent, took up the report made on Saturday by the joint committee of the two houses, in relation to the mode and manner of proceeding in counting the votes for President and Vice President of the United States.

A message from the Senate having at that moment arrived, informing the House that that body had agreed to the same report and resolutions.

Mr. THOMAS moved that it be taken up and concurred in.

The report was read, and concluded with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the two Houses shall assemble in the chamber of the House of Representatives on Wednesday next, at 12 o'clock, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that one person be appointed a teller on the part of the Senate, and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote, and the persons elected, to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President of the United States; and, together with a list of votes, be entered on the journals of the two Houses.

Resolved, That in relation to the votes of Michigan, if the counting or omitting to count them shall not essentially change the result of the election, they shall be reported by the President of the Senate in the following manner: "Were the votes of Michigan to be counted, the result would be for A. B. for President of the United States ——— votes. If not counted, for A. B. for President of the United States ——— votes. But in either case A. B. is elected President of the United States." And in the same manner for Vice President.

Mr. MERCER was understood to make an inquiry of the chairman (Mr. Thomas) in relation to the fact, whether any votes have been given by persons not competent, under the Constitution of the United States, to vote as electors of President and Vice President.

Mr. THOMAS said a few words in explanation. The committee, on investigation, had found that there were three individuals in North Carolina, one in New Hampshire, and one in Connecticut, elected to the electoral college, who bore the same name with those of individuals who were deputy postmasters under the General Government, and the impression on the minds of the committee was, that they were consequently the same individuals.

The committee, he said, came to the conclusion that, whether these votes were counted or not, the general result would not be affected, and they did not feel themselves authorized to recommend their rejection. The chief reason was, that it would be a very delicate power to be exercised on the part of Congress to determine upon the qualification of electors of President and Vice President of the United States. It was with the committee, also, a matter of considerable doubt whether, if such an inquiry should be gone into, it did not belong to the electoral college itself to judge of the qualifications of its own members. The committee, however, had expressed a very decided disapprobation of any officer of the General Government participating, in the manner these gentlemen had done, in the election of President and Vice President of the United States, and they had proposed a remedy, by either giving the power to reject to the college or to Congress, as might be deemed most expedient.

Mr. CAMBRELENG stated in addition, what had been omitted by the gentleman from Maryland, that it appeared, from examining the list of re-appointments of deputy postmasters, that the gentlemen referred to had probably all resigned before they gave in their votes for President and Vice President.

Mr. THOMAS had not adverted to that fact, because the committee came unanimously to the conclusion that they were not eligible at the time they were elected, and therefore the whole proceeding was vitiated ab initio.

Mr. CRARY called for a division of the question. He was disposed to vote for the first clause of the resolution, but not for that part which made a disposition of the electoral votes of the State of Michigan. He thought that Michigan ought to be placed on an equal footing with the original States. The resolution made a distinction in the votes unfavorable, and, as he conceived, unjust, to his own State. Michigan was now a sovereign State of the Union, and, if the election of President should come before the House, she would be entitled to a vote in her sovereign character.

When Indiana was in an analogous position her electoral votes were received and counted. It was true, that the votes of Missouri in 1821 were placed in the same position that those of Michigan now are; but on the ground solely that Missouri was not a State of the Union at the time the electoral votes of the States were counted. Michigan was now in the Union, and Congress ought not to place her votes in a position so equivocal as they were found in the resolution before us. They were not rejected by it, nor were they received. He thought they ought to be received, and to enable him to express that opinion he had moved a division of the question.

The resolutions were then severally concurred in without a division.

PENSION SYSTEM.

Mr. C. ALLAN asked the leave of the House to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That this House will, on Thursday next, at one o'clock, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and take up and consider the bill (No. 353) entitled "A bill to extend the provisions of an act entitled 'An act supplementary to the act for the relief of certain surviving officers and soldiers of the revolution,' approved 7th June, 1832."

Mr. JARVIS objecting,

Mr. C. ALLAN moved a suspension of the rules for this purpose, and called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and were—yeas 75, nays 95.

So the House refused to suspend the rules.

Mr. PIERCE of New Hampshire, Mr. MARTIN of Alabama, and Mr. PEYTON, of Tennessee, severally rose and stated that having been appointed members on a select committee, which had leave to sit during the sessions of the House, and being members also of the standing Committee on the Judiciary, which likewise had a similar permission, they found it impossible to discharge their duties on both committees, and they therefore asked to be excused from attendance on the latter during the balance of the session.

The motion of the gentleman was agreed to, and other members ordered to be appointed in their places on the Judiciary Committee.

COLONIZATION SOCIETY.

The unfinished business, being the motion of Mr. ADAMS to reconsider the vote of the House by which a memorial of the American Colonization Society of Kentucky was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, was then taken up.

Mr. HUNTSMAN made some few remarks vindicating the members of the Colonization Society against the charge of their being abolitionists, and stated furthermore that he believed this question was merely raised for the purpose of attempting to slide in a discussion on the subject of abolition, he therefore moved the previous question.

Mr. ADAMS hoped the gentleman from Tennessee would allow him to make some remarks in reply to those which the gentleman had just made.

Mr. CALHOON of Kentucky, the appeal to the gentleman to withdraw the motion to allow him to make a statement in relation to these petitions, and said he would renew the motion for the previous question, when he had concluded.

Mr. HUNTSMAN withdrew the motion, when

Mr. CALHOON said he felt it due to the petitioners to state to the House that they were men of the first respectability, and that not a single man of them could be charged with entertaining doctrines favorable to the abolitionists; and that they were as far from being abolitionists as any men in that House, or in any part of the nation. For himself, Mr. C. said, he did not think there was any sort of connection between this colonization society and the abolitionists. Not wishing to discuss this question, he renewed the motion for the previous question.

Mr. PATTON moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

After a few words by Messrs. ADAMS, PATTON, McKAY, DENNY, and the CHAIR as to the effect of laying this motion on the table,

Mr. PINCKNEY called for the yeas and nays, which were not ordered; and the motion to lay it on the table prevailed—yeas 121, nays not counted.

On last Monday Mr. HARLAN of Kentucky had presented a memorial of similar tenor with the above, which, giving rise to debate, lay over till to-day. The motion to commit was pending.

Mr. JARVIS moved to lay the motion to commit on the table; which was agreed to without a division.

Petitions and memorials were presented by Messrs. PARKS, FAIRFIELD and JARVIS of Maine.

Messrs. CUSHMAN and BEAN of New Hampshire.

[Mr. CUSHMAN presented the petition of sundry inhabitants of Rye, New Hampshire, asking for an appropriation for the improvement of Rye harbor, referred to the Committee on Commerce; also,

The petition of John Jenkins, asking remuneration for injuries sustained from vessels of the United States, being anchored near his premises: referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.]

Messrs. PHILLIPS, BRIGGS, LAWRENCE, CUSHING, REED, and CALHOUN, of Massachusetts.

[Mr. LAWRENCE presented the memorial of the chamber of commerce of the city of Boston, for the establishment of a national bank in the city of New York. The petitioners state, that there is a great derangement in the currency of the country, and particularly in the domestic exchanges, which can only be regulated by the establishment of a national bank. The memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce.]

[Mr. ADAMS presented a great number of petitions praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, both from citizens of his own State and from those of other states; while proceeding in the latter,

Mr. ROBERTSON raised the point of order whether it was competent for a member to present petitions from a State of which he was not a member, and thereby forestall other States behind his own. He asked for the decision of the Chair on the point; remarking that he was well assured, if the Chair decided according to his own judgment, and not according to precedent, he would sustain the point. The practice of which he complained was a clear and palpable violation of the rule, in principle at least, if not in its letter.

The CHAIR stated that the practice adverted to had uniformly prevailed in the House. The period was but recent, when the rule was adopted calling for memorials in the order of States, and was to avoid the confusion and embarrassment of a number of members rising at the same moment to get in their petitions. Every member had a right to present a petition, come from what quarter it might. Perhaps the case of a member handing over a petition to another gentleman, in order to give it a preference or priority, might present another question, and be an invasion of the rule.

Mr. Dawson had been given to understand that such a case had occurred that very morning; a gentleman from New York having passed over a petition to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Adams admitted the fact, but he explained, it was because the member in question was unable to present it himself.

Mr. Boon took an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and briefly argued the point.

The Chair restated the grounds of his decision, and it was sustained by Messrs. Mercer, Vanderpoel, and Vinton, and opposed by Messrs. Hardin and Lane, when

Mr. Boon said, to save the time of the House, he would withdraw the appeal.

Mr. Chambers of Kentucky renewed it, and

Mr. Patterson demanded the previous question.

Mr. Glascock appealed to the mover to withdraw the motion, in order to afford Mr. G. an opportunity of briefly assigning the reasons that would govern him in the vote he was about to give.

Mr. Patterson said he felt compelled to decline acceding to the request.

The previous question was then seconded by the House without a division.

Mr. Glascock asked for the yeas and nays on ordering the main question, but the House refused to order them, and the main question was ordered without a division.

The main question being, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?" was taken by yeas and nays (on the motion of Mr. Adams) and decided in the affirmative—yeas 139, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Anthony, Bailey, Barton, Beale, Bean, Beaumont, Bockee, Bovee, Boyd, Briggs, Brown, Buchanan, Burns, William B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Casey, George Chambers, Chapman, Chapin, Chetwood, Childs, Clark, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Corwin, Cramer, Crary, Cushing, Cushman, Darlington, Deberry, Denny, Doubleday, Dringooole, Dunlap, Elmer, Evans, Everett, Farlin, Fowler, French, Grainger, Grantland, Grennell, Haley, Joseph Hall, Hiland Hall, Hart, Samuel S. Harrison, Albert G. Harrison, Haynes, Hazeltine, Henderson, Herod, Hoar, Holsey, Holt, Howard, Howell, Hubley, Huntington, Huntsman, Joseph R. Ingersoll, William Jackson, James, Joseph Johnson, C. Johnson, Henry Johnson, Benjamin Jones, Lansing, Laporte, Lawler, Lawrence, Jay, Gideon Lee, Thomas Lee, Leonard, Lincoln, Loyall, Job Mann, W. Mason, M. Mason, S. Mason, May, McComas, McKennan, McKee, Meyer, Miller, Milligan, Montgomery, Morris, Parks, Patterson, Patton, James A. Pearce, Pearson, Phelps, Phillips, Pinckney, Potts, Rencher, John Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, Ripley, Russell, Schenck, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickels, Slade, Sloane, Smith, Spangler, Sprague, Steele, Storer, Sutherland, Taylor, John Thomson, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Vinton, Wagener, Ward, Wandwell, Washington, White, Elisha Whittlesey, Thomas T. Whitte-sew, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, Yell, and Young—139.

NAYS—Messrs. Alford, Bouldin, Bynum, Carr, J. Chambers, N. H. Claiborne, J. F. H. Claiborne, Gholson, Glascock, Graham, Grayson, Griffin, Hamer, Hardin, Hawkins, Hopkins, John W. Jones, Lane, Lewis, Lyon, McKay, McLene, Morgan, Owens, Richardson, Robertson, Rogers, Thomas, and Waddy Thompson—29.

So the decision of the Chair was affirmed by the House.

Mr. Adams then proceeded, and further presented abolition petitions from New Hampshire, New York, Nichigan, Virginia, (nine ladies in Fredericksburg,) &c.

Mr. Adams next stated he had in his possession a paper, upon which he wished to have a decision of the Speaker. The paper, he said, came from twenty persons declaring themselves to be slaves. He wished to know whether the Speaker would consider this paper as coming under the rule of the House.

The Chair replied that the gentleman having the paper in his possession was the best judge of the matter, but if the gentleman would send the paper to the Chair he would then decide.

Mr. Adams said, if he sent it to the Chair, it would then be in possession of the House, whereas he wished to know of the Speaker whether it came under the rule before he presented it. The paper purported to be from slaves; and this was one of those cases, which it had occurred to his own mind was an imposition. The paper was signed partly by persons who could not write, they having made their mark, and partly by persons, judging from the writing, of little education. He would send the paper to the table.

Mr. Lawler objected to its going to the table.

The Chair said as this was a novel case, he would leave it to the House, and take its advice and counsel.

Mr. Haynes was astonished at the course pursued by the gentleman from Massachusetts, not only on this day but on every petition day for some weeks since, but his astonishment had reached a height which he could not express, when the gentleman rose and asked leave to present a paper purporting to come from slaves. He could not tell in what manner a proposition of this kind should be treated, but he had to express his surprise, that this measure should be brought forward. He moved that the petition be not received.

Mr. Lewis. I beg to say that I hope no man coming from the South—

Mr. Haynes. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. Lewis rose and said, he was glad to hear the gentleman from Georgia withdraw his motion for a rejection of this petition. He hoped no gentleman from a slaveholding State would either argue or vote upon the question of reception. He thought that the Representatives of the slaveholding States should demand that the attempt to introduce such a petition should instantly put in requisition the power of the House to punish the member for such attempt. If this is not done, and that promptly, every member from the slave States should immediately, in a body, quit this House, and go home to their constituents. We have no longer any business here.

Mr. Grantland. I will second the motion for punishment, and go all lengths for it.

Mr. Anthony moved the previous question on the question of reception. (Cries of No! No!)

Mr. Alford inquired what kind of a petition it was that the gentleman from Massachusetts proposed to present. (Loud cries of "he ought to be expelled!")

The Chair directed the Clerk's minutes to be read, which set forth that it was "the petition of twenty-two persons, declaring themselves to be slaves, and wishes to know whether it comes within the order of the House."

Mr. Alford said if the member from Massachusetts should insist upon presenting his memorial, he would move that it be instantly burnt. (Cries of "No!" "No!" "Expel him!" "Expel the mover!")

Mr. Patton then arose, and stated that he had taken occasion to examine another petition presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts, described as coming from nine ladies of the town of Fredericksburg, in Virginia. Mr. P. stated there, in his place, as a member, and upon his responsibility, that there was the name of no lady of that town appended to that paper, nor a single name to it which was of decent respectability. He believed, however, they were genuine signatures, for he did recognise among them the name of only one individual, and that was of a free negro or mulatto woman, of notoriously infamous character and reputation. Mr. P. accordingly moved a suspension of the rule, for the purpose of enabling him to make a further motion to take that petition from the table, and return it to the gentleman who presented it.

Mr. Robertson asked for the yeas and nays on that motion; which were ordered, and were—yeas 131, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alford, Chilton Allan, Ashley, Beale, Bean, Bell, Black, Bockee, Bond, Boon, Bovee, Boyd, Bunch, Bynum, John Calhoun, Cambreleng, Carter, John Chambers, Chapman, Chapin, Chetwood, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, John F. H. Claiborne, Coles, Connor, Corwin, Cramer, Cushing, Cushman, Deberry, Doubleday, Dringooole, Elmore, Elmer, Farlin, Forrester, French, Fry, Galbraith, Gholson, Graham, Grainger, Grantland, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Hannegan, Hardin, Harlan, Harper, Albert G. Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Hoar, Holsey, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Howell, Huntington, Huntsman, Joseph Johnson, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, John W. Jones, Klingensmith, Lane, Lansing, Lawler, Jay, Gideon Lee, Thomas Lee, Luke Lea, Leonard, Lewis, Logan, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, William Mason, Moses Mason, Sampson Mason, Maury, McCarty, McKay, McKee, McLene, Mercer, Miller, Milligan, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Owens, Page, Patterson, Patton, Pickens, Pinckney, Rencher, Joseph Reynolds, Richardson, Ripley, Robertson, Rogers, Seymour, Augustine H. Shepperd, Shields, Shinn, Sickels, Smith, Spangler, Steele, Storer, Sutherland, Taliaferro, Taylor, Thomas, John Thomson, Waddy Thompson, Turner, Underwood, Vanderpoel, Wagner, Ward, Webster, White, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, and Yell—131.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Heman Allen, Ash, Bailey, Beaumont, Bouldin, Briggs, Brown, Buchanan, Burns, William B. Calhoun, Carr, Casey, George Chambers, Crane, Crary, Darlington, Denny, Evans, Grennell, Haley, Hiland Hall, Hart, Samuel S. Harrison, Hazeltine, Henderson, Herod, Hubley, William Jackson, James, Jarvis, Kilgore, Lawrence, Job Mann, May, McKennon, Morris, Parker, Pearson, Phelps, Phillips, Potts, John Reynolds, Russell, Slade, Sloane, Sprague, Vinton, Elisha Whittlesey, and Young—50.

So the rule was suspended.

Mr. Patton then submitted the motion indicated above, and reiterated his former statement in reference to the character of the signers of the memorial.

Mr. Thompson of South Carolina then moved the following resolution, in the form of an amendment to Mr. Patton's motion:

Resolved, That the honorable J. Q. Adams, by the attempt just made by him to introduce a petition, purporting on its face to be from slaves, has been guilty of a gross disrespect to this House, and that he be instantly brought to the bar, to receive the severe censure of the Speaker.

Mr. T. made some remarks in support of his motion.

Mr. Haynes moved the following substitute:

That John Q. Adams, a representative from the State of Massachusetts, has rendered himself justly liable to the severest censure of this House; and is censured accordingly, for having attempted to present to this House the petition of slaves.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" Let him be brought to the bar!"] Mr. H. deemed his amendment preferable to the original resolution, as it was conformable to precedent.

After some remarks, at considerable length, from Mr. Granger,

Mr. Lewis submitted the following substitute for the original resolution:

Resolved, That J. Q. Adams, a member from the State of Massachusetts, by his attempt to introduce into this House a petition of slaves for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, committed an outrage on the rights and feelings of a large portion of the people of this Union, a flagrant contempt on the dignity of this House; and by extending to slaves a privilege only belonging to freemen, directly incites the slave population to insurrection; and that the said member be forthwith called to the bar of the House, and censured by the Speaker.

This substitute was accepted by Mr. Thompson:

The discussion was further continued by Messrs. Wise and Hardin, when

Mr. Adams obtained the floor, and stated that he considered it to be his duty to remain silent while these resolutions charging him with high crimes were pending, but gentlemen had gone on consuming the time of the House in such manner that he felt he was under the obligation to rise and ask them to modify their resolutions, because it might be that if he was brought to the bar of the House, he would put an end to this resolution from the fact of its erroneous statements. The resolution charged him with attempting to present a petition from slaves for the abolition of slavery. Mr. A. said he had not attempted to present a petition of this description at all. He had risen in his place, and stated to the Speaker that he had in his possession a paper from persons representing themselves to be slaves, but he had not stated what the object of it was, or what its prayer was; and he had asked the Speaker whether, if he presented this paper, it would be included under the general order of the House, and be laid upon the table accordingly, and he meant to have the decision of the House before he proceeded one step further. He had stated to the speaker that he would not send the paper to the Chair until the question was settled whether it would come under this general rule. As to the fact in relation to the prayer of the petition, he would simply state to the gentleman from Alabama, (Mr. Lewis,) who had assumed, and sent to the Clerk's table a resolution importing that the petition was for the abolition of slavery, that the gentleman was mistaken, because it was the very reverse of this; and if the gentleman was going to have him brought before the bar of the House, he must amend his resolution. If the gentleman was about to press his motion, and the House was about to adopt it, they would be under the necessity of seeing what the paper was, and to that he would willingly submit. He would be willing the petition should be received and considered, and he would be willing for almost any thing except to grant the prayer of this petition, because the gentleman from Alabama might find that its prayer was precisely what he had been so strenuously contending for. Mr. A. then went on to reply to some remarks which had fallen from the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Granger,) after which, he made a defence of his conduct, in presenting the petition of certain persons from Fredericksburg. He contended that the character of the petitioners should not be made the grounds for rejecting petitions, if they were couched in respectful language. All petitions he contended should be received whether they come from the highest or wealthiest individuals in the land, or whether they come from the poorest or lowest in character. The Sultan of a despotic Government was bound to receive the petitions of the vilest of his subjects, and he hoped that no distinction would be made in petitions in a free Government, so long as they were in respectful language.

The debate was further continued by Mr. MANN of New York, and Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina, when the latter gentleman submitted the following modification:

Resolved, That the Hon. JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, by an effort to present a petition from slaves, has committed a gross contempt of this House.

Resolved, That the member from Massachusetts, above named, by creating the impression, and leaving the House under such impression; that said petition was for the abolition of slavery when he knew it was not, has trifled with the House.

Resolved, That the Hon. JOHN QUINCY ADAMS receive the censure of the House for his conduct referred to in the preceding resolutions.

The debate was further continued by Messrs. PICKENS, CAMBRELENG, LEWIS, GLASCOCK, PINCKNEY, LAWLER, WISE, and JENIFER; and on motion of the last gentleman,

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE. TUESDAY, February 7, 1837.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition from sundry citizens of Beaufort, North Carolina, praying for an appropriation for the purpose of erecting a marine hospital at that place: referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BROWN submitted the following resolution, which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a marine hospital at Beaufort, North Carolina.

Mr. McKEAN presented two memorials from sundry citizens of Pennsylvania engaged in the various branches of the coal trade; one being from citizens of Schuylkill county, and the other from citizens of Mauch Chunk, Northampton county, in that State, remonstrating against the reduction of the duty on foreign coal: laid on the table.

Mr. McKEAN submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting commutation to the heirs of the late Major John Brooks.

Mr. LINN presented the following petitions and memorials: A petition from sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of pre-emption laws: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

A petition from the trustees of the University of Wisconsin, praying for a donation of land for the purpose of endowing said university: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

A petition from the citizens of the town of Dubuque, Wisconsin Territory, praying for the establishment of a board of commissioners to settle and adjust titles to lots in said town: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

A petition from sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the construction of a road in said Territory: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

A petition of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for an alteration in the mode of selling the public lands: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

A petition of sundry citizens of the same Territory, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a road from Milwaukee to Cassville, and from Chicago to Green Bay: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

A petition from the inhabitants of Clay and Clinton counties, Missouri, praying for the establishment of an additional land office: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. Tipton presented the memorial of sundry citizens of Ohio and Indiana, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a road: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. TOMLINSON presented the petition of William Davenport, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, New York, praying for the passage of the bill now before the House of Representatives, or of some similar bill, for the reduction of the revenue to the wants of the Government: laid on the table.

A message was received from the President of the United States by ANDREW JACKSON, Jr. Esq. his private secretary, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

At the beginning of this session, Congress was informed that our claims upon Mexico had not been adjusted, but that, notwithstanding the irritating effect upon her councils of the movements in Texas, I hoped, by great forbearance, to avoid the necessity of again bringing the subject of them to your notice. That hope has been disappointed. Having in vain urged upon that Government the justice of those claims, and my indispensable obligation to insist that there should be "no further delay in the acknowledgment, if not in the redress of the injuries complained of," my duty requires that the whole subject should be presented, as it now is, for the action of Congress, whose exclusive right it is to decide on the further measures of redress to be employed. The length of time since some of the injuries have been committed, the repeated and unavailing applications for redress, the wanton character of some of the outrages upon the property and persons of our citizens, upon the officers and flag of the United States, independent of recent insults to this Government and people by the late Extraordinary Mexican Minister, would justify, in the eyes of all nations, immediate war. That remedy, however, should not be used by just and generous nations, confiding in their strength, for injuries committed, if it can be honorably avoided; and it has occurred to me that, considering the present embarrassed condition of that country, we should act with both wisdom and moderation, by giving to Mexico one more opportunity to atone for the past, before we take redress into our own hands. To avoid all misconception on the part of Mexico, as well as to protect our own national character from reproach, this opportunity should be given, with the avowed design and full preparation to take immediate satisfaction if it should not be obtained on a repetition of the demand for it. To this end I recommend that an act be passed authorizing reprisals, and the use of the naval force of the United States by the Executive against Mexico, to enforce them, in the event of a refusal by the Mexican Government to come to an amicable adjustment of the matters in controversy between us, upon another demand thereof made from on board one of our vessels of war on the coast of Mexico.

The documents herewith transmitted, with those accompanying my message in answer to a call of the House of Representatives of the 17th ultimo, will enable Congress to judge of the propriety of the course heretofore pursued, and to decide upon the necessity of that now recommended.

If these views should fail to meet the concurrence of Congress, and that body be able to find in the condition of the affairs between the two countries, as disclosed by the accompanying documents, with those referred to, any well-grounded reasons to hope than an adjustment of the controversy between them can be effected without a resort to the measures I have felt it my duty to recommend, they may be assured of my co-operation in any other course that shall be deemed honorable and proper.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Washington, Feb. 6, 1837.

The message having been read, it was, on motion of Mr. BUCHANAN, ordered to be printed, together with the accompanying documents, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KENT presented the memorial of Elizabeth Scott; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD presented certain resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the State of Delaware, condemnatory of the Expunging resolutions, which have been adopted and acted on by the Senate, and instructing their Senators to use their exertions to get the same rescinded.

Mr. B. remarked that the object of the joint resolutions he had presented, was to have the expunging resolutions, passed the 16th of January last, rescinded, and that the journal of the Senate should be restored to the state in which it was before their passage. He was aware that it would be unparliamentary, at the present session, to move in the matter, because it was the sense of the body now that the resolutions should be undisturbed; but, in compliance with the wishes of the Legislature of Delaware, he would take the liberty of stating that, at the next session, and every succeeding session that he might retain a seat in this Senate, he would use his earnest efforts to accomplish the object they had in view. He trusted that the day was not far distant when Senators, entertaining the opinions he did, would be able to restore the journal to its former condition, and to rescind the resolutions of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BROWN observed that he had no doubt the gentleman would persevere, in order to attain the object of his wishes. He (Mr. B.) would vote for the printing of the joint resolutions. But, at the same time, he would mention a fact, and that was, that when an honorable Senator from New Hampshire, (Mr.

Hubbard,) presented from his State certain instructions, though of an opposite character to those before the Senate, the courtesy of printing was not extended to his State. Mr. B. thought, however, that it was but extending a proper courtesy to every State, to order their resolutions to be printed, as was almost invariably done.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of Hannah Mendenhall Baldwin, widow of Doctor Baldwin, late a surgeon of the navy, praying for a pension: referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MORRIS presented two memorials and joint resolutions, one on the subject of lands granted to Ohio for canal purposes, and sold by the Governor; and the other on the subject of the lands ceded by the Wyandot Indians for the purpose of making a road: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. MORRIS presented two petitions from sundry citizens of Ohio, one signed by males the other by females, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia; one of which being read,

Mr. WALKER objected to their reception.

Mr. HUBBARD moved that the question, as to the reception of the petitions, be laid on the table.

Mr. MORRIS called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and the motion was carried in the affirmative: yeas 27, nays 11; by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Clayton, Dana, Ewing of Ill. Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, Keitt, King of Ala. King of Ga. Linn, Lyon, Mouton, Nicholas, Norvell, Parker, Preston, Robinson, Ruggles, Sprague, Walker, White, Wright—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Ewing of O. Hendricks, Knight, McKean, Morris, Niles, Prentiss, Robbins, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson—11.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the petition of Ruben James; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PARKER presented the petition of the Alexandria and Falmouth Railroad company, praying for the aid of Congress in the construction of the work: referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the subject had been referred by a resolution of the Senate, reported a bill for the relief of Thomas A. Smith, Receiver of Public Moneys at Franklin, Missouri; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

On motion of Mr. LINN,

The Committee on Private Land Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of William Barclay.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to provide for the completion of the title of the United States to the site of the light-house on Ranoake marshes; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

On motion of Mr. BROWN,

The Committee on Revolutionary Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of the heirs of Henry Conner and the heirs of George Cook.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD,

The Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of John McDonald and Wm. D. Cheever; and the Committee on Revolutionary Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the heirs of Everard Chapman.

Mr. HUBBARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported without amendment, the bill from the House for the relief of David Kilburn.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, to which had been referred the petition of Samuel Raul, asking the patronage of Congress for his invention, to prevent the bursting of steam boilers, and the resolution of the Senate on the same subject, made a special report thereon; which was read, and 2,000 extra copies were ordered to be printed.

Mr. EWING of Illinois, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of John H. McIntosh, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

On motion of Mr. EWING, the same committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Daniel Bradley.

Mr. NILES, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which had been referred various petitions from mail contractors, praying for additional allowances, reported a bill for their relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. FULTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to fix the salaries of the Surveyor General of Arkansas, and of the draftsman and clerks employed in his office; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. Franklin, their clerk, stating that the House had concurred in the resolutions reported by the joint committee as to the mode of examining and counting the votes for President and Vice President, and that the House had appointed the honorable Mr. Thomas and the honorable Mr. Ingersoll tellers on their part.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, reported without amendment the bill from the House amending the act of the last session, establishing branches of the mint, which was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole, read a second time, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the same committee, reported, with an amendment, the bill from the House making appropriations for the support of the army; which was read a second time and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the petition of John Hewson, reported a bill for his relief; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. PRENTISS, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Thaddeus Fairbank; which was read twice, and referred.

Mr. TOMLINSON, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a bill to restore to certain invalid pensioners the pensions by them relinquished; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

The following resolutions were submitted, considered, and adopted:

By Mr. EWING of Illinois:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the relinquishment of the reversionary interest of the United States in all Indian reservations made at the treaty of Camp Tippecanoe, in October, 1832, between the Government of the United States and the Pottawatamie, Otto, and Chippewa Indians.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands inquire into the expediency of allowing to George Davenport the right of pre-emption to his farm upon Rock Island, Illinois.

By Mr. NORVELL.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce inquire into the expediency of making appropriations for building light-houses at New Buffalo, Kalamazoo river, North and South Black river, Grand river, Saginaw river, Windmill Point at the outlet of St. Clair, and upon Stony Point, in the County of Monroe, State of Michigan; for the improvement of the harbors at the mouths of said rivers, at New Buffalo, Hawre Bay, the mouth of Stony Creek, and at that of Clinton river; to improve the harbor at Mackinac; to remove the bar at the mouth of the river St. Marie; to build a light-house at that point; and for the establishment of a port of entry at the town of Lower Saginaw, in the State of Michigan.

By Mr. WHITE.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, required to inform the Senate whether commissions, or any other compensation, is allowed to officers of the army, or to other persons who receive salaries monthly, or daily pay, for disbursing public moneys in payment of annuities to Indians, or for any other purposes connected with the Indian Department; and, if so, what is the measure of compensation allowed or claimed, and to whom have such allowances been made, or by whom have such claims been set.

The resolution offered by Mr. CALHOUN, calling on the President for information in regard to the aggression committed by the authorities of Bermuda on a southern vessel, freighted with slaves, which was driven by distress into the ports of Bermuda, being before the Senate.

Mr. CALHOUN observed, that the cases referred to in the resolution presented one of the greatest outrages ever committed on the rights of individuals by a civilized power. The resolution proposed to ask from the President copies of any correspondence that may have taken place with the British Government relative to the seizure, by the British authorities, of the slaves who were carried as passengers in two American vessels. One of these vessels had sailed from Wilmington, in the State of North Carolina, for New Orleans, having on board some slaves, the property of a gentleman removing from that State to the State of Mississippi; and she was wrecked near New Providence, where the slaves were forcibly seized and detained. The Legislature of North Carolina had, in consequence, expressed their disapprobation of such unwarrantable conduct, and unanimously passed resolutions calling upon the General Government to institute an inquiry into the matter. The other case was, that of a vessel bound from Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, to Charleston, South Carolina. Having met with very stormy weather, she was forced into the port of Bermuda, where the British authorities took possession of the slaves, and set them at liberty. He insisted that there was not a clearer constitutional question, than that a vessel sailing from one port of the United States to another, was as free from search as the Territory of the United States itself; and when a vessel was forced by stress of weather into a foreign port, she was entitled to commiseration on account of her situation. The claims of humanity, he held, were, in such cases, to be superadded to the laws of nations. These points being so clear, he was astonished that outrages of this kind had been committed for the last three years. He did not doubt, for a moment, but that the Executive had done his duty, and exercised his accustomed vigilance, in reference to these matters. But still he, (Mr. C.) was at a loss to perceive, how it happened, after such a lapse of time, that the slaves had not been restored, nor any compensation made to the owners. Now, this resolution he had introduced for the purpose of getting information on the subject, and in order that justice might be done to our citizens.

At the suggestion of Mr. GRUNDY, Mr. CALHOUN modified his resolution, so as to insert in it the words, provided the President does not deem it incompatible with the public interests; and the resolution, thus amended, was adopted.

The bill to prohibit the sales of the public lands, except to actual settlers, and in limited quantities, was taken up for consideration.

Mr. WALKER made a few remarks explanatory of the amendments.

Mr. RUGGLES moved to amend the fourth section in the third line, by inserting after the words "any applicant who shall prove," the words "to the satisfaction of the register and receiver."

Mr. WALKER remarked that the amendment was unnecessary, though he had no objection to it.

Mr. RUGGLES asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

After some remarks from Messrs. LYON, BAYARD, WALKER, and EWING of Ohio,

Mr. RUGGLES modified his amendment so as simply to require a residence on the tract of three months prior to the 1st of December, 1836.

On taking the question the amendment was rejected—yeas 23, nays 25.

Mr. RUGGLES then renewed his motion to insert a provision that the cultivation should be proved to the satisfaction of the register and receiver.

This motion was also rejected—yeas 20, nays 25.

Mr. KING of Georgia submitted an amendment, requiring that the applicant for a pre-emption shall make oath before the register and receiver that he has not received the benefits of any pre-emption law heretofore passed by the United States.

This amendment was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Calhoun, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Knight, Morris, Prentiss, Robbins, Ruggles, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, and White—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Buchanan, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Walker, and Wright—23.

Mr. KING of Georgia then moved an amendment providing that no pre-emption shall be granted to lands to which the Indians had not been removed at the commencement of such occupancy.

On taking the question this amendment was also rejected—yeas 18, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Clayton, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Nicholas, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, and White—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Mouton, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strango, Walker, and Wright—25.

Mr. EWING of Ohio moved an amendment requiring a residence of two years in five on the land instead of one year; which was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clayton, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Morris, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, and White—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Walker, and Wright—26.

Mr. WALKER submitted an amendment to correct an error in the copy, to strike out the word "during" and insert the word "within," the effect of which is to require, that the cultivation shall be made within the year, instead of during the year.

Mr. EWING of Ohio said, that under this amendment the mere digging for half an hour would be a sufficient cultivation.

Mr. WALKER said, that the amendment was necessary, because as the provision now stood, the settler must prove a continued cultivation during the whole year.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was adopted by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Walker, and Wright—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clayton, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster and White—16.

Mr. CALHOUN, after some remarks, said he was satisfied that the time had now arrived when it would be better to surrender to the new States the lands which lie in them. This would be better for the new States, as well as the old.

He then submitted an amendment, providing that the public lands remaining unsold, shall be ceded to the States in which they lie—the States to be at the expense of the surveys, and of extinguishing the Indian title, and to relinquish the five per cent. now reserved for them for internal improvements—the States to be restricted from selling the lands for less than $1 25 per acre till the year 1841, after which they are permitted to reduce the price by a gradual process for twenty years. Thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the gross amount of the sales is to be paid by the States to the Government. The President shall close the land offices, and the Commissioners of the Land Offices shall cease in each State as soon as it shall notify the Government of its acceptance of the terms of this act.

Some other conditions and restrictions are imposed, not recollected by the reporter.

Mr. BENTON said he should object to make any new arrangement as regarded the new States to extend over 20 or 30 years, because we were on the eve of a new census. It was highly improvident for the new States to do so, taking into consideration all the other circumstances connected with the subject.

Mr. BUCHANAN remarked that he had heard a great deal upon that floor about bribing the people with their own money. Such arguments had been reiterated again and again. They had, however, not produced much effect upon his mind. But upon the same principle these remarks had been formerly made, and without intending to make any personal matter of this with the Senator from South Carolina, he must say that this was a most splendid bribe. It gave all our lands, without fee, or without price, to the western States; and the only restriction upon those States were that they should not bring all the lands into the market at once.

Now, he had one objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina. He believed it was the first time that such a proposition had been made upon either floor of Congress; and he solemnly did protest against the principle that Congress had any right, either in equity or justice, to give away that property to any individuals or States whatsoever. This land was acquired by the common blood and treasure of the country. So far as respected the land ceded by the State of Virginia, it belonged to the respective States. It is theirs, not ours, and we had no more right to give it away than we should have to give away the property of our own constituents. Congress had a right to legislate for its government and security; but they had no right to give it to the citizens of the new States; no more right than they would have to put their hands into the Treasury of the United States. He, therefore, hoped that the amendment would not obtain the sanction of any considerable portion of the members of the Senate.

Mr. BLACK did not feel willing to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina at this time, but there was nothing incompatible with the bill already debated, why this amendment should not hereafter assume the shape of a bill.

Mr. KING of Georgia regarded the amendment as infinitely better than the bill.

Mr. WALKER hailed, with great pleasure the proposition of the Senator from South Carolina. If proposed to disenfranchise the people of the Western States from that abject attitude in which they were placed in regard to the General Government. The effect of it was to place them at no remote period on the same footing as any of the other States of this Union. Whilst he was willing to support the bill under consideration, he could not withhold expressing his opinion, which was due alike to himself and his constituents, that, although he should vote most cheerfully for the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands, yet he infinitely preferred the bill of the Senator from South Carolina. And, if there was a prospect of that bill becoming a law, he would give it his hearty support. He cared not whether a measure came from a political friend or foe, he was inclined to do him justice. He would return his thanks to the honorable Senator in the name of the people of the west. He hoped there was a majority favorable to the amendment; and if not, he should vote for the bill under consideration.

Mr. LINN would be sorry should there be a majority in favor of the proposed amendment, instead of the bill immediately under consideration. Under present circumstances, he could not vote for the amendment, and was willing to take the bill as it was, as the best he could get.

Mr. SEVIER approved of the amendment, preferring it to the bill, but was, at this time, afraid to vote for it, lest it should endanger the bill.

After a few words from Messrs. BENTON, SEVIER, LINN, and NORVELL, Mr. CALHOUN'S amendment was rejected, by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Calhoun, King of Georgia, Moore, Morris, Robinson, Sevier, and White—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing of Ohio, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, Kent, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Prentiss, Rives, Robbins, Southard, Strange, Swift, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, and Wright—28.

After a short discussion, the bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Strange, Walker and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Calhoun, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Prentiss, Robbins, Sevier, Swift, Wall, Webster, and White—16.

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

TUESDAY, February 7, 1837.

As soon as the reading of the journal was concluded,

Mr. ADAMS rose and said the minutes on the journal of the proceedings of yesterday were not, in one particular, sufficiently explicit. The journal stated that Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina moved a modification of his own resolution "at the suggestion of Mr. Lewis of Alabama;" whereas, Mr. A. contended, that the journal should set forth that Mr. Lewis had moved, or offered to move, that resolution as an amendment, and that then Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina accepted it.

After some conversation between Messrs. ADAMS, THOMPSON of South Carolina, LAWLER, EVERETT, WILLIAMS of Kentucky, ALFORD, ELMORE and MERCER, the journal was amended according to the suggestion of Mr. ADAMS.

The House then resumed the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being the "privileged question" of censure embraced in the following resolutions, submitted by Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina:

1. Resolved, That the Hon. John Quincy Adams, by an effort to present a petition from slaves, has committed a gross contempt of this House.

2. Resolved, That the member from Massachusetts, above named, by creating the impression, and leaving the House under such impression, that said petition was for the abolition of slavery when he knew it was not, has trifled with the House.

3. Resolved, That the Hon. John Quincy Adams receive the censure of the House for his conduct referred to in the preceding resolutions.

The question pending was the following, submitted as a substitute by Mr. HAYNES:

Resolved, That John Quincy Adams, a representative from the State of Massachusetts, has rendered himself justly liable to the severest censure of this House, and is censured accordingly, for having attempted to present to this House the petition of slaves.

Mr. JENIFER, who was entitled to the floor, rose and stated, that he was exceedingly gratified to have it in his power to state, that mutual explanations had taken place between one of his honorable colleagues, (Mr. Pearce,) and the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng,) which was perfectly satisfactory to all parties.

Mr. J. then begged leave to propound an inquiry to the venerable member from Massachusetts (Mr. Adams.) He read the following proceedings from the Globe of this morning, and he would respectfully ask that gentleman if that report was correct?

"Mr. ADAMS then proceeded, and further presented abolition petitions from New Hampshire, New York, Michigan, Virginia, (nine ladies in Fredericksburg,) &c.

"Mr. ADAMS next stated he had in his possession a paper, upon which he wished to have a decision of the Speaker. The paper, he said, came from twenty persons declaring themselves to be slaves. He wished to know whether the Speaker would consider this paper as coming under the rule of the House."

Mr. ADAM said it must be perfectly within the recollection of the Speaker, that what was there stated in the Globe was correct. He did not present the petition, but kept it in his possession. He had stated to the Speaker that he had in his possession a paper, purporting to be from twenty-two slaves, and he had asked the Speaker whether a petition of this kind would come under the rule of the 18th of January last, and the Speaker said as it was a novel question, he would take the sense of the House upon it. He had also stated, before he commenced presenting his petitions, that he had some in his possession, which it had occurred to him were impositions; as by the order of the 18th of January members, who had an attachment to the right of petition, were liable to imposition. He had stated that, among the petitions which were in his possession, he had the suspicion that some of them were not genuine, and he would appeal to members to say whether he had not given this statement when he presented several of his petitions. He had given this statement when he stated he had in his possession the petition purporting to be from slaves; but he did not say, and no member of the House had the right to infer, that this paper was for the abolition of slavery. It was impossible for him to have said any such thing; for if the House had received the petition, and it had been read, they would instantly have seen that he made a false statement. He would, furthermore, say that if it had been a petition of slaves for the abolition of slavery, he should at least have paused before he brought the subject before the House in any form. However sacred he might hold the right of petition, he would still exercise a discretionary power in bringing before the House petitions which it was his opinion ought not to be presented; that discretionary power, however, he would use with prudence, and he would say that the mere circumstance of a petition being from slaves would not prevent him from presenting it; and if he should have incurred the censure of the House for so doing, he was ready to receive it. A gentleman had said on yesterday that he would as soon receive a petition from a horse or a dog as from slaves. Sir, said Mr. A. if a horse or a dog had the power of speech and of writing, and he should send him a petition, he would present it to the House; ay, if it were from a famished horse or dog, he would present it. What was a petition? It was a prayer, a supplication to a superior being; that which we offer up to our God; and if the Creator of the Universe did not deny to the lowest, the humblest and the meanest the right of petition and supplication, were they to say they would not hear the prayer of these petitioners because they were slaves? If slaves sent to him a petition for any thing unjust or improper, or any thing which the House ought not to hear, he would pause at least before he asked of the Speaker the same question which the asked on yesterday. If, however, on the contrary, he should receive a petition from slaves, praying that not only himself, but all others who presented abolition petitions should desist, because it only tended to weld the chains of slavery; and if he should receive a petition from slaves, saying that they were perfectly satisfied with their situation; and that they would rather be slaves than freemen; that their masters were kind to them, and that when they were reduced to infirmity by old age, their masters would take care of them, and praying that they might be left in this situation, he would, if the House would permit him, present it.

As he had before said, however, he had not presented this petition to the House, and he was yet waiting the Speaker's decision before he could determine whether he would present it. If the House should decide that it was not a paper which came under the order of the 18th of January, and was not admissible, he should not present it at all. He would take this opportunity of saying to the House, that however much he might have been misunderstood by gentlemen, there was nothing farther from his intention than to trifle with the House on this occasion; and never in the course of his life had he intended to pay a greater respect to the rules of the House, and the rights and privileges of members. Had he consulted his own feelings, he would have presented the paper to the House; but, from the respect he paid to the rules of the House, he had asked the decision of the Chair before he presented the paper.

Mr. JENIFER said, if the gentleman paid such veneration to the right of petition, why not present his petition to the House without asking the decision of the Speaker? That gentleman had never paid so much regard to the decisions of the Speaker heretofore, as it must be within the recollection of every gentleman that, on almost every petition day, the gentleman had come in collision with the Speaker in his efforts to transgress the rules of the House; and Mr. J. could not conceive why he had paid so much regard to the decision of the Speaker on this occasion, unless it was that he wished to shield himself behind the decision of the Speaker. He hoped the gentleman from Massachusetts would perform his duty, as he considered it, and present this petition; and then the House would know what course to take. Mr. J. felt a deep interest in this matter, being from one of the frontier slave-holding States, and he wished to resist at the very threshold every effort to throw fire-brands among the slave population. He had heretofore refrained from taking part in these discussions, because he did not wish to add to the excitement which already existed; but if the gentleman from Massachusetts should present a petition of the kind, which raised this discussion, he should not only not vote for either of the resolutions which had been brought before the House, but he would vote for the expulsion of the member presenting it.

Mr. DROMGOOLE said he preferred action in a question of this character rather than debate, and he had risen only for the purpose of requesting the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. Thompson) to accept a modification, he would send to the clerk's table.

The modification was read as follows:

1. Resolved, That the Hon. John Quincy Adams, a member of this House, by stating, in his place, that he had in his possession a paper purporting to be a petition from slaves, and inquiring if it came within the meaning of a resolution heretofore adopted, (as preliminary to its presentation) has given color to the idea that slaves have the right of petition, and of his readiness to be their organ, and that for the same he deserves the censure of this House.

2. Resolved, That the aforesaid John Q. Adams receive a censure from the Speaker in the presence of the House of Representatives.

Mr. THOMPSON accepted the above as a substitute for his own resolution.

Mr. HAYNES said he had intended to have availed himself of the opportunity of making a defence against the charges thrown out upon those who had voted for the resolution of the 18th of January. But preferring, with his friend from Virginia, action rather than discussion, he would refrain from doing so, and confine himself to withdrawing his amendment.

The question then recurred upon the original resolution, as modified at the suggestion of Mr. DROMGOOLE.

Mr. ELMORE trusted there was no intention of arguing this subject, but that the South would present united action, and an undivided front, and suffer all minor differences of opinion to subside.

Mr. PICKENS made a brief explanation in relation to his remarks on the adoption of the resolution on the 18th ult. viz: that ordering all abolition papers on the table. In denouncing that resolution itself, he had been misapprehended, if it had been inferred that he coupled with it any denunciation of those who voted for it. He had spoken of the resolution, both last session and the present, as pitiful and contemptible, and as trifling with the rights of the South, but not with any desire to cast disrespect upon any gentleman who had felt disposed to, and who had supported it on both occasions. That opinion he still entertained, but seeing the feeling and unanimity that, it gave him pleasure to say, had been manifested on the present occasion, and he hoped and trusted that, so far as he was concerned, and so far as he was identified with the South, they would present but one emboldened, single, unbroken phalanx.

He desired a word of explanation from the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng,) in relation to some remarks that were said to have fallen from him yesterday, though Mr. P. himself had not heard them. He had been informed this morning, that the gentleman had said to the effect that he trusted there was virtue and spirit enough

(and this was in reply to Mr. P.) in the North and in the South, to put down fanaticism in the one, and rebellion in the other.

Mr. CAMBRELENG explained. What he had said was, that there was virtue and spirit enough among the vast population of this Union, East, West, North, and South, which would keep the two extremes from breaking down the barriers of the Constitution; but he had not used the word "rebellion," but "insurrection," and had made no application to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. PICKENS was perfectly satisfied, and had not himself understood the gentlemen as saying what he had referred to, but others had.

Mr. LAWLER then took the floor, and insisted, at some length, that the explanation of the member from Massachusetts was any thing but satisfactory, and he made an earnest appeal to him to retract what he had done.

Mr. ROBERTSON gave his reasons why he should vote against the resolution, because it violated the freedom of speech, though he considered the explanation of that gentleman as an aggravation of the original offence.

The debate was further continued by Messrs. ALFORD and HOLSEY in support of the adoption of the resolution, and by Mr. LINCOLN in opposition to it.

Mr. RYNUM then addressed the House at some length, and concluded by submitting the following proposition:

Strike out all after the word "Resolved," and insert, "That an attempt to present any petition or memorial from any slave or slaves, or free negro, from any part of the Union, is a contempt of the House, and calculated to embroil it in a strife and confusion incompatible with the dignity of the body; and that any member guilty of the same, justly subjects himself to the censure of the House."

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the fact whether any such attempt has been made by any member of this House, and report the same to the House as soon as practicable."

Mr. GRAVES addressed the House at length in opposition to the resolutions before the House.

Mr. PHILLIPS then inquired whether the resolution of the gentleman from North Carolina, which was proposed as an amendment, was in order. He made this inquiry because he considered that if this resolution was in order, the subject lost its character of a question of privilege.

The CHAIR decided that it was in order.

Mr. PHILLIPS appealed from this decision, and went on briefly to discuss his point of order.

The CHAIR then stated the grounds of his decision, and read the parliamentary law on the subject; when

Mr. PHILLIPS said, to save the time of the House, he would withdraw the appeal.

Mr. PATTON obtained the floor, and made some few remarks—invoked gentlemen of the South not longer to discuss this subject, but to take the vote as soon as northern men were disposed to do so. Mr. P. concluded by moving the following resolutions as an amendment to the amendment:

Resolved, That the right of petition does not belong to slaves of this Union; that no petition from them can be presented to this House without derogating from the rights of the slaveholding States, and endangering the integrity of the Union.

Resolved, That every member who shall hereafter present any such petition to this House, ought to be considered as regardless of the feelings of this House, the rights of the South, and an enemy to the Union.

Resolved, That the Hon. John Q. Adams having solemnly disclaimed a design of doing any thing disrespectful to the House in the inquiry he made of the Speaker as to the right of petition purporting to be from slaves, and having avowed his intention not to offer to present the petition, if the House was of opinion that it ought not to be presented—therefore all further proceedings as to his conduct now cease.

Mr. THOMPSON of South Carolina, regretted to see those gentlemen who had been most zealous on yesterday, in urging him to introduce his resolution, and who even said it was not strong enough, falling off one by one from him to-day. The resolution was before the House, and he would not withdraw it, if it did not get but three votes, because he believed the House had been treated with disrespect. He then went on in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky, (Mr. Graves,) and the gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Lincoln,) adverting with some severity to the history of New England.

Mr. CALHOON addressed the House at length, in support of the resolution.

Mr. CUSHING followed in opposition to the resolution, discussing at some length the right of petition, and repelling the indignity cast upon the early history of New England by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FRENCH said he felt much exhausted, and wishing to address the House on the subject, he hoped the House would adjourn, and he therefore moved an adjournment.

Mr. VANDERPOEL asked for the yeas and nays, but the House refused to order them, and the question being taken by tellers was decided in the affirmative—ayes 101, noes 34.

So the House adjourned at 6 o'clock, P. M.

IN SENATE,

WEDNESDAY, February 8, 1837.

The CHAIR announced a communication from the War Department, transmitting a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relative to the compensation of Indian agents; and

Also, a communication from the same, transmitting a report from the Second Auditor, relative to the trade with Indian tribes; and on motion of Mr. WHITE, they were severally referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the first was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUBBARD presented the petition of — Scott; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WEBSTER presented the petition of 14 or 1500 persons of the mercantile community of the city of New York, praying for the establishment of a national bank in that city.

Mr. W. said that the petitioners set forth the deranged state of the currency, and expressed their opinion that the establishment of a bank in the city of New York would be highly beneficial to the mercantile community, and have the effect of regulating the currency and exchanges of the country.

Accompanying the petition was a short communication from the committee raised for the purpose of preparing and presenting it. They make known that the signers are highly respectable, and they set forth, what he believed to be true, from his own observation, that these 14 or 1500 names had been brought together, without regard to political opinion. Looking over the names, and perceiving those of men of different political opinions, he was satisfied of the correctness of the sentiments avowed by the committee.

His opinions, with regard to the power of Congress to create banks, had long been known, and they remained the same, because of the necessity of the Government to use some sort of banks as fiscal agents. And he must say, as he had before done, that the argument of the honorable Senator opposite, (Mr. Morris,) made three or four years ago, seemed to him (Mr. W.) unsatisfactory, and that was, that if the Government had the power to pass a law to use a corporation, it possessed the power to create one.

Now, if the use of a corporation were necessary to the Government in order to carry on the fiscal operations of the country, it appeared to him that Congress had precisely the same power to create a bank as to pass a law allowing the Government to use a corporation of that character. And he had always been of the opinion, that when, by law, Congress gave their sanction that the State banks should act as agents of the Government; that every argument against the constitutionality of the Bank of the United States fell to the ground. He concurred in the opinion of the Senator from Ohio, that if Congress had the power to use, it had the power to create.

When this subject was last before the Senate, he expressed his determination never again to moot it, until public opinion should have been clearly and most unequivocally expressed. He had, therefore, great pleasure in presenting the memorial. The experience of the last forty years had shown that the country required an institution to regulate its fiscal concerns. He, however, well knew that any movement here on the subject was of no use, until public opinion should have demanded it. That public opinion would undergo a change, he believed, and that at no remote period. He believed it was the opinion, not only of the mercantile portion of the people of New York, but of the people generally from this city to Maine, that five-sixths of the banks are necessary to regulate the currency as well as the exchanges of the country.

The memorial was then laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LINN presented two petitions, numerously signed by citizens of Carroll and Clay counties, Missouri, praying for the establishment of an additional land office: referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TIPTON presented the petition of sundry citizens of Indiana, praying for the passage of a law granting pre-emption rights to the settlers on the public lands: referred to the same committee.

Mr. MORRIS presented the petition of sundry citizens of Loraine county, Ohio, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALKER objected to the reception of the petition; and, on motion of Mr. GRUNDY, the question of reception was laid on the table.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to which had been referred the bill from the House for the relief of Erastus Fairbanks and Thaddeus Fairbanks, reported the same without amendment; and

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, and by unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. ANDREW JACKSON, Jr. his secretary, transmitting a communication from the War Department relative to the treaty recently submitted to the Senate made with the Sac and Fox Indians.

Mr. CALHOON gave notice that he would to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill to cede the public lands to the States in which they lie, on equitable provisions.

Mr. EWING of Illinois, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Gad Humphries; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

The bill to amend the act of the last session establishing branches of the United States Mint, was read the third time and passed.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. Franklin, their clerk, stating that the House had appointed the honorable LEVI LINCOLN a teller on their part, under the joint resolution to regulate the mode of counting the votes for President and Vice President of the United States, and that the House was ready to receive the Senate, and to proceed to count the said votes, in conformity with the Constitution, and in pursuance of the said joint resolution.

The Senate then left the Senate Chamber, and proceeded to the House of Representatives, preceded by their Secretary and Sergeant-at-arms.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate having returned from the House of Representatives, the President resumed the chair; when

Mr. GRUNDY, from the joint committee appointed on the subject of counting the votes for President and Vice President, &c. &c. reported the following resolution, in further execution of the duties assigned to them:

Resolved, That a committee of one member be appointed by the Senate to join a committee of two members to be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait on MARTIN VAN BUREN, of New York, and inform him that he has been constitutionally elected by the electors of the several States, President of the United States, for four years from the 4th day of March, 1837.

The resolution was adopted, and Mr. GRUNDY was chosen on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GRUNDY then, on the part of the joint committee submitted the following resolution, which, by unanimous consent, was considered and adopted:

Whereas, upon counting the electoral votes in the presence of the two Houses of Congress, given at the late election for President and Vice President of the United States, it appears that no person has received for the office of Vice President of the United States a majority of the votes of the whole number of electors appointed, and it also appearing that RICHARD M. JOHNSON of Kentucky, and FRANCIS GRANGER of New York, have the highest numbers on the list of those voted for to fill the office of Vice President.

Resolved, That the Senate do now proceed to choose a Vice President from the said RICHARD M. JOHNSON and FRANCIS GRANGER, they having the two highest numbers on the list, and the manner of voting shall be as follows: The Secretary of the Senate shall call the names of Senators in alphabetical order, and each Senator will, when his name is called, name the person for whom he votes; and if a majority of the whole number of Senators shall vote for either the said RICHARD M. JOHNSON or FRANCIS GRANGER, he shall be declared, by the presiding officer of the Senate, constitutionally elected Vice President of the United States for four years, commencing on the 4th day of March next.

In pursuance of the above resolution, the names of the several Senators were called over in alphabetical order, and they voted as follows:

For RICHARD M. JOHNSON of Kentucky—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Lyon, McKean, Moore, Morris, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Parker, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, and Wright—33.

For FRANCIS GRANGER of New York—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, Knight, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Spence, Swift, Tomlinson, Wall, and Webster—16.

The President of the Senate then announced the result as follows:

The whole number of Senators of the United States is	52
Majority necessary to a choice	27
Quorum required by the Constitution	35
Whole number of Senators present and votes	49
Of these—
RICHARD M. JOHNSON of Kentucky received	33
FRANCIS GRANGER of New York	16

From which it appears that RICHARD M. JOHNSON of Kentucky, having the votes of a majority of the whole number of Senators as required by the Constitution of the United States, is duly elected; and I, therefore, declare that RICHARD M. JOHNSON of Kentucky has been chosen by the Senate, in pursuance of the provisions contained in the Constitution, Vice President of the United States for four years, commencing with the 4th day of March next.

Mr. GRUNDY, from the joint committee, submitted a resolution that a committee of three members be appointed to wait on RICHARD M. JOHNSON of Kentucky, and inform him that he has been constitutionally elected by the Senate, Vice President of the United States for four years, commencing with the 4th of March next.

The resolution being adopted, Messrs. GRUNDY, NILES, and ROBINSON were appointed as the committee by the Chair.

The Senate then adjourned.

Errata.—In Mr. Brown's remarks in the Senate, published in yesterday's paper, relative to printing the joint resolutions presented by Mr. BAYARD, on the subject of the expunging resolutions, an error occurred in attributing the allusion by him to "Mr. HARRIS," as having formerly presented certain instructions, &c. instead of "Mr. HILL," the late Senator.

In the report of the proceedings of the Senate in the Globe of yesterday, it is stated that Mr. ROGERS's motion to amend by inserting the words "to the satisfaction of the Register and Receiver," was lost.

This is incorrect, the motion prevailed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 8, 1837.

Mr. WHITTLESEY of Ohio rose and remarked, that as this was the day set apart for the special order, (on the election of President and Vice President of the United States,) he would submit to the judgment of the House whether it would not be expedient to pass over the question of privilege (on the resolution of censure upon Mr. Adams) then under consideration, for the present, and either pass to the orders of the day, and take up the business on the Speaker's table, or give the committees an opportunity of making reports during the morning hour. He hoped this might be done without any special motion to that effect. For himself, he would prefer that the House would consent to the presentation of reports.

The CHAIR remarked, that he had two messages from the President of the United States, and several Executive communications, which would be first in order.

Mr. GHOLSON objected, on the ground, he said, that he was desirous of having the business before the House first disposed of.

The CHAIR did not understand the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, as contemplating an extension of the postponement of the privileged question beyond the morning hour.

Mr. GHOLSON still objecting on the ground above stated, Mr. WHITTLESEY moved a suspension of the rule, for the purpose of submitting a motion to postpone the question of privilege under consideration, till the special order of the day was disposed of.

Mr. GHOLSON asked for the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

The motion to suspend was agreed to, as was also that to postpone the question of privilege, severally without a division.

